Strawberry salad requires very large, firm luscious berries. These are piled six or eight deep in a lettuce cup, made from two leaves taken from the heart of the head, and are either sprinkled lightly with sugar or with a few drops of lemon-juice before a teaspoonful of mayonnaise is put on them.

Testing Balls.

A German has invented a new method of testing the balls for use in ball bearings. The balls are rolled singly down an inclined plane and drop on a steel block, those which rebound over an adjustable gauge in the box being deemed of the right quality for use.

Curious Facts.

It is said that cowbells are produced only in four factories in the United States, and are made just the same as they were 100 years ago, and sound the same. There are 16 sizes.

Notwithstanding the enormous fruit production in America, and in spite of the tarif discouragements, the United States actually import from Europe seven hundred million of oranges a year.

A cord of wood, weighing 4,000lb., will yield 9 gallons of alcohol, 25 gallons of tar, and 85 mushels of charcoal. Wood alcohol is almost a perfect substitute for grain alcohol for mechanical and manufacturing purposes.

It is a common Asiatic custom for the bridegroom to give chase to the bride either on foot, on horse-back, or in a canoe. If the bridegroom catches the fugitive he claims her as his wife, otherwise the match is broken off.

PREDICTS TRIUMPH.

WHAT CRISPI, THE STATESMAN, SAYS OF THE AMERICAN IDEA.

Character of the Man and How He Rose to Power by Persistent Effort—His Energy Has Checked Those Conditions in Italy that Caused the Decay of Spain.

(By Thomas Burke Grant.)

When Spain declared war against the United States there was one among the statesmen of Europe of whose fervid appreciation of America there cannot be the least doubt from the very nature of his utterance. That was Signor Crispi, the man who has checked those conditions in Italy that have caused the decay and degeneracy of Spain.

Crispi said: "The present war is an epoch-making event in the march of human freedom; that the prophecy of De Toqueville is being realized and the institutions of America are revolutionizing those in Europe." Of course to Americans there cannot be anything essentially new in this statement which is nevertheless gratifying. We know it is true in the present instance but the purblind tory of Europe hardly cares yet to admit it. The agrarian noble of Germany who feels the sceptre of power passing from him to the masses of the German people, wants to shut out our American produce. He thus pays unconscious tribute to America in this effort to keep a roof upon the Schloss. The stolid reader of the ponderous articles in the London Times may sneer at the Sunday paper, or at the sensational journalism of America, but under the very shadow of St. Paul's these prevailing features of America are making headway and are gradually converting into back numbers the once leading journals of London. Even the sacred precincts of the peerage are being invaded, and the British duchesses will soon have to form combination in order to exclude the nervy, bouncing, magnetic American girl, who is never more charming than when she dashes down every millewed banner that snobbery and self efficiency have fenced around fashionable exclusiveness.

Yes, Crispi is right, we are for better or worse revolutionizing Europe, and no power on earth can stop the process. To do so is our divinest destiny. It was in order that we should do this that the all-wise Creator of the world placed us in the middle with the civilization of Europe to the East of us, and that of the Orient to the West, our arms like those of Alexander extending into both. America has only to be true to herself and to the precepts of the fathers of the Republic, in order to bring thrones and crowns, and musty constitutions crumbling to her feet. It is greatly to Signor Crispi's credit that he has discovered and what is more that he has conceded to us so manifest a destiny. The statesman who early sees that the Italian statesman is keeping his observation eye in good order, and that he has thoroughly divined the tread of events.

And on the occasion of the first foreign visit that the United States has had in eighty-six years, any such forecast cannot but be regarded as highly flattering to all Americans. It is particularly so from a man like Crispi, whose career is an inspiration and who has taken rank as one almost as an Italian dictator, but a son of

"Those men whose hearts were torches For Freedom's quenchless fire."

As a prophet Crispi has not only the rare distinction of being honored in his own country and in his own time but the greater one of seeing his prophecies invariably been realized. Many years ago when Italy was under the joint tutelage of Austria and France, when her internal divisions were a series of petty duchies like Parma, Modena and Tuscany, and their leader a bomba ruling at Naples, when Mazzini was a political pamphleteer starving on Fulham Road in London and Garibaldi was a guerrilla chief at Caprera; and when all that was rich and right-eous was considered the part of small minds forecasted upon the Italian patriots and their cause, this man who to-day predicts the proud destiny of America, then also forecasted a new and United Italy. He lived too to place the capstone on a structure of brought Italy taking her place as an integer in the Great Triple Alliance.

He has driven out the banditti and foiled every pest against the unity of his native country that was nursed by Princes at their leisure. When others were blind Crispi was wide awake and far seeing. When Mazzini was appealing to Charles Albert in the pathetic words, "Sire, unite us," Crispi saw that union was impossible without a national spirit to sustain it. He therefore set about creating that national spirit by going from town to town as a tramp editor turning up with a paper in Milan, or in Malta, or Palermo; making a most scanty living as a writer or delivering a lecture on a subject on which he felt, and the sound of his voice. The great world did not then as now heed what Crispi said, but Crispi's accuracy and judgment and unwavering self confidence were then manifest features of the character of the man who is now preaching the political regeneration of Italy at night and manufacturing bombs in the daytime.. The wondering Italians, taught from youth to respect orthodoxy whether in politics or religion asked him on some of these occasions, "Are you a follower of Mazzini?" He answered, "No." "Are you a Garibaldian then?" "No more," was the reply. "What are you?" was the last despairing interrogatory of those spokesmen in the crowds who tried to confound the lecturer. "I am Crispi," was the remarkable response. "But Crispi is nobody," they argued. "I

MY NEIGHBOR AS MYSELF.

This Rule Most Generously Observed by a Pennsylvania Man.

Addressing his congregation at one time, Henry Ward Beecher told of a man who had always been lucky, and who bought a farm in Pennsylvania on which he discovered very large oil deposits. Another man, who had worked very hard all his life to save five or six thousand dollars, thought he would buy the adjoining farm and make his fortune in oil also. He purchased it and began to bore, but seemed to strike articles innumerable until his money was all exhausted. Saturday night was coming and his men were clamoring for money, but he had none to give them. They had struck solid rock in their borings, and there was no possibility of the poor man getting capital enough to proceed until he should strike oil. So in this unfortunate extremity he went to his lucky neighbor and told him his pitiable condition; begging him to buy the farm.

"It is all I have," said he, "and it has taken me a lifetime to get the few thousand dollars which I have spent and lost on that farm."

The neighbor protested that he did not want the land; that he had all he needed; but the poor man pressed so hard that he finally succeeded in getting a check for six thousand dollars for his place.

This was Saturday. The unfortunate man was able to pay his workmen, and was happy to be out of the disastrous venture. But the purchaser of the farm requested the men to keep right on boring in the rock, and said he would pay them. Hardly four days had passed before they struck oil in abundance; and, when the former owner of the farm heard of this, it seemed as though he couldn't get to the purchaser of the farm quickly enough, to see if he could buy it again.

"But I told you I did not want it," said the buyer. "You urged me to take it, telling a pitiful story of losing your hard-earned capital. I took it under protest."

But the man pleaded and expostulated, and the buyer finally sold the farm back again for just what he had given.

"Now," said Mr. Beecher, "all in this congregation who would have done the same thing, rise."

MOTOR IN A SCARF PIN.

The smallest electric motor in the world has been built by D. Goodin of McKinney, Texas, who has been as a boy constantly at work and is handling delicate machinery with the exquisite care required in making a motor that moves with all the regularity of a big machine, and yet is so small that its owner wears it as a scarfpin.

The motor is so small that it does not cover a silver dime, and it weighs only 9-100 of an ounce. The armature is about the size of a small slate pencil. The front of the motor is of gold, highly polished, and the commutor segments are also of the same metal so that when worn in a little distance the scarfpin has the appearance of a very valuable and rather curiously designed pin. It is only when standing near to Goodin when he is wearing the scarfpin that its nature can be discovered.

The first step in the making of the machine, which, by means of a current obtained from a small chloride of silver battery carried in the vest pocket, is kept in operation at a high rate of speed, and with a noise like a small nest of humming birds.

The field magnets of the little motor are made of two thicknesses of No. 22 sheet iron scraped down and polished. These are held together with gold screws and wound with No. 20 silk-covered wire. The armature is of the four-pole type and is wound with No. 36 wire.

The little brushes are of marvelous thinness, having been constructed of copper, hammered down with much patience and care. There is a small gold pivot on the shaft, which is made with a pin, to be worn on the lapel of the vest.—New York Herald.

Natural Gas at Waldron.

Natural gas has been discovered in England. That discovery was made at Waldron, in Sussex County, and like the first in America was accidental. Charles Dawson, the geologist, was boring for water. When the lower strata had been bored to a depth of 377 feet work was stopped, a strong smell of gas having been noticed. A light was applied to the top of the long tube of the bore, and a flame immediately sprang up to the height of fifteen or sixteen feet. It burned with great fury until it was put out by means of damp cloths being thrown over the top of the tube. An iron cap has been fitted to the top of the tube, with a vent allowing an escape of gas to take place continuously. This cap and vent have now been used for fifteen months, and the gas can be lit at any time, and shows no signs of diminution. There appears at present to be an ample supply for the lighting of a town, if the necessary plant were erected, and the supply, as far as can be judged, seems to be pretty constant.—Chicago Times-Herald.

ABYSSINIAN CURRENCY.

Salt Bars the Medium of Trade with the People.

For small change they use the amole or bar of salt. This is a block of hard crystallized salt, about ten inches long and 2 1-4 inches in breadth and thickness, slightly tapered toward the end, five go to the dollar at the capital, but its value varies according to the distance it has to be brought from Lake Arral, a salt lake near the entrance to *the Red Sea. People are very particu*lar about this, too; if it does not ring like metal when flicked with the finger nail, or if it is cracked or chipped, they won't take it. It is a token of affection, also, when friends meet, to give each other a lick of their respective amoles, and in this way the material value of the bar is also decreased.

For still smaller change cartridges are used, of which three go to the salt. It does not matter what sort they are, whether "scatter-gun" or rifle cartridges, nor, in the latter case, does it matter whether they are Berdan, Gras, Remington, or any other ammunition. Some sharpers use their cartridges in the ordinary way, and then put in some dust and a dummy bullet to make up the difference, or else they take out the powder and put the bullet in again, so that possibly in the next action the unhappy soldier will find that he has nothing but miss-fires in his belt; but this is such a common fraud that no one takes notice of it, and a bad cartridge seems to serve as readily as a good one.—E. Gleichen, in "With the Mission to Menelek."

On the Edcation of Lions.

When lions were still numerous and easily observed in Southern Africa they were sometimes seen instructing on another in voluntary gymnastics and practicing their leaps, making a bush play the part of the absent game. Moffat tells the story of a lion which had missed a zebra by miscalculating the distance, repeating the jump several times for his own instruction; two of his comrades coming upon him while he was engaged in the exercise, he led them around the rock to show them how matters stood, and then, returning to the starting point, completed the lesson by making a final leap. The animals kept roaring during the whole of the curious scene, "talking to each other," as the native who watched them said. By the aid of individual training of this kind industrious animals become apter as they grow older; old birds, for instance, constructing more artistic nests than young ones, and little mammals like mice becoming more adroit with age. Yet, however ancient in the life of the species these acquisitions may be, they have not the solidity of primordial instincts, and are lost rapidly if not used.—Appleton's Monthly.

A Rare Exception.

Senator Vest has a favorite story which he has told on the occasion of a political speech, but, so far as known, never on the floor of the United States Senate.

"A temperance lecturer was struggling against odds in Kentucky," says the Senator. "He was talking to a not very large audience that had been drawn to the hall by curiosity. The effect of alcohol is to shorten life,' said the lecturer.

"An old man at the rear of the hall rose at that juncture and said, 'You're a liar.'

"'Why?' inquired the advocate of Adam's ale.

"'Because, sir, I've been drinking for seventy-five years, and I'm 90 and am likely to live to be 100. I am strong enough to lick you if you'll step outside.'

"'Oh, no doubt, sir. You're an exception, sir. If you keep on drinking'—the lecturer paused.

"'What?' asked the inpatient old toper.

"'If you keep on drinking you'll have to be shot on judgment day.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Fred Douglass' Compliment to Lincoln.

Fred Douglass told the writer when he came to speak with all his experience he never could entirely rid himself of stage fright. "During the first fifteen minutes when I faced an audience," he said, "my knees will knock together." But when he got fairly going this not uncommon nervousness, which all speakers have sometimes felt, would pass away. He put his points well in every argument, and his eloquence was of a high order. His tribute, in one sentence, to Abraham Lincoln, is an unsurpassed compliment. "Mr. Lincoln," he said, "is the only white man into whose presence I was ever ushered who did not make me feel that I was a negro."—Harper's Magazine.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

One would suppose that among the many gowns included in the summer girl's wardrobe for wheeling and the numerous other sports, one of them at least would be appropriate for golfing and tennis; this, however, is not the case. The up-to-date girl wants a separate and distinct dress for every occasion and the modistes and large establishments take pleasure in supplying their demands.

The costumes designed for golfing differ very little from the bicycle suit, with the exception that the skirt may be worn longer. The fabrics are made of light wool goods for cool days and for wear during the warm weather pique, duck and linen are popular materials. Shirt waists on these occasions are simply indispensable. They are usually made quite plain and of any suitable material, the thin wool goods, however, proving the most desirable, especially in preventing one taking cold. The most attractive part of the golf costume is the coat. This garment is always red and of either flannel or single breasted variety is fashionable, fastening with brass buttons.

Another important item is the hat to be worn on these occasions, and this season shows some very unique styles. The sun-bonnet is a novelty and many girls have adopted them for both golfing and tennis. White dimity or starched muslin are employed in the composition of these quaint bonnets, and they are made with small capes extending down well over the shoulders, thus preventing the hot summer's sun from marring the complexion or the neck, and also forming a very picturesque frame to a youthful face. Many women, however, prefer the regulation Alpine or sailor hat, the sombrero which is now so much in vogue also proving a very popular form of headgear.

The patriotic American girl will undoubtedly be a conspicuous figure in all the summer sports and some very striking gowns, combining the national colors and ornamented with military buttons, army buckles and all the rest of the paraphernalia will be seen. A lovely gown of this description has been designed for an enthusiastic tennis player. The skirt is made of blue linen, cut to escape the ground by about three inches, is finished at the base with a deep band of red lined, headed with a piping of white pique. The blouse of blue linen is worn sailor fashion, with a large collar of red over a plastron and stock of white pique. White pique form the cuffs of the regulation shirt waist sleeve, while brass buttons are employed to fasten the front of the blouse. A red leather belt fastening with an immense army buckle finishes the waist. The hat to be donned with this suit is a simple white sailor, decorated with a band of red, white and blue ribbon. Altogether this forms a very original as well as attractive suit.

Two pretty models recently completed by a fashionable dressmaker for a couple of swell patrons are worthy of description. One in thin blue serge, unlined throughout, has the skirt made in bell shape and is simply faced at the hem with a strip of linen which supports the band of white cloth, decorated with rows of braid. The blouse has an open V neck and may be worn with a full or plaited vest of white or silk. The broad front pleat of white cloth is braided to match the skirt as is also the square sailor collar and small turned-up cuffs. A blue silk scarf ties beneath the collar in a jaunty sailor knot, while a belt and sailor hat completes this suit.

The second costume is especially charming in a combination of white pique combined with red and white striped linen. This suit is also made without a lining. The skirt is cut at the foot of the skirt is put on to form a point in the center. The blouse bodice is single breasted, fastening with one large button and worn over a shirt waist or plastron of silk or cotton. The striped linen forms the stashed revers, the band down the front and the cuffs of the tight fitting leg-o-mutton sleeves. The knickerbocker costume will be worn with this gown.

Unjust Fate of Camden Y. M. C. A.

There must be something very lethargic about the churches of Camden that they should permit the sheriff of that county to attach the property of the Young Men's Christian Association to satisfy a debt of $1,700.

We can imagine some of the good churchmen of Camden believing themselves unjustly censured for not having averted this disaster for the Y. M. C. A. Doubtless they will very piously remark: "Why, my good brethren, that's none of our business. We have got enough to do to attend to the support of 'our' church."

Christian churches are not usually conducted on the narrow plane of simply looking out for what members they have got today. They are stretching out their endeavors to gather in new converts tomorrow, next day and next and so on till Gabriel's trumpet shall blow.

Considering those facts and the further one that the Young Men's Christian Associations are the best feeders for the churches in existence today, the failure of the churches in a city of 80,000 people to prevent the sheriff from proceeding against the one in the way the Camden association was made to suffer, seems very much out of touch with the right condition of things.

The standing and support of the Y. M. C. A. in Plainfield is in happy contrast to the fate of the Camden one. In this city the churches feel that nothing is too good for the Y. M. C. A. They realize that an institution that caters to the better wants of the youth, and almost unconsciously brings them in close communion with the practices of which the church is but a higher and stricter party, is something that well deserves the divided interest of their workers and supporters.

Rules of the Road.

Since the wheel has become so frequent in the city streets, it has necessitated many changes and additions in the principles that are commonly known as the "rules of the road." While a horse and carriage have no difficulty in stopping and standing still in the roadway, it is only an expert wheelman who can perform a similar act on a wheel. It would prevent many accidents and do away with an unlimited amount of profanity if drivers would only glance behind them before stopping suddenly or turning out. In crowded thoroughfares it often happens that wheelmen are compelled to ride closely behind vehicles, and a sudden halt or turn may cause a collision or an unpleasant scare for the rider. There are many Plainfield drivers who seem to have no idea that the wheelman has any rights on the road whatever. Sometime an outraged cyclist may forcibly impress the fact on their minds.

New Political Jobs.

In order to carry out the provisions of the war revenue law Internal Revenue Collector Rutan, whose headquarters are at Newark, has been obliged to increase his force of assistants by several men, and in this way a number of Republican workers in the district have been provided with government positions, though as soon as the rush is over their services will be dispensed with.

George Wilcox, of New Providence, has been selected to look after the Union and Middlesex districts, and Peter V. D. VanDoren for the Somerset district.

All the appointees are Republicans, in explanation of which fact Mr. Rutan says that the party in power claimed the patronage.

The United States, England and Germany are the only countries where army officers are rigidly honest. The financial scandals in Spain, Italy, Austria, Russia and Norway among military circles have been colossal. Grand Duke Nicholas during the Turco-Russian war only escaped Siberia for his robbery of the military chest because he was the emperor's brother.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica on declaring peace have disbanded the larger part of their armies. This looks as if sane and law abiding theories were beginning to find their way into the practice of the turbulent Spanish-American republics.

Recent Railway Statistics.

No measure more surely compasses a nation as a civilized and civilizing factor than its railway development. By this standard as by nearly every other the United States leads the world, even relatively to population, for it is not merely the railroad, but the use of the railroad, which determines the question. In this country not only is the railway mileage vastly the greatest, but the per capita travel far in the van. Aside from the fact that this is a country of cheap rates and vast distances and that businesses closely interlinked are wide apart geographically, the very energy and volatility of Americans impel to a constant use of the steam car.

The railroad system of the United States includes more than 180,000 miles, exceeding the mileage of all Europe and South America combined; being five times that of Germany, five times that of Great Britain, four times that of France, six times that of Russia-Hungary and 12 times that of Russia. Of the continental nations, Spain is of course the most insignificant in its railroad system, and Belgium is the greatest in proportion to area. Australia has 14,000 miles of railroad and Africa 9,500. Within the next five years it is nearly certain, however, that British enterprise will complete a road from Cape Town to Cairo, which will then be the longest in the world, but even excepting the great Transiberian line now being pushed with such energy by the great northern Colossus.

The contrast between the national characteristics of Japan and China is eloquently shown in their railroads. The former country, with about 150,000 square miles of territory and a population of 43,000,000, has a railroad mileage of 2,187, while the Middle Kingdom, with 400,000,000 people and 1,800,000 square miles, has only 124 miles of railroad built, though upward of 1,000 miles is in progress of construction. The ratio of annual travel to the mile of track in Japan is a little more than 30,000, while that in the United States is a little less than 40,000. With this country in the lead, Japan is only second in the world to great Britain. What a startling comment on the energy and enterprise of a people who only began to build iron highways little more than a quarter of a century since!

To Prevent Vandalism.

The busy and aggressive American has been for the most part too active in his affairs to be pleasantly cultivate the spirit of historic reverence. He is apt to underrate the value of the past. It is easy to understand why this should be a dominant feeling in the newer states of the far west, whose past is not linked to stirring historic events. But it is different in the older commonwealths from the Atlantic to the Mississippi valley. Colonial romance, Revolutionary episodes, the French and English struggle and the days of the civil war have strewn most of these states with memories and sites of imperishable interest in our development as a people. Relics of these great episodes are fast disappearing. A turning point in public feeling was created by the establishment of national parks on the great battlegrounds of the civil war. There seems to be a recrudescence of the reverent spirit nowadays. Its latest exhibition is the Society For the Preservation of Scenic and Historic Places and Objects, organized by a number of prominent New Yorkers. It will begin its work by the acquisition and protection of Stony Point, the scene of Mad Anthony Wayne's exploit.

It is to be hoped that similar societies will be formed in at least a score of states, where there would be ample field for their work. A nation does not lose one whit of its energy and mastery over the present by coming the lessons of the past. By this it more surely rises to the conception of our wonderful organic growth.

The "nobility" business requires capital even more than running a corner grocery. Another eminent British peer, the Marquis of Huntley, whose ancestors were among the "biggest toads in the puddle" in Scottish history, has just gone into bankruptcy, with assets of £700 against £190,000 liabilities. It is a pity that he is an elderly bachelor or he might gild his title with ambitious American dollars in the shape of a pretty heiress, merchandise of which there is a large export supply in this country.

The Philippine friars threaten the home government that they will leave the islands unless they are more efficiently protected from the natives. If the current accounts of the lives of the clerical Filipinos are one quarter true, it would be "leaving the country for the country's good." But is there not a begging of the question in the demand? It is not a problem of willingness, but of ability to protect the anxious shavelings.

A French writer, speaking of the Dreyfus scandal, which stinks in the nostrils of civilization, sighs, "There are things so shameful that no government can long tolerate them with impunity." He is wrong. France has long tolerated a thing far more shameful, a barbarous system of criminal procedure which considers any prisoner as guilty until he can prove his innocence, a genuine successor of the Spanish Inquisition.

Microbe Hunting.

The favorite winter amusement of the medical profession, likewise of many other scientific gentlemen, may be said to be microbe hunting, and neither in summer do they relax the pursuit. They have heralded to an admiring world the discovery of the microbe of typhoid fever, of smallpox, of diphtheria, of consumption, of malaria, of yellow fever, likewise of the cattle plague and hog cholera. If any new disease should start up, beyond doubt a hundred men would stand ready to catch the microbe of it in their little microscopes.

'Tis well, perhaps. Mankind cannot know too much of science, but one point in this microbe hunting strikes the plain outsider as odd. Logically, if there are microbes of disease, there must also be microbes of health. There cannot be evil without good; there cannot be darkness without light; there cannot be disease without health. If we are nothing but an aggregation of millions and billions of microbes, then there must be more good microbes than bad ones, or the race would have been extinct long ago.

Why, then, do not the doctors undertake the discovery and propagation of the microbes of health? In the blood of one who is perfectly well there must be beneficent microscopic germ growths that eat up the bad germs and maintain the individual in health. Why has not some scientist who has the good of his fellow man at heart hunted for these, segregated them out and propagated them, inoculating diseased persons with the health cultures? That is what we should like to know. If the opposite can be done, if mankind can be infected with disease through germs, then also is health infectious and people can be inoculated with it. W. J. Colville in one of his lectures calls this disease germ hunting "the cult of satanism." We propose a new style of microbe hunting. Let some expert microscopist search for the microbes of perfect health and cultivate them. Then let physicians inoculate all mankind with them.

Doom of the Small City House.

The doom of the small city house is sealed. It must go. Ground is too precious in the crowded town for one family to have a house to itself. The flat-house is the first departure architecturally from the single home. In the city flat high housekeeping is the vogue. It is still the custom for each household to do its own cooking and domestic work separately.

The next step will be an improvement, and a vast one, on this plan. The coming apartment house will be one in which a number of families, 5, 20 or 50, will be housed luxuriously and have their food supplied from one common kitchen, their clothing renovated from one common laundry. It will be found not only pleasanter, but actually cheaper to have food prepared by trained cooks in the best, most palatable and healthful manner in a common kitchen than to have it messed together in the present slapdash, frequently unwholesome, way. Women who desire to do something else than merely keep house will then be free.

The London Speaker points out one of the most important revolutions which the going out of the small city house will bring in the changed status of domestic service. The women who do housework will no longer live in the family of those whom they serve. They will have their own homes or rooms to which they can retire when their stated hours of work are over. They will not be subject to the whims of temper of unreasonable house mistresses on the one hand nor on the other will they be permitted the impertinence, slatternliness and wastefulness to which they too often are addicted today. They will be under the charge of a central superintendent who will regulate them and their hours like clockwork, when the small separate house and flat kitchen give way to the great central hotel. Speed the day!

The latest good story about Admiral Dewey i how he snubbed Prince Henry of Germ ny at a banquet in Hongkong given by that imperial Teuton. Prince Henry omitted to give a toast to the United States, as required by etiquette, till the tail end of the feast. The proud American left the table with the most marred displeasure and refused to accept an excuse other than a downright apology. The apology was not thrown from the "mailed fist," but Dewey picked it up with lightning promptness.

The noted writer of sea fiction, Mr. Herbert Hamblen, insists that severity in dealing with sailors, the general habit in the American merchant marine, is necessary. As official brutality on shipboard was rigidly suppressed by law a quarter of a century since in England one wonders whether the continued decadence of American shipping interests has anything to do with the belated argument of fist, belaying pin and handspike, still practiced by American skippers and mates.

"Most of the stories sent out from Madrid pertaining to the various repulses of the Americans at Santiago seem to be intended for the marines," says a contemporary. Certainly, however, not for the gallant marines who shed the first blood on Cuban soil and proudly planted Old Glory there for the first time over a camp of American soldiery.

American Sepoys.

The negro race throughout the land has greatly lifted itself in self respect, thrift and intelligence. A genuine note of admiration throughout white society welcomes this splendid progress. Among the elements which have helped this has been the notable military record of this black man. He has fought as well and as patriotically as the white citizen for the country which for a long time was such a cruel stepmother. The negro soldiers of the regular army are among the crack regiments of a service which for its numbers the finest in the world. Possibilities of trouble that we may need this soldiery on a much larger scale. Apropos of this the London Spectator recently said:

"Nothing stops the Americans from raising the negro force to 20,000 men and with them holding the Philippines, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, paying them out of local revenues. With such a garrison those islands would be as safe as drawing rooms and as full of business as Broadway or Strand. Instead of remaining a source of weakness to the Union the negro can be turned by wise and lenient management into an instrument of empire."

Without agreeing with The Spectator that the negro is a source of national weakness in any sense, its comment has suggestive value. Should we conclude to enter on a course of imperial development, as our foreign contemporaries call it, our black troops would be of indispensable value. It is perhaps a misnomer to speak of them in such connection as "sepoys," a name indicative of alien race, religion and traditions. But they would fill the sepoy function in aiding a foreign conquest, speedily under the burning heats of the equator, and be of vastly more use than white troops or native auxiliaries. The negro will certainly be of increased importance as a national factor under such conditions.

An Interesting Decision.

The legality of the action of Confederate courts between 1861 and 1865, specially as regards suits involving commercial and property interests, has in various ways entered into litigation before the United States supreme court, but in no case have the principles been so clearly defined as in one just reviewed by that tribunal which will probably settle the question for all time.

It was an appeal from the decision of the supreme court of Georgia, and the matter at issue related to the rights of a guardian to invest the property of his ward in Confederate bonds, which was done, of course, under the scope of a Confederate statute. The Georgia court released the guardian from liability and Judge Harlan, voicing the majority view of the United States supreme court, affirmed the decision. The final summing it is the following lucid logic:

"Judicial and legislative acts in the respective states composing the so called Confederate states should be respected by the courts if they were not hostile in their purpose or mode of enforcement to the authority of the national government and did not impair the rights of citizens under the constitution."

In other words, the de facto government, where it was the only one existing in a state during the Confederacy, must be held to have been legal in all matters affecting life and property and the administration of equity among the people except in questions directly involved in the war. The court might have harped on the fact that any investment in Confederate bonds was hostile to the interests of the federal government, but it passed over this technicality and decided on broad and generous grounds.

According to Textile America, the coming textile fiber plant is the ramie, from which a great variety of the most important fabrics are beginning to be made. Its utility is alike in the finish and durability of the goods and the cheapness of the raw material. With the Philippines under a new regime of industry and progress we shall perhaps hear something more, too, of the beautiful and durable "pineapple" weave. From the leaves of the pineapple the Filippinos make textiles as lustrous as silk, which wear like iron, and they use them for manifold purposes of ornament and domestic utility.

The spread of liquor drinking to the most abnormal excesses is making a great stir in Norway. The experiment of prohibition there has so far proved ineffective, illicit stills being set up even in back kitchens and drunkenness taking on increased proportion. But a Scandinavian country furnishes no object lesson as to the worth of any special policy in dealing with intemperance. From time immemorial the Norselanders have been the most insatiable topers in Europe.

An article in The Nineteenth Century reviews the growth of the world's armaments. In 1868 the six leading powers of Europe had 4,500,000 men in their armies on a war footing maintained at a cost of $445,000,000 a year. Now the figures are 17,000,000 men and $845,000,000. These statistics are frightful. The only hope is that such ponderous and crushing machinery will ultimately break down by its own weight.

The splendid service which our small force of naval reserves has already done proves the wisdom of its organization. It is a branch of militia greatly to be encouraged and increased.

The Common Sense Route.

The Common Council respected the best kind of public opinion Tuesday when they denied the application of the Plainfield Street Railway Company the right of operating their line on East Second street. It was public opinion manifested in common sense reasoning.

Let us suppose that there is a man standing on the corner of East Fifth and Richmond streets and one on the corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street. Either one of those men, let us say, are qualified to answer a certain question which one of the magnates of the Plainfield Street Railway Company wants information about. The latter, let us again suppose, is standing on North avenue somewhere, and must get the information from either one of those men. From the corner of North avenue it is one block to East Fifth street. From the corner of North avenue to Watchung avenue and East Second street it is five blocks. Common sense teaches you that the street railway magnate would not hesitate for a moment about choosing the man on the corner of Fifth street to ask his question of.

Such being the action that common sense would dictate the individual to take, it applies equally as well to the corporation who can make the same connections in one block that would otherwise take five blocks to do.

Of course, the practical way for the people is not always to be particular way for corporations who are striving to get something very valuable with comparative little outlay to themselves and great inconvenience to someone else

By the payment of a small bonus, the street railway magnates will find no obstacles in the way of securing unqualified consents for the right of way for the one block on Richmond street, between East Fifth street and North avenue, to connect their present Fifth street line with the proposed extension to Scotch Plains over North avenue.

The Council should not permit the street railway company to invade any other streets on which property owners interested object strongly so long as this short and practical way is open for their use.

Robert Rand's Accident.

Robert Rand, of West Front street, wears a bandage around his head today because a heavy sign fell on him Friday and cut a deep gash just above his temple. Mr. Rand undertook to adjust the sign over the doorway of his store when the fastenings broke and it fell.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death. Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving post-office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

A VICIOUS PRISONER.

He Roundsman Flynn and Sent to Jail for Thirty Days.

Pat Gargon, as a dilapidated, wild-eyed hobo called himself, stood before Judge DeMeza Monday morning, charged with assaulting two officers, Sergeant Kiely and Roundsman Flynn. He was indignant at the charge, and so was remanded back to his cell until next morning.

Officer Watson found Gargon wandering around late Sunday night, and being a rough looking man and badly clothed, the officer asked him where he was going. Watson met with a profane exclamation and so locked the man up.

Monday morning Flynn opened Gargon's cell door to inquire his name, and the officer claims that Gargon seized him around the neck and would have choked him had it not been for the opportune arrival of Kiely, who was in the building. Gargon declared that Flynn assaulted him first, so the Judge set his case over until Tuesday, when he gave him thirty days.

Flag Swung to the Breeze.

There was a gathering of friends at the home of Joseph M. Hawkins, of LaGrande avenue, Monday morning. A handsome large American flag, which was made by Mrs. Hawkins' mother, and given to him, was swung to the breeze. The flag, all wrapped up, was hung out on a rope extending from the house to a neighboring tree and then allowed to fall. It was filled with small flags which were kept by the guests as souvenirs.

Gave a Bicycle Party.

Miss Ida Randolph, of Mount Pleasant, gave a bicycle party to a number of the young people of the Seventh-Day Baptist church Saturday evening. The party met at the church and rode there awheel. The rest of the evening was spent in playing games. The young men enjoyed a novel contest in hat trimming

COUNCIL STOPS TROLLEY

A communication was received from George F. White in which he asked the Council to give him an extension of one year to complete the improvement of Sycamore avenue and that his bondsmen be released. The request was granted upon the condition that Mr. White file a bond of $1,000 to complete the work by January 1, 1899.

Resolutions were offered by Mr. Barrows which provides for the laying of stone walks and the setting of curbs where property-owners have not complied with the ordinance.

Another resolution was offered by Mr. Barrows that curbing be set to the grade on Westervelt avenue, Washington avenue and Grant avenue.

Three ordinances were called from the table and adopted on third reading. One related to the repairing of East Ninth street, another designates the streets through which the underground electric light wires are to be placed, and another relates to the licensing of inns and taverns.

The ordinance regarding the care of dogs was called up and brought forth a great deal of discussion. Mr. Hetfield objected to the ordinance. It was finally decided to have one person act as dog catcher. All voted in favor of the ordinance except Mr. Hetfield.

An ordinance which provides for the licensing of shows, entertainments, etc., was called up for the third reading and adopted.

President Baker called for a report from the finance committee. Mr. Van Derwerden being away, Mr. Buckle started to give a report concerning the accounts of Collector Bird. He said he fully expected that the chairman of the committee would be present and then a complete report could be submitted. It was the desire of Mr. Buckle that Mr. Bird's resignation be accepted so that a successor could be elected, but the other Councilmen thought differently. It was stated that Mr. Bird asked that his resignation be accepted after his accounts were audited and his successor elected, and the Councilmen did not like going contrary to that request. It was accepted by Mr. Buckle that Mr. Bird's bondsmen were good and that the resignation could be accepted. It was decided otherwise. It was generally considered that it was not the intention of accepting Mr. Bird's resignation last Tuesday and electing a successor.

This concluded the business for the month and the Council adjourned to meet again the first Monday evening in August.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At a meeting of the Plainfield Independent Gun Club, held June 13th, 1898, the following resolutions of condolence were unanimously adopted on the death of Fredrick Caspar:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in His all-wise providence to remove by death one of our beloved members, brother and friend, Frederick Caspar, one who always took a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of our association; be it

Resolved, That we hereby tender to his bereaved widow and stricken family the assurances of our warmest regard and tender sympathy in their bereavement, under a blow so sudden that our faith in the divine love can say, "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be placed in full upon the minutes of our association, and that a copy be forwarded to the family and to the city papers for publication.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Although it may not be generally known, there is quite a run on the soda fountains in this city for ice cream and plain soda to take home in pails. This custom has become quite prevalent, and one drug store in particular does a good business in this way. Hereafter, when a respectable citizen is seen skulking along the back streets carrying in his hands something that looks suspiciously like a growler, do not judge him harshly, for he may only be carrying home to his family a pail of ice cream soda.

* * * * *

In a recent issue of the News a personal appeared in the Dunellen column stating that two well-known young ladies of that place had been "entertaining Rahway." It is pleasant to hear that such hospitality exists at Dunellen, but we fear that the young ladies in question undertook a task beyond their strength.

* * * * *

Several merchants about town have made a request to the city officials to have the fire alarm whistle blown every evening at 7 o'clock during the summer, so that it will become generally known that that is the hour at which the stores will close. The matter will be laid before the Council.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At a meeting of the Plainfield Geesang and Turn Verein, held June 6th, 1898, the following resolutions of condolence were unanimously adopted on the death of Frederick Caspar:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in His all-wise providence to remove by death one of our beloved members, brother and friend, Frederick Caspar, one who always took a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of our associations; be it

Resolved, That we hereby tender to his bereaved widow and stricken family the assurances of our warmest regard and tender sympathy in their bereavement, under a blow so sudden that our faith in the divine love can say, "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be placed in full upon the minutes of our association, and that a copy be forwarded to the family and to the city papers for publication.

ACCIDENTS OF THE DAY

SMALL CASUALTIES THAT MARRED CELEBRATING THE FOURTH.

Small Boy Threw a Lighted Firecracker Into Powder—Numerous Hurts That Came From Up-raling Cannons.

Henry Brosey, aged 12 years, living on Grove street, met with a painful accident Monday noon. He had been enjoying himself discharging a good-sized cannon, and close by his side was a quantity of powder exposed. A small boy happened along and threw a lighted firecracker at Brosey and the small piece of explosive material landed in the powder igniting it. Brosey's arms were badly burned, as was also his face and head. Half of the hair was burned off his head and he suffered the greatest agony. As soon as neighbors learned what had happened they assisted the boy to his home. Dr. Rushmore was called and is now in attendance. Proper treatment somewhat relieved the boy's sufferings, but it will be sometime before he fully recovers.

While a young son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Farley, of Jackson avenue, was shooting a cannon off Monday, he was badly burned about the hands and face. He received a portion of the charge thus inflicting the injuries. He was treated at home and he will soon recover from the accident.

Thomas Casey, of 951 West Third street, while out riding on his wheel Monday morning, received a sun stroke and was taken to the home of his aunt, Mrs. Martin, West Front street. He was detained there until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when he was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital. He was able to leave the hospital last night and go home.

Monday morning before 8 o'clock John Kanarr, aged 9 years, a resident on West Fourth street, met with an accident that rather spoiled the day for him. He was shooting a cannon off. A small glass bottle stood near and the charge completely demolished the bottle. A piece of the glass entered the calf of the leg. The boy was taken to the hopital and the glass was removed. The boy experienced some pain, but later in the day continued his sport.

Charles Drake, 10 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm Drake, of Richmond street, burned his hand severely Monday. He had some paper caps in his hand, which came in contact with a lighted piece of punk. The skin on the hand was burned off and he suffered great pain.

Three lads, Wm. Summers, Thomas Waring and Henry Roche, all of whom live near the corner of Third and Liberty streets were badly injured in a premature explosion of a cannon Monday morning. The boys had loaded the cannon, but were not ready to touch it off when a spark from a match fell on the loose powder and an explosion followed. Summers' left hand was cut and bruised by flying missles. Waring was struck in the leg and Roche was wounded in the chest.

Last evening between 7 and 8 o'clock lightning struck F. O. Herring's barn on Park avenue. The weather vane and cupola were quite badly damaged and the electric lights in the barn were burned out. Outside of that there was no other damage.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

ONE FIRE ON THE 4TH

AND THAT WAS NOT CAUSED BY PEOPLE CELEBRATING.

Oil Stove Set Fire to Woodwork in a House on South Second Street—A Lively Blaze Last Saturday Afternoon.

A small fire broke out Monday at 6:21 o'clock in a house on South Second street occupied by a family by the name of Brown. An oil stove was being used and the heat therefrom set fire to some woodwork and the studding burned fiercely. The alarm was sent in from Box 47 by Alonzo Ayres with the key from the Pond Tool Works. Although the fire was a small one it was with some difficulty that the department extinguished it. The damage is about $65.

Saturday afternoon last about 5 o'clock Sergeant Kiely and Detective John Large were talking on East Front street near the home of William Rockwell. The Sergeant happened to look up toward the house and noticed that smoke was coming from the upper rooms. He jumped on his wheel and hastened to fire headquarters and informed the firemen. James Bailey started out with the Chief's gig and found Chief Doane not far away. The two went to the house and after the chief saw what the fire was he instructed Bailey to send in an alarm from box 16 corner of Front and Richmond streets. Investigation proved that Mr. Enander, the plumber, was working in the top of the house putting a new covering on the water tank. He was lining the tank with asphaltum and accidentally dropped a lighted candled in the tank. The fire broke out almost immediately and Mr. Enander, in trying to turn on the water in the tank to extinguish the flames, burned his right arm and face badly. His injuries were afterward dressed at Armstrong's drug store. The firemen worked for awhile in thoroughly extinguishing the fire and the damage amounted to about $40. While Sergeant Kiely was on his way to headquarters, Mr. Large entered the house and worked hard in carrying water from the first floor to the top of the house.

When the fire was discovered by the family in the house Mr. Rockwell, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, attempted to leave his bed and help put the fire out. He was too weak however, and he fell prostrate on the floor. He was assisted back to his bed by members of the family.

Education Makes a Strong Country.

The meeting at Trinity Reformed church Sunday eve ing was given up to a service of Christian patriotism. An address was given by State Superintendent of Schools Charles J. Baxter, in which he compared the worth of education in making a nation as seen between the United States and the Phillippines, in the latter country only about thirty-five per cent of the people possessing any kind of education. Mr. Baxter made some telling points, and the address throughout deserved a much larger audience than filled the church, the smallness of which was due to the excessive heat.

The Fifers and Drummers Were Out.

The members of the Independent Fife and Drum Corps went to Clifton Monday to assist in the celebration of Independence Day in that city. They returned this morning. Frank Carver, formerly sergeant in the corps, now a member of the Third Regiment Drum Corps stationed at Fort Hancock, Sandy Hook, was granted a furlough to go with the corps.

Queer Way of Dodging.

William Trust didn't like to get too close to the big fire crackers which were exploding on every side of him early Monday morning. He dodged one, stepped on a cellar door, on Park avenue, and fell. Officer Watson says Billie was drunk and locked him up. City Judge De Mezs suspended sentence on him.

The Twilights' Picnic.

The Twilight Social Club gave another of their grand picnics in the Crescent Rink Monday. About 500 people were present and danced to the strains of Rogers' superb orchestra until 5 o'clock this morning, when all went home declaring that the Twilights were the people to give every body a grand time.

Borough Was Good

Not a single arrest was made in the borough from last Saturday to this morning. The order of the borough was excellent and there were no occasions for arrest. Special Marshal Whitely was on duty yesterday to look after the crowds that passed back and forth, but everybody was quiet and peaceful.

T. Organize a Camp.

Oscar A. Moore, Richard P. McCullough, Robert G. Jeffery and Arthur E. Smith went to Lake Hopatcong yesterday to make plans for a summer camp at that place during August. About thirty young men have signified their willingness to join the camp.

Picnicked on the Raritan.

A number of the young of the Seventh Day Baptist church enjoyed a picnic Monday to the farm of Nathan Randolph, on the banks of the Raritan river, near South Branch. Thirty went by stage early in the morning, returning late at night.

INGLORIOUS ENDING OF A STRONG NINE

Crescents Disband for Reason of Lack of Patronage.

THEY MET DEFEAT AT LAST.

SAD BUT WEAKENED, CRESCENTS WERE BEATEN BY NEW BRUNSAICK.

The Closest Game of the Season Was Played Saturday With the Dreadnaught Athletic Club—Yesterday Morning Was Too Warm to Play, But the Crescents Had an Easy Thing—The End of It All

The people of Plainfield are very particular. They object to riding in stages. It must be trolley cars or else they stay at home. In the spring Benjamin A. Mumford established a baseball diamond at the Crescent Oval. He provided the best team that has ever played before a Plainfield audience. Transportation to the ground was arranged by stages. The Plainfield Crescents played ten games and won them all but one, the last.

The quality of the baseball presented was first-class, the accommodations were good, but the people of Plainfield would not go out to the Crescent Oval. As the most natural thing in the world the Crescents, failing to receive enough support to maintain them, have disbanded Mumford's venture was a failure, and baseball at the Crescent Oval is a thing of the past. The game Saturday afternoon and the two games yesterday were a final trial and the good people of Plainfield were "weighed in the balance and found wanting."

Saturday afternoon saw the closest game of the season. The Dreadnaught Athletic Club sent a formidable array of players out to meet the Crescents who missed Metz and Stevens. The Crescents won by a score of 4 to 3, but it was a very narrow escape. In the sixth inning, the visitors took the lead by a score of 3 to 2 and kept it until the last when the Crescents scored two more by timely batting.

It was too warm to play ball Monday morning. The players sweltered out in the boiling sun, the umpire bemoaned his hard fate and the scorers retreated to the scanty shade of the back stop. The Brooklyn Athletic Association team came out but was easily handled by the Crescents. Neither side could play a swappy game in the terrible heat and so interest dragged.

The Crescents opened the game by hitting Charters freely. Charters has been here before and has been compelled to bear punishment. The fielding of the visitors was not up the usual standard, and their general playing was rather ragged. A half a dozen errors and hits by Collins, Cavanaugh and Vrooma netted five runs in the first inning. In the third, Cooney took first on a fumble by third and came home on Mumford's single. In the next, the visitors scored one run.

In the sixth inning, Collins put in the box to save MacLoughlin for the afternoon game while Mac went to short. Collins was not hit hard but four hits being made off him. Cooney did some wild throwing, and Mac showed a distaste for hot grounders so that the visitors made one in the seventh and three in the eighth. The Crescents managed to add three to their score in these two innings and the game went to the Crescent by a score of 9 to 5.

The detailed score was as follows:—

Monday afternoon saw the first and last defeat of the season for the Crescents. And it was the fault of the people of Plainfield too. Without the necessary support, Manager Mumford was unable to stand the heavy expense of his crack team and had to weaken it by the loss of several of the best men. Then others were absent for other reasons. As a result the Crescents were greatly weakened.

The visiting team was from the New Brunswick Athletic Association, largely composed of the same players that met the Crescents last year on the New Brunswick Y. M. C. A. team. The afternoon was a good one for baseball although a gentle shower came that drove the spectators to cover and cooled off the players.

Both teams scored in the first inning and then began the misery which, however, was decidedly exciting. The New Brunswick boys did not win the game, "Jack" Cooney lost it. Now, Cooney was not the only man to make errors, Ed Erikson made six, but his were the kind that told. He persisted in throwing the ball far over Cavanaugh's head and allowing the base runner, with several who preceded him, to score before the ball could be fielded back. Erikson was called suddenly to take Lederer's place at second. He had had no practice and errors were the inevitable consequence.

The Crescents, that is "Neeley" Collins and the rest of the original team, tried hard and overcame the lead only to lose it again. MacLaughlin pitched a strong game after the first two innings and at no time was hit hard. Errors and plenty of them were the primary feature of the game.

The individual scores were as follows:

ONE OF THE CAPTORS

W. H. LAWRENCE ASSISTED IN DESTRUCTION OF SPANISH FLEET.

He Was On the Armed Yacht Gloucester Whose Exploit Has Been Heralded All Over the Country.

Among the brave men who fought so valiantly on board the U. S. S. "Gloucester," under the command of Lieutenant Commander Wainwright, in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago Sunday, was William H. Lawrence, of Sherman avenue, this city. The story of the great bravery of the little armed yacht, formerly J. P. Morgan's private floating palace, the "Corsair," has been heard from one end of the country to the other. The men who fought with the brave young officer, the last to leave the battleship, "Maine" when she was blown up in Havana Harbor, have all become heroes.

The plucky little "Gloucester" is reported somewhat damaged by the despatches from the newspapermen who were at the scene of the conflict in her unequal contest with the two Spanish torpedo boat destroyers, Morro Castle, and the Spanish cruiser, Viscaya, but there is no report of any of her seamen being killed and wounded.

Another Plainfielder at the Front.

With Company F, Fifth United States Artillery, which sailed from Port Tampa Friday under command of Brigadier General Randolph, was William Ford, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Ford, of 222 East Fourth street, this city. Mr. Ford is a journalist well known in this city. He is 24 years old and five feet ten inches in height.

New Bonding Rooms to Open.

According to a plan which has long been in the minds of some few members of the Reform Club, the reading-rooms in Reform Club Hall will be opened again soon for the accommodation of those who used to frequent the rooms to read the papers and play games. Light refreshments will be on sale, which is a new departure.

Old Glory on North Avenue.

Saturday afternoon the workmen successfully raised the flag pole on the roof of the North avenue railroad station, and floated the American flag for the first time. Station Agent J. A. Haynes furnished the flag, the railroad company the pole. The depot at Elizabethport also floats a flag.

An Informal Dance.

An informal dance was given last Thursday in the Casino by Mrs. Rowland Cox, of West Seventh street, in honor of her guests, Miss Anne McCormick, of Harrisburg, Pa., and Miss Elizabeth Eastman Colgate, of Manchester, N. H. The music was furnished by Elliot of New York.

Stone Crushes Big Toe.

John Seay, who is employed by the city to lay their stone flagging, etc., met with a painful accident Friday. While unloading a heavy stone the cart tipped up, dropping the flagging on his toe. Seay is not working today.

WET TIME FOR PARKS

THEIR DISPLAY OF FIREWORKS COULD NOT BE CARRIED OUT.

In the Morning, However, the New Golf Links and Clubhouse Were Visited and Inspected With Interest.

The Park Club made the Fourth this year a day long to be remembered. A special effort was made to make the day a successful one in every particular, and had it not been for the shower, everything would have gone off according to the programme. As it was, the evening's display of fireworks had to be postponed.

The Fourth of July committee, consisting of Edwin T. Douglass, Edward F. Wilson, Walter M. McGee, William J. Boome and Allen B. Laing, planned something to occupy the attention of the members and their friends morning, afternoon and evening. First, it was a run up to the new golf grounds on Mountain avenue, which are about completed, and were open to inspection. Many members took this advantage of viewing the new grounds close at hand, and a few went completely or partly over the course of nine holes.

The clubhouse will probably be formally opened sometime this month, but must first be hurried to completion. More work is necessary, too, upon the links, before they are in good condition to play. The clubhouse occupies a fine site on the mountainside, back of the Independent Shooting Club's grounds north of Mountain avenue. The entrance to the grounds will be through Hudson's lane, which will make it handy to the trolley. Situated as the house is upon the hillside, it commands a splendid view and enables one to watch the players for some distance around the course. The tee is just at the side of the house, and from that to the first hole is a straight away shot down the hill which can be plainly seen. After one or two more shots the players are lost to view around the woods, which are quite thick behind the clubhouse.

The members of the Park Club are well pleased with the new clubhouse and links, and after investigating things to their hearts' desire went home and returned to the clubhouse at 4 o'clock, when tea was served by Mrs. Edward T. Douglass and Mrs. Walter M. McGee.

They were assisted in receiving by Mrs. VanDeventer, Miss Mabel and Miss Halla VanDeventer, Miss Long, Miss Murphy and Miss Helen Phillips. An hour later the day fireworks were set off. These consisted of a couple of dozen of six-inch Japanese shells, which exploded at a great height, showing pretty pictures and colors.

The reception and dance was well attended. The patronesses were Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. Walter M. McGee, Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Mrs. Edwin T. Douglass, Mrs. L. G. Peck, Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mrs. George P. Dupee, Mrs. Samuel Townsend and Mrs. J. H. Howell.

The clubhouse and grounds were very tastefully decorated with bunting, flags and lanterns, under the supervision of Allen B. Laing. The clubhouse looked very pretty, and there were those who said that it never looked better than last night.

SWITCHBOARD BURNED OUT.

Curious Accident that Happened to Fire-Alarm System.

Monday afternoon in some mysterious manner the fire alarm switchboard at fire department headquarters was completely burned out. It was about four o'clock and the fire gong sounded several single blows. The department was ready to go out, but as no regular alarm was blown, they did not respond. Chief Doane at once went to the battery room and found the place completely filled with smoke. Herbert Chamberlain, of the local telephone company, who looks after the system, was soon on the spot and he soon put the fire out with some water. It was then discovered that the switchboard was burned out. How the thing happened no one is able to tell. A cross with a telephone or electric light would have caused it but so far it cannot be ascertained that such a thing occurred. Chief Doane went to the New York to purchase a new board. In the meantime the service is all right, but the system is not divided by circuits as formerly.

A Country Celebration.

The Fourth was patriotically celebrated at Voehl's summer residence, known as "Sunset Cottage." During the day a ball game was played in which many of the ladies took part and in many cases outclassed the gentlemen. The score at the end of the game was 10 to 7 in favor of the home team and against the Bayonne club. During the evening a display of fireworks was given that could be seen for miles about. Fifty children and grandchildren were present and many invited guests. Dancing whiled the hours away.

Preached to G. A. R. Men.

Twenty-four G. A. R. men attended service in a body at Grace M. E. church Sunday night, and listened to a sermon from the pastor, Rev. G. W. Gridner.

A HALF CENTURY THEY HAVE BEEN MARRIED.

Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Kitchen.

A PLEASANT CELEBRATION.

RELATIVES AND FRIENDS GATHERED AT OLD COUPLE'S HOME.

The Marriage of the Celebrants was Solemnized at Mechanicsville, N. J., Fifty Years Ago—Daughter and Granddaughter Arranged the Event—Names of the Many Guests Assembled.

Last Friday it was just fifty years ago at Mechanicsville, N. J., that Mr. and Mrs. William D. Kitchen were joined together in matrimony, and in honor of the event the golden wedding anniversary was celebrated Friday afternoon and evening at their home in this place. Mrs. George Conover, of Dunellen, a daughter, and Mrs. John Kitchen, of North Plainfield, a granddaughter, arranged the event.

During the afternoon relatives and friends from all parts of New Jersey assembled at the home and bestowed their good wishes on Mr. and Mrs. Kitchen.

Of those present, only one, Herman J. Henry, of Lebanon, was present when Mr. and Mrs. Kitchen were married. The celebrants occupied a place in the parlor, where the golden figures 1848 1898 reminded all of the important years. The house was appropriately decorated. Many costly and useful gifts were received, including a large oil painting from *Charles Dalley, a grandson, of Brook*lyn.

Mr. and Mrs. Kitchen have resided in New Market twenty-two years and have won a warm place in the hearts of their neighbors and friends. The groom is 75 years of age, while his wife is 69 years old. Five grandchildren were present to make the bride and groom happy.

During the afternoon a poem composed by Marion Conover, a granddaughter, was recited by her. Rev. E. S. Jamison, pastor of the Dunellen M. E. church, was present, and his remarks to the bride and groom were very appropriate and thoroughly enjoyed.

Those present to enjoy the festivities were Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Stigers, Harman J. Henry, Lebanon; Mr. and Mrs. John Ramsey, Potterstown; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Swackhammer, Mr. and Mrs. John Swackhammer, East White House; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Henry and son, Mr. and Mrs. George Henry, Somerville; Mr. and Mrs. J. Powelson, Louis Powelson, Frank Powelson, Miss Gussie Colther, Bound Brook; Mr. and Mrs. George Conover, Ida Conover, Mary Conover, Emma Conover, Rev. and Mrs. E. S. Jamison, *Mrs. Ramsey, of Dunellen; Miss Liz*zie Staats, New Brunswick; Miss Ida Mulford, Manasquan; John Dalley, Charles Dalley, A. J. Kitchen, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. L. Nelson, Mrs. Mechlin, of New Market; Mrs. Mary Higgins, Frenchtown; Mrs. Wm. Calvin, Jersey City; Mr. and Mrs. John Kitchen, Wm. Kitchen, Frank Blatz, George DeMezs, of Plainfield.

Keyless Fire Alarm Box.

The new keyless fire alarm box, No. 12, has been installed in front of Harry Werner's clothing store on West Front street. The work was done by Herbert Chamberlain, of the local telephone company. All one has to do to bring out the department is to turn a handle on the outside of the box until the bell sounds inside. The handle must be turned to the right. It will but be well for the person caught fooling with the box or sending in a false alarm.

A Vociferous Colored Preacher.

Last Sunday morning the colored preacher at the Calvary Baptist church, on West Front street, talked so loud that it disturbed Dr. Yerkes, who was preaching in the First Baptist church, opposite. One of the members of the latter church was finally obliged to ask the preacher across the way to make less noise. The disturbance was so annoying that Dr. Yerkes was forced to speak of it while preaching.

Light Month With Delinquents.

At the meeting of the Borough Council Friday the delinquent tax collector reported collections for June to the amount of $306.29. This is the lightest month in collections thus far since the new order of things.

Hurt on North Avenue.

Fred Moffett, a traveling salesman, living on Carlton avenue, was run into by an unknown wheelman while crossing North avenue a few nights ago. The rider struck the other squarely in the stomach, knocking him over and cutting his wrist.

New Borough Teacher.

Miss Stanton, of Raritan, has been engaged to teach Mrs. Neal's class in the Borough Public School next year. Mrs. Neal resigned her position at the close of the school. The other vacancies have not yet been filled.

RARE POTTERY ON VIEW.

CLOISONNE COLLECTION EXHIBITED AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Exhibit Occupies the North Side of the Building, Which Has Been Especially Fitted for the Valuable Articles.

After many months of study and work the cloisonne collection of rare pottery has been put on exhibition in the Public Library. The exhibition occupies the nothern room on the sec*ond floor, which has been undergoing* a long course of preparation to receive it.

The room and the articles on exhibition have been arranged with a true eye to the artistic. The walls on three sides are occupied by cases, handsome ones too, with glass doors, the woodwork being stained and varnished a deep brown. Burlap covers the walls, above the cases, being a light green, and below of a bright red color. Inside the pieces are placed with an accuracy that strikes the eye at once. They were arranged by Miss Emma L. Adams.

The pottery is what is known as the Schoonmaker collection, and is very valuable. Several years ago some of the articles were exposed to view in the art gallery, but not as they now can be seen. After Job Male's death the collection was purchased and plans made to arrange the collection in a systematic manner.

Plans were submitted, and after much consideration, the order was given to Charles Stimpson to put in the cases. More delays followed and it was not until this week that the room was ready for the public.

The exhibition is well worth attending. There are seventy-five pieces, some of them very rare, and all of the most skilled workmanship. Chinese and Japanese vases, cups, placques, dishes and jardinieres predominate, and no piece or set of pieces is puplicated. Each piece is carefully tabled and its history plainly printed on a slip of paper in front of it. This makes it very easy for the visitor to understand what he is looking at.

The southern wing to the library building, which is in course of erection, is being pushed rapidly. The new wing, when completed, will add much valuable space to the new floor room, and will be a much needed improvement. It is the intention of the board of directors to use the new space for the storing of books, and then to divide the present lower floor into reference rooms, reading rooms, rooms for study, etc., making out of the institution an ideal library in every sense of the word.

These plans may not be carried out for want of means, but the work is being pushed on the new addition, and it will be finished as soon as possible.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

"If you need your money for bread don't stop here!" is the unique notice painted in large letters in the barroom window of our hotel. All honor to Landlord Kitchen for his curt notice to those who rob their families to swill rum.—Baptistown Correspondence Lambertville Beacon.

During the beautiful moonlight nights of the past week, there have been several little pilgrimages to the Feltville pond. Swimming there in the daylight offers many attractions to the youth of this city, but swimming by moonlight is particularly attractive to the adventurous ones. The ride awheel to the pond is an easy one, and every evening sees a selected little party en route to the place.

The knowing ones were somewhat surprised that the race meet at Somerville this week did not have by any means as good support as the meet in Plainfield. The fair grounds at Somerville are a mile and a half from the station. Ordinarily the good people of Somerville do not mind the walk, but somehow they did not turn out very well for the races. Perhaps the meet was not largely advertised, but anyhow it was an evident fact that Somerville did not give her support to the horse races as was counted on by the hard workers in the Somerset Driving Club.

A minister in a town not a thousand miles away on a recent Sunday surprised the audience by reading the following announcement from the pulpit: "The regular session of the donkey club will be held as usual at the close of this service. Members will line up just outside the church door, make remarks and stare at the ladies who pass, as is their custom. Any member known to escort a young lady to church like a man and sit with her like a gentleman, will be promptly expelled from membership." This application was to the point, and the effect was marvellous.—Sussex Independent.

Sealed bids are invited by the Borough Board of Education for $20,000 worth of 4 per cent. bonds on or before July 15th.

DEANEY MUCH WANTED.

ACCUSED OF A HALF-DOZEN ROBBERIES IN AND ABOUT NEWARK.

Identified in Jail by a Little Girl Who Saw Him in Newark Entering a House In Which He Stole $700 Worth.

Edward Deaney, the sneak thief, who was detected in the act of looting the home of W. C. Smith, Jr., of Watchung avenue, Wednesday of last week, and was afterwards arrested after a thrilling chase in which Chief Marshal Wilson and a number of citizens participated, is a very much wanted man in Newark.

As soon as the report of Deaney's arrest reached Newark, Acting Captain of Detectives Cosgrove thought he was a man very much wanted there. The description given in the papers corresponded with that of a man who had been extensively working a skeleton-key game there.

Captain Cosgrove sent Detectives Murphy and Christie to Somerville with people whose houses had been entered, to identify Deaney if possible. The detectives went to the jail first, and were sure it was their man.

But the prisoner suspected what was up, and Wednesday night he secured a spoon and, by sharpening it on the stones, managed to shave his moustache off. He hoped to escape identification.

When placed in line with a number of other prisoners a little girl, who lives near M S. Wood, of 242 Sixth avenue, whose house was robbed June 16th, and who saw a stranger go in, at once picked Deaney out.

"That's the man," she said, "but he's shaved his moustache off."

The girl claims to have seen the prisoner enter the Wood residence. About $700 worth of jewelry and silverware was stolen.

Other residences which are supposed to have been robbed by Deaney are those of George McCulla, 214 North Sixth street, entered May 17th; J. E. Chedister, 81 Twelfth street, entered April 6th; Charles Coffin, 56 North Ninth street, entered May 17th, and Julius Metz, 57 Ninth avenue, June 16th.

A recent attempted robbery in Arlington, when the thief was chased by a crowd of men, is also alleged against the prisoner.

RIGHT OF OWNERSHIP.

Jury in Justice Nash's Court Decides in Mrs. Gwynette's Favor.

Mrs. Annie Gwynette, of Prospect avenue, called a jury in Justice Nash's court, to decide whether he owned certain goods and chattels in her house which Constable Rockafellow levied upon at the instigation of Theokore J. F. Zeller. Zeller's claim was for about $130, and the levy covered goods amounting to $1,000. Rockafellow explained that he levied on such a large quantity of goods because Mr. Gwynette told him there was a chattel mortgage on them.

The jury men were William B Ayres, O. Ross, G. A. Dufford, J. Cash, J. Allen and Samuel Boss. After being out a few minutes, they returned with a verdict for Mrs. Gwynett. Mrs. Gwynett was represented by R. M. Clark and Zeller's counsel was Clarence Murphy.

Fractured His Collar Bone.

Robert Toney, coachman for E. H. Van Buren, of Central avenue, was brought to the hospital Friday evening about 11 o'clock suffering with a fracture of the collar bone and a lacerated wound of the face, the result of a bicycle accident. Mr. Toney was riding his wheel through Fanwood and in turning out to escape running into a party of women he ran into a heavy farm wagon. He managed to reach the Fanwood railroad station and came to Plainfield on a train. He is receiving proper treatment at the hospital and his injuries are not considered at all serious.

Glaser Refuses to Fight.

Theodore Glaser, who pleaded not guilty to violating the health ordinance and keeping an unhealthy fat-house back of East Front street, when arraigned before Judge DeMeza two weeks ago, appeared in court Saturday and asked leave to change his plea to one of non vult. Permission was granted and sentence deferred for two weeks. Attorney William G. DeMezs was Glaser's counsel.

Was in Madrid During the War.

Arthur H. Serrell, of Myrtle avenue, has just returned from Europe, where he has been spending several months as the representative of a large American engineering concern. He was in Madrid until two weeks before war was declared and afterwards visited the capital of Spain while the war was in progress. Although aversion to Americans was very strong, there was no demonstration against him.

Unlucky Thirteen Rats.

Randolph Marsh, of Plainfield avenue, has been troubled of late by the inroads of some four footed invader in his chicken house. The unbidden guest has played havoc among the small chicks. Saturday morning, Mr. Marsh's son, Grover, opened a campaign against the invaders. During the early morning hours, he trapped thirteen rats, some of them remarkably large.

SMALL AFFAIRS OF THE LOCAL CANADA.

Borough Council Transacts Business in Sweltering Heat.

POWER FOR THE COLLECTOR

AUTHORIZED TO STRIKE HOPELESS DELINQUENTS OFF THE BOOKS.

Assurances That the Work of Macadamizing Summit Avenue Will Soon be Started—New Bicycle for Chief Wilson—An Objection to the Extra Charge Made by Engineer Hubbard.

The high temperature Friday had a depressing effect on the business transacted at the regular July meeting of the Borough Council. Ice water and fans assisted a little in keeping down the temperature of the Mayor and Council to normal. The clerk's report showed a balance of $897.83 in cash and a balance on hand of $4,098.-73. The sum of $3,130 90 was paid county and State. Collector Brown's report showed that the sum of $1,005.86 was collected during the month of June, and there is now a balance in bank of $3,152.60.

A communication was received from Collector Brown in which he stated that he had settled a sidewalk assessment of $87 against the Susan Campbell estate for $63. He also asked the Council to adjust the tax assessment against Mrs. A. J. VanDeventer, so that the amount for the years of 1896 and 1897 would be $6,000. There was $7,500 for 1896 and $5,500 for 1897 against the property, which had not been paid, but would be if the amounts were made alike for both years. The Council confirmed Mr. Brown's action in the settlement of the assessment on the Campbell estate and complied with Mr. Brown's request in the other matter. They also agreed to give the collector authority to mark off such taxpayers from the list where it appears there is no hope of getting the back taxes.

Regarding the macadamizing of Summit avenue, a petition was re*ceived from the property owners stat*ing that they are willing to pay their share for the work which will be about $200. Mr. Woolston stated that the sum of $114 had been thoroughly expended on the owners and that they had agreed to raise the balance. The work will be started very soon.

Mr. Woolston, for the street committee, reported that $506 18 had been expended on the streets during the past month, which included the laying of crosswalks and two catch basins on Sycamore avenue.

In reference to vacations for the marshals Chief Wilson was asked about the matter. He stated that last year he received two weeks' vacation and the other marshals one week. It was agreed that the same rule should be adopted this year and the chief was given authority to arrange the time for the vacations. Another matter introduced by the Mayor was that regarding a bicycle for Chief Wilson. He said that the officer bought a wheel three years ago and had worn it out in the service. He therefore thought the Council should buy him a new wheel.

Mr. Rogers offered a resolution that $50 be appropriated for the purchase of a Spalding wheel for the chief.

The resolution offered by Mr. Rogers prevailed.

Engineer MacLoughlin noticed in the bill rendered by Borough Engineer Hubbard an item of $10.25 for copying a blue print map for the borough. He objected to the bill and asked that it be stricken from the whole bill, as he thought Mr. Hubbard was getting a sufficient salary to do the work for the amount he receives.

Mr. Woolston said that he had told Mr. Hubbard that he would receive $10 25 for the work. The borough needs the map and has constant use for it. Mr. Rogers and Mr. Vallett agreed with Mr. MacLoughlin that Mr. Hubbard should do the work for his salary. It is not so much the amount of the bill as the principle they objected to. It was finally agreed that the amount should be eliminated from the general bill and that an effort be made to have Mr. Hubbard withdraw the same.

On the suggestion offered by Mr. Rogers, the Mayor appointed Messrs. Rogers, Burtis and Woolston a committee to confer with the Board of Trade of Plainfield regarding a future water supply for both city and borough, as suggested by the board at a recent meeting.

A resolution offered by Mr. Burtis provided for the payment of $400 to Borough Counsel C. A. Reed as extra compensation for work performed in looking after the interests of the borough in the litigation now pending regarding the Watchung avenue assessments. This amount will come out of the borough fund.

After Mr. MacLoughlin offered a resolution providing for the remittance of several amounts from the tax list, and a resolution offered by Mr. Burtis negotiating a loan of $1,200, chargeable to the borough account, the Council adjourned.

EAST SECOND STREET FIGHTS THE TROLLEY.

Residents Don't Want a Street Railway Invasion.

SAY STREET IS TOO NARROW.

A NUMBER OF PROPERTY OWNERS HEARD BY THE COUNCIL.

Street Railway Officials Say That It Is the Only Route They Can Get—They Offer to Macadamize the Street from Curb to Curb—Consents were Filed and Hearing Resumed Tuesday.

The chief topic of interest at the adjourned meeting of the City Council Thursday was the proposed extension of the Plainfield Street Railway through East Second street. As was to be expected there were a great many of the property-owners on the street present as objectors to the extension. They were championed by their counsel, Lawyer W. A. Codington, who is a resident of the street. On a motion offered by Mr. Barrows the regular order of business was suspended and the extension was argued pro and con.

L. W. Serrell, for the Plainfield Street Railway Company, was the first speaker, and he stated that both Mr. Elker and Nevins, of the company, expected to be present, but were unavoidably detained. He then went on to state that sometime ago an effort was made to locate a trolley line on East Second street, but the owners along that street objected, and an effort was then made to go up East Front street This scheme failed and then the trolley people directed their efforts to East Second street again. A majority of the consents of the owners were obtained as required by law, and the company would therefore like to have a franchise to locate a trolley on that street.

Mr. Codington, for the objectors, asked Mr. Serrell if the consents had been filed. Mr. Serrell replied in the negative. Mr. Codington then presented a remonstrance signed by nearly all of the property owners on the street between Watchung avenue and Richmond street. The petition cited a number of objections to the trolley, among which were that the trolley would depreciate the value of property, the street is too narrow and would impede the progress of the fire department when called to fires. J. B. Joward presented a remonstrance against the location of the trolley on Richmond street, between Fifth and Second streets, but when Mr. Barrows informed him that the company had not secured the consents for that street the remonstrance was withdrawn.

Remarks against the trolley being located on East Second street were then made by U. B. Crane, George Griffin, A. E. Bushnell, W. A. Woodruff and Thomas Hughes. Each one cited the objections set forth in the remonstrance and argued against the trolley very strongly. The chief objection seemed to be that the street is too narrow and that it would ruin the thoroughfare.

Mr. Serrell presented a number of facts in connection with the narrow streets used in New York and Philadelphia where trolley tracks are laid and no trouble is now experienced. In reply to this Mr. Codington stated that Plainfield is a small city, while the places mentioned are big cities and the streets mentioned are in the business part of the cities.

At this time Mr. Serrell presented a petition from nearly all of the leading merchants of the city asking that a trolley be located on East Second street, and they set forth the advantages to be derived in trade from the suburban districts.

In reply to this Mr. Codington stated that he was informed that not one of the merchants whose names appeared on the petition lived on East Second street or owned property there and they don't care how much it damages the street.

Mr. Serrell stated that the trolley has to come in somewhere, and that it was thought advisable to use Second street, but as an extra inducement it had agreed to macadamize the street from curb to curb. He stated further that a majority of the signatures have been obtained and that H. C. VanEmburgh's report on the same was in his possession.

At this time Mr. Barrows took the floor and made a few remarks. He stated that if he had his way personally he would not favor a single trolley in Plainfield. He thought that every commuter was opposed to it, as it ruins the streets for driving, but, continuing, he said, the merchants want the trolley, and the status of the petition for the trolley had to be considered by the Council. He said that the trolley had ruined West Front street and he did not favor the location of it on East Front street.

Mr. Hetfield asked if the consents for East Second street had been filed with the clerk. He was told that they have not, and he replied that he would like to see such consents and a map filed.

This part of the meeting was concluded after a few more remarks had been made by Mr. Newman, Joseph Robinson and U. B. Crane, relative to the sprinkling of the streets and the macadamizing of the same. A motion was then made that the hearing be adjourned until Tuesday evening, July 5th. This motion was adopted with an amendment that the consents and a map for East Second street be filed at once.

The regular order of business was then taken up and a petition was received from the residents of Sandford avenue asking that that street be macadamized. Mr. Barrows stated that the work had been started.

The resignation of Collector E. H. Bird was received. It will be accepted after the accounts are audited by the finance committee and his successor is appointed.

TRAGIC TALK WAS HEARD

NEIGHBORS CARRY A QUARREL INTO THE CITY COURT.

One Woman Says Another Prayed on Her Knees for the Curse of Heaven to Fall on the Former and Her Children.

Because Mrs. William Leitheusser, of East Second street, wrote a letter to the Board of Health, complaining about the fearful odor that arose from the cow stable and refuse heap of Mrs. Mary Kiederling, a neighbor, Mrs. Kiederling and her mother, Mrs. Carey, have made no end of trouble for the Leitheussers, which ended in Mrs. Leitheusser making a complaint against them before the City Judge. They were given a preliminary hearing Friday morning, and then the case was laid over until an investigation can be made."

Kiederling himself seemed to think that since he had been given permission by the Board of Health to keep cows, no one had a right to complain. This illusion the Judge soon dispelled.

Mrs. Cary declared that Mrs. Leitheusser's statement was "perjury in the first degree," and Kiederling said that he would see the end of this business if it cost him $500 Mrs. Leitheusser accused the other two women with calling her names and said that Mrs. Kiederling came, and kneeling down on the pavement in front of her, called down heaven's curse upon her and her children. Such a hubbub of women's voices, all talking at once, was seldom heard in the little court room.

AN EXCITING RUN-WAY.

Wagon Caught to an Electric Light Pole and Horse Stopped.

A horse owned by John Becker, Jr., of Somerset street, caused an exciting runaway Thursday at the corner of Greenbrook road and Somerset street. The animal was tied inside of a yard while the owner was gathering some cut grass. The horse became frightened and broke away, running at top speed for several blocks. Joseph Gavin attempted to stop the horse and he held on as long as possible, but was finally obliged to let go. The animal ran through Grove street from Greenbrook road to the corner of Watchung avenue, where it was caught to an electric light pole near Herman Deike's bakery This brought the runaway stead to a standstill and he was caught at that point. The harness was badly damaged and the wagon was also wrecked.

Dr. Hedges Honored.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey Medical Society was held in Asbury Park Thursday. Dr. C. B. F. Fisher, of Bound Brook, was elected president. Dr. E. W. Hedges of this city, was chosen a member of the executive committee.

The Health of the Hair is indicated by its condition. When the natural secretions decrease; when the hair becomes dry, splits at the ends and comes out in combing; when the glass disappears and the hair becomes gray or faded, the ill health of the hair is indicated. The success of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is due to the fact that it restores the hair-producing organs to their natural vigor. It encourages and promotes the secretions of the hair follicles, and thus gray or faded hair regains its original color, new growth begins, and lost lustre is restored.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for fifteen years. It caused the hair to keep its natural color and is a positive cure for baldness."—E. B. WEYANT, Weyant, Pa.

FOR SOLDIERS TO WEAR.

REVOLUTIONARY DAUGHTERS MAKE 600 CHOLERA BANDS.

Over $80 Worth of Flannel Used by Continental Chapter—The Bands Have Been Forwarded to Fortress Monroe.

In response to an urgent appeal from Washington to the Continental Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, for "cholera bands" for the soldiers, a large box containing nearly 600 was forwarded Friday by express to Fortress Monroe to be shipped on the steamship Yale that is to sail next week direct to Santiago. Over $80 worth of flannel has been used in making these bands. One piece was made up and paid for by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Mayor Fisk and H. M. Stockton kindly gave two pieces of flannel. Assurance has been given that it is the surgeon-general's desire that every soldier should be furnished with these bands, and the order to treat them will be enforced by the army surgeons.

Four thousand are to be sent on the same steamer by the ladies in Washington, and many more are needed.

TO FURNISH NEW CLUBHOUSE.

A successful entertainment, given to raise funds for the furnishing of the new clubhouse of the Young Women's Club on Madison avenue, was held in the hall of the Plainfield Camera Club Thursday. An appreciative audience listened and heartily applauded the different numbers.

The programme included two glees by five boys from the Grace church choir, Reginald Chandor, Harry Mossersmith, Linn Adams, Raymond Cohen and Ray Bigelow, Miss Mary Collier acted as accompanist. Then there were two vocal solos by Mr. Moran, another solo by Herbert Schutt, of the Grace church choir, and a series of Delsarte poses and recitations by Miss Mary A. Luckey. Miss Luckey was particularly good in her portion of the programme, giving the recitations very effectively.

There were also a number of views from a stereopticon under the charge of J. Hervey Doane. They included local views and others of a patriotic nature.

The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. L. H. Bigelow, Jr., Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, Miss Horold, Mrs. J. W. Johnson and Mrs. C. C. Young.

BROOK CARSON WON.

Central Railroad Must Pay Price of a New Boiler for Injuring an Old One.

A railroad company is a hard article to beat, but the New Jersey Central Railroad has finally been beaten to a standstill in the Brook Carson case. Mr. Carson bought a second-hand boiler in Jersey City last summer at auction for $5. When it arrived in Plainfield, it was found to be broken. He accordingly consulted his lawyer, Counsellor W. S. Angleman, and brought suit against the company for damages. Justice Moffet gave judgment for Mr Carson, and the company appealed.

Mr. Angleman secured a dismissal of the appeal, and the company promptly made application for a reinstatement of the case, which was granted upon payment of costs. The case was finally tried June 29th at Elizabeth before Judge Vail of the Common Pleas Court. Mr. Carson was again successful, and the court rendered judgment against the railroad company for $140, which is the price of a new boiler. John L. Conover and Charles Darvin conducted the case for the company, and Counsellor Angleman represent Mr. Carson.

TO HELP IN FRESH AIR WORK.

Park Avenue Baptist Christian Endeavorers Lay Plans.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Park Avenue Baptist church Christian Endeavor Society was held last Thursday at the home of Miss Florence Hawkins, of La Grande avenue. There was a very large attendance and the meeting was interesting and profitable. Mr. W. S. Lowry, president of the society, presided. The members decided to suspend the monthly business meetings until the first Tuesday in September.

Regarding the work for the Westfield Fresh Air Camp, the members of the Park Avenue Baptist church and society will take an active interest, both financially and in aiding with the devotional work. In the local fresh air work, a special committee will be appointed by the president, to provide homes in the Park Avenue society and church for the girls from New York for a period of a week or ten days.

It was announced that the profits of the recent festival held at the church were $20, and this amount will be given to the church.

To Erect a Gospel Tent.

Two gentlemen from out of town were looking about for a suitable place where they could erect a tent in which to hold gospel services this summer. They seemed pleased with the vacant lot across from the Rink, on Watchung avenue, and may locate there.

WHITENACK OUT, TOO

DECLINES TO STAY IN THE POST-OFFICE NOW TO RETIRE LATER.

Understood That Postmaster Bird Told Him That Eventually he Would be Succeeded by a Republican.

John Whitenack, who for fourteen *years has been employed in the Plain*field postoffice, resigned his position of deputy postmaster Thursday when Postmaster Hetfield retired and turned over the office to the newly-appointed postmaster, E. H Bird.

It was expected that Mr. Whitenack would remain at the office for the present at least, but he decided to retire. A new assistant has not yet been appointed, but Mr. Bird will probably appoint his assistant in a short time.

Mr. Bird is temporarily looking after the office of collector until a new man is appointed. This is due to the fact that the Council did not accept his resignation last Thursday. Many think the Council should have done so for Mr. Bird's bondsmen stand good for any discrepancies that might appear, and that is not at all likely. The bondsmen are not relieved until a resolution is passed to that effect by the Council.

It is understood that a few days ago Postmaster Bird told Mr. Whitenack that his place as deputy would be eventually filled by someone else, presumably a Republican. Mr. Whitenack *is a stalwart Democrat. He de*cided not to remain in office under these conditions.

WELCOMED PASTOR AND WIFE.

A Pleasant Reception Given to Mr. and Mrs. W. C. O'Donnell.

A pleasant event in the history of Monroe Avenue church was the reception given there Thursday to Rev. W. C. O'Donnell and his bride by the members and friends of the church. It was a genuine welcome to the pastor and his wife, and everyone joined heartily in congratulating the popular couple and saying lots of pleasant things to make them feel assured that they have a warm place in the hearts of all. The church and Epworth house were prettily decorated for the occasion with flowers and flags. The affair was in charge of the women of the church and they were very successful. During the evening some excellent music was furnished which helped materially in making the reception an enjoyable one. Another delightful feature was the serving of ice cream. This proved to be the right thing in the right place.

CUBAN SUPPER.

Mt. Zion A. M. E. Church Society Raise Funds for Their Church.

The Mt. Zion A. M. E. church, on West Fourth street, looked very gay and bright Thursday at the Cuban supper which was given for the benefit of the church. "Aunt Debby," the Cuban cook, stood behind the principal table, and had charge of the supper which was served to all.

A programme of music was first given, consisting of piano and vocal solos by Frederick White, vocal solos by Miss Berth Groves and Miss Minnie Dunham, and a rainbow drill by fourteen little folks, seven boys and seven girls.

The committee in charge consisted of Mrs Saide Randolph, who was the Cuban cook; Miss Bertha Groves, Miss Hattie Langford, Frederick White and Frank Kelso.

PICNICED BY THE MOONLIGHT.

The Seventh-day Baptist Young People Gathered on the Mountain.

A moonlight picnic on the mountain side was enjoyed by twenty-five young people of the Seventh day Baptist church Thursday. The affair was gotten up by Miss Ida Spicer, of West Fifth street, in honor of her guest, Miss Watts, of Newark. A. J. Spicer conveyed the provisions to the scene of the picnic in his wagon, while the young women went early by the trolley to arrange the spread. They met at the "Lookout" just beyond the Mountain Park Inn. The young men followed later. A delightful supper was enjoyed, and then the remainder of the evening was spent very pleasantly on the mountain, the return being made in time to catch the last car. There were twenty-five in the party.

Pastor Johnson's Guests.

*The members of the Fillmore Bap*tist church, of Sycamore street, gave a "Father" sociable Thursday to their pastor, Rev. W. D. Johnson, at his home on West Third street. The members came in upon him in overwhelming numbers and passed a very pleasant evening. An admission fee of five cents was charged, and a total of $7.50 was raised which was given to the pastor.

To Set Aside Mortgage.

Craig A. Marsh and W. R. Codington were Thursday engaged in trying the case of Hart against Hart, before Vice Chancellor Reed at Trenton. A. V. Schenck and L. E. Hart represented the defendant. The suit was brought to set aside some mortgages given in the conveyance of property, and the plaintiffs claimed that undue influence was used in the transfer.

SERVED ON THE LAWN.

SUCCESSFUL FESTIVAL GIVEN BY METHODIST SOCIETIES.

Affair Held at the Home of Mrs. N. W. Pike—Proceeds for Benefit of Missions—Those Who Had Charge.

The lawn festival which was postponed from Tuesday was held yesterday afternoon and evening on the lawn of Mrs. N. W. Pike, 406 East Front street. The affair was given under the auspices of the Women's Home Missionary Society and the Young Ladies' Circle of the First Methodist church, and the proceeds, which were divided equally, went to swell their mission fund.

The lawn looked very pretty with a display of Chinese lanterns, flags and bunting, and when the lanterns were lighted at night the grounds wore a holiday appearance. Ice cream, cake, candy and fruit were for sale. Mrs. C. H. Bugg was chairman of the party, and the members of both the Woman's Society and the Young Ladies Circle assisted in waiting upon the tables and serving the customers.

Mrs. John Lewis was in charge of the cake table, assisted by Mrs. G. Q. Packer; Miss Lillie Chandler looked after the fruit and candy; Miss Mattie Hummer sold lemonade, and Mrs. I. V. McVoy and Mrs. H. Templin the ice cream.

Tuesday afternoon the last meeting of the Home Missionary Society was held until the fourth Tuesday in September.

CYCLISTS' GOOD TIME.

Y. M. C. A. Boys Entertained Forty-one at Their Building.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. boys had a chance to entertain the visiting wheelmen Thursday. They made a merry evening of it. They have been so well treated wherever they went that Physical Director Heywood decided to make last evening's event a well remembered one. The weather seemed to be with the boys, for a finer night no one could want, but for some unknown reason only forty-one out of town men responded to the roll call, although there was a goodly sprinkling of our own men.

Summit sent four, Orange nine, Somerville seven, Montclair two, Newark twelve and Rahway seven. They began to arrive at nine o'clock and were first treated to a bath in the swimming pool, then hurried up stairs to the large hall where they were entertained by Edward Martin's colored quartette, colored whistler, banjo, mandolin and guitar players. Gramophone selections, under the charge of Charles Hayes, and a piano solo by Fred MacDopald, were given.

Austin Hankinson wound up the programme with an exhibition of violin playing in almost every conceivable position, holding the bow between his knees, in his teeth, playing from behind his back, etc. Ice cold lemonade, grape juice, sandwiches and cake were served before the boys left.

FUNERAL OF MRS. LONG.

Last Sad Rites at the Bier of Mrs. Jacob Long.

The funeral of Mrs. Jacob Long was held Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from her late residence, 52 Craig place. The funeral was a large one and was attended by friends and relatives from Washington, N. J., Phillipsburg, Asbury, Somerville, Brooklyn, Newark, Morristown and Martinsville. Interment was in Hillside.

Mrs. Long was a faithful member of the Methodist church at Mt. Horeb, but since her residence in this city, had been too ill to attach herself to any church. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., a warm friend of the deceased, officiated at the service. Two beautiful solos, old hymns that the deceased loved, was effectively sung by Elmer E. Runyon.

The pall bearers were her four sons, William H. Long, of Somerville; J. B. B. Long, of Martinsville; Jacob Long, Jr., of Orange county, N. Y., and Monroe B. Long, M. D., of this city.

EXPECTS TO GET TWO YEARS.

Downey, the Sneak Thief, is Visited by His Wife.

Edward Downey, the sneak thief arrested in the borough last Tuesday, and who is now confined in the Somerset county jail, has been identified as a celebrated crook by Detectives Murphy and Christie, of Newark. Downey is wanted in that city on several charges of theft. His wife called at the jail June 30th to see her husband and told him she had better go home and sell everything that belonged to them, as he is sure that he will get at least two years. It is impossible to learn at present where Downey's home is, as neither he nor his wife will tell.

Queen City Elects.

At the last meeting of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F. officers were elected as follows: Noble grand, Floyd Fuller; vice grand, J. B. Brown; corresponding secretary, R. J. Neal. Other officers will be appointed by the noble grand at the installation which occurs in July. The lodge will not meet next Monday night, on account of its being the Fourth.

CAMEL-BACK DERAILED.

CENTRAL TRACKS AT FANWOOD BLOCKED FOR SEVERAL HOURS.

Switch Was Not Thrown Close Enough and the Ponderous Locomotive Left the Rails and Caused Much Trouble.

Two tracks on the Central Railroad were blocked at this place June 30 th for several hours as the result of the jumping of the track by one of the big "camel-back" locomotives.

Engine No. 350, engineer Albert Brayman, of Bayonne, was attached to a train of a hundred loaded coal cars bound from Penobscot, Pa., to Jersey City. The train was in charge of Conductor George Belp, of Bay one.

At Fanwood the train was to take the siding and slowed down for that purpose. The switch was thrown over but not far enough, so when the ponderous engine passed over it it left the rails and started off on its own account. Before it could be stopped all of the wheels had left the track and the locomotive stood across the two eastbound tracks. This was at 6:30 o'clock.

The wrecking train from Elizabethport arrived at 8 o'clock and after two hours' labor succeeded in clearing the tracks. In the meantime all coal and freight traffic was delayed, while the passenger trains were switched over on the westbound tracks to pass the obstacle.

A NEIGHBORHOOD DISTURBANCE.

Jim Donohue is a Complainant and a Defendant in Court.

James Donohue and his neighbors, Charles Rothenhausen and wife, cannot live peaceably together. Both families occupy the house situated at 158 East Front street, and because one tenant's clothes line hangs over the other's back yard fence a little, the other tears it down.

That is what happened a few days ago, and then Donohue swore out a complaint against Mrs. Rothenhausen. She retaliated by making a complaint against him. Then Donohue found something amiss in Charles Rothenhausen's conduct, and the result was another complaint.

All three cases were tried Saturday in the city court. It proved to be a quarrel begun several years ago, and of such bitterness and fierceness that Judge DeMeza wouldn't stop to settle it, but warned all parties hereafter to keep the peace.

EMBRYO ARTISTS RELEASED.

Boys Who Defaced Walls Said They Drew Pictures of Cubans.

Alexander Boyd, James McGauley, Bert Smith and Allen Fulmer, the four lads who were arraigned before City Judge DeMeza Friday on a charge of marking up the white walls of a new house in the course of construction on the corner of Berkman and East Sixth streets, claim to be artists. All four of them range in ages from eight to thirteen years, and when asked what damages they had done, said that they had drawn pictures on the walls.

"Were they pictures of Spaniards?" asked the City Judge.

"No, Cubans," answered Jacob M. Higgins, the complainant in the case.

The boys were allowed to go with a reprimand, and promised hereafter to keep out of other peoples' houses.

Franklin Council Elect.

At the meeting of Franklin Council, No 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., held last Thursday, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Councilor, George Bolsterli; vice-councilor, James A. Love; recording secretary, H. G. Adams; financial secretary, Theodore Kurzhals, Jr.; treasurer, F. A. Long; conductor, Augustus Wilson; warden, H. R. Thorn; inside sentinel, Walter Kettering; outside sentinel; H. Palmer; trustee, L. D. Townley. The officers will be installed at the next meeting of the council. There were about sixty members present at the meeting last evening.

Collided With the Judge.

As Judge V. W. Nash, of Prospect place, was riding his wheel down Park avenue, near Seventh street, Thursday afternoon, he met a wheelman coming across Seventh street. The other wheelman became confused and finally brought up directly in the path of the Judge. The Judge was thrown from his seat right over the other wheel, striking on his back. He was somewhat cut and bruised by his fall. The other rider, who is employed at the gas works, had his thumb sprained and received other slight injuries.

Appointment on a Hospital Staff.

Reiland Tomlinson, of LaGrande avenue, who is now a junior at the Columbia Physicians and Surgeons College, New York, has received an appointment on the medical staff of the New York Lying In Hospital, 17th street and Second avenue, New York, for the summer. He begins his duties there July 23d.

To Build a Handsome Residence.

E. E. Marshall, the North avenue dealer in paints, has plans out for a handsome residence to be erected very soon on Verdon avenue, in the borough. The dwelling will cost about $3,000. Mr. Marshall will build to sell.

LEE'S NAME LOOMS UP AMONG THE DEMOCRATS

Political Gossip About the Jersey Gubernatorial Battle.

DEMOCRATS ARE HOPEFUL.

ESSEX COUNTY THE PIVOTAL POINT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Lee's Name is Not the Only One Mentioned in Connection With the Nomination—Mayor Seymour, of Newark, Ranks Strong—The Democrats' Poor Prospects in the N.xt Senate.

A great deal of talk of ex-Supreme Court Clerk Benjamin F. Lee as the Democratic candidate for Governor continues, although it has been hinted that Mr. Lee is not favorably impressed with the idea of making a vigorous campaign, such as his experience in politics tells him he would have to make in order to strengthen his chances of being elected at the polls. Mr. Lee would go into a campaign with his thoughts directed *toward victory, and no one knows bet*ter than himself the physical strain involved in making a political campaign. Whether he would feel physically equal to the requirements of such a campaign such as he would conduct would be a matter for himself to decide. It is known that he is not enamored of the idea of going into a vigorous campaign, and yet there may arise conditions under which he might feel constrained to set his personal preferences and answer his party's call.

But Mr. Lee is not the only name mentioned in connection with the Democratic nomination. Ex Speaker Bergen and Col. J. F. Wilson, of Somerset; ex Judge Garrettson, and Senator Daly, of Hudson; Mayor Seymour, of Newark; Prosecutor Crane, of Essex; Clarence T. Atkinson, of Burlington, and ex-Judge Carrow, of Camden, are counted among the those from whom a selection might be made if Mr. Lee is not named. Of course, some of them have better chances than others, and the name of Mayor Seymour is not infrequently mentioned with favor. One of the things that commends Mayor Seymour's name is the strength that he has twice demonstrated in carrying the city of Newark by over 3,000 plurality, and the fact that the Democrats, unless they should carry several normally Republican counties, would have to have Essex county in order to control the Legislature on joint ballot for United States Senator, to succeed James Smith, Jr.

The present Senate consists of 14 Republicans, counting acting Governor Voorhees, and seven Democrats; eight Republicans, including the acting Governor, and six Democrats hold over. For the Democrats to wrest the Senate from the Republicans it would be necessary to elect five Senators this fall—a feat which does not seem at all probable to the most optimistic of the retiring Senators but one—Daly, of Hudson, is a Democrat. The retiring Republicans are Hoffman, Atlantic; Johnson, Bergen; Stokes, Cumberland; Skirm, Mercer, Vreeland, Morris, and Engle, Ocean. If the acting Governor is nominated for the Governorship he will undoubtedly resign from the Senate, to take effect when the new Governor is inaugurated, in order that the vacancy from Union county for the remaining year of his term as Senator might be filled by the election of someone else. This would not make any change, however, in the number of Democratic Senators that would have to be elected in order to make the Senate Democratic. If the Democrats should elect three Senators, which is probably a too liberal estimate, they would have but nine Senators out of 21, and would need 32 Assemblymen to control the joint meeting. Should they only succeed in carrying Hudson county for Senator, they would have only seven Senators, and would need 34 Assemblymen.

With a recognition of the fact that the Democrats will need from 32 to 34 Assemblymen to have a majority on joint ballot, the necessity of their securing the 11 Essex members is quite apparent. The practically sure Democratic Assemblymen are Hudson, 11; Hunterdon, 2; Middlesex, 3; Monmouth, 3; Sussex, 1; Warren, 2; total, 20. These, with the 11 Essex members, would leave the Democrats still one or two short, but there would be little doubt that a well-directed fight in some of the close or doubtful counties would result in securing these. It would be an almost impossible task, however, to secure in the doubtful or close counties these one or two and also enough to overbalance the loss of Essex county.

Southard Got Nine Months.

Henry Southard, alias "Hank," who was arrested here for assaulting a little girl, was brought before Judge Vail in the Court of Speial Sessions at Elizabeth Wednesday. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to nine months at hard labor in the State Prison.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

HE IS STILL A FIGHTER.

ABRAM ALBERTSON, REPORTED KILLED, IS STILL LIVING.

C. C. Cokefair, His Uncle, Receives Word from Gen. Corbin That His Name is Not in the List of Casualties.

C. C. Cokefair, of Crescent avenue, yesterday received a telegram from General Corbin of the War Department at Washington saying that the name of his nephew, Abram Albertson, was not among the list of casualties in the battle at Santiago, as reported by General Shafter.

Albertson is a member of the Seventy-first Regiment, New York Infantry, which took an active part in the engagements before Santiago on Friday and Saturday last, in which a large number of its members were killed and wounded.

Mr. Albertson is from Pennsylvania, but for several years past has been a member of Mr. Cokefair's family, residing on Crescent avenue. He attended college with Mr. Cokefair's son, Frank, and graduated from the School of Mines of Columbia University in 1895, taking the degree of Ph.B. in architecture. Since his graduation he has been connected with the well-known firm of Clinton & Russell, architects, of New York, and was with this firm at the time of his enlistment in Company F, under Captain Wells, who was also prominently connected with the firm of Clinton & Russell and a warm personal friend of Albertson.

The last letter received from Albertson was written on board the Vigilancia the day the transports left Tampa for Santiago. He was then well and full of patriotism, although enduring great hardships and privations. His enlistment was from purely patriotic motives and from a firm conviction of duty. Doubtless his regiment will again be brought into action at the final siege of the city of Santiago and his friends will anxiously await further tidings.

Young Hamilton Fish, of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, who died so bravely in the first charge of his regiment after the arrival of our troops in Cuba, was graduated from Columbia at the same time with Albertson in 1895.

quite intimate, visiting back and forth nearly every day. They resided but a few doors from Rev. Mr. Hauser. With the other neighbors they had but a speaking acquaintance.

Some weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Hauser and Mr. and Mrs. LaCasse decided to go to Europe together. But the former were unable to go with Mr. and Mrs. LaCasse. Instead they sailed this morning.

Both were about thirty-five years of age and childless. Mrs. LaCasse was a little over five feet in height, having light-blue eyes and light complexion. She has a wealth of light auburn hair. She was bright and vivacious in her conduct, and had the cultured character of her nationality.

—One of the biggest displays of fireworks on the Fourth was witnessed on North avenue. A number of Plainfield's young men celebrated the day in great shape.

DUNELLEN.

Dunellen, July 6—This evening the committee from Wm. G. Holton Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., will meet to settle up the Fourth of July accounts. It is estimated that the Council will come out a little ahead.

The committee in charge of the Fourth of July celebration at this place decided to display their fireworks last Monday evening, and a very creditable exhibition was given. After the rain a large number of people returned to the grounds and enjoyed dancing together with the display of the fireworks.

Monday last about sixty Sunday-school children from Plainfield enjoyed the day at the home of Mr. Fleming, of Washington avenue. The day was passed in an enjoyable manner.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Oakley, of New Brunswick, spent Sunday last with Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Swackhamer. Mrs. Oakley is still visiting borough relatives for a short time.

Last Sunday afternoon Rev. A. I. Martine, of Church street, made an address before the Sunday-school scholars of the new Presbyterian church at Bound Brook.

Mrs. James Bowyer, of Church street, is entertaining her neice from Camden, who is employed in the office of the Ladies' Home Journal at Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Tomlinson and son, of Plainfield, spent the Fourth with Mrs. Tomlinson's mother, Mrs. Anne Dunham.

Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Randolph have returned from Quakertown, where they have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hendershot.

Miss Mary Martine, of Church street, has returned from a visit with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Wyckoff of Flemington.

Miss Virgie Tunison and John P. Fenner spent Sunday and Monday with Miss Tunison's parents at Glen Gardner.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Terry, of Washington avenue, have returned from a short stay at Asbury Park.

Mrs. Jerry Dunham and Mrs. William Dunham spent the Fourth with Alex. Hunt, of Westfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, of Church street, entertained company from out of town over the Fourth.

John Fisher, who is stationed at Fort Hancock, is home for a short time visiting relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carpenter have returned from a visit with relatives at Washington.

Mrs. Emily Apgar, of Front street, is spending two weeks with relatives at Asbury Park.

Mrs. N. B. Smalley, of North Plainfield, called on friends in the borough yesterday.

Clifford Fenner, of Pluckamin, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Harry Swackhamer.

Mrs. Augustus Warden and daughter were guests in Plainfield yesterday.

Wm. Hamilton, Jr., has returned from a business trip to Washington.

DR. WALKER'S PANTS.

SHE TELLS OF HER THIRTY YEARS EXPERIENCE WITH TROUSERS.

Has Had a Funny Time—Girls Take Her for a Man and Try to Flirt with Her—Often Insulted by People Who Don't Know Any Better.

A correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean writes:

I was talking the other day with Dr. Mary Walker, the only woman in the United States who wears trousers and doesn't wish she were a man. That is her boast, and she has made an international reputation by pursuing her fad. There is really nothing mannish about Dr. Mary except her clothes, and in wearing them she is bound to have her own way, which is distinctly a feminine trait. She is a diminutive creature, with the thinnest of treble voice, sharp features, abbreviated hair just turning grey, and appendages. Her ordinary dress is a plain black suit of broadcloth, with frock coat and a silk hat. For street wear in the winter she has a heavy brown overcoat with velvet collar and a cape, and at all times she carries a stout cane with a silver head fully as large as her fist. If she wore skirts she would look very like a little old maid. As it is, with her erect carriage, trim figure, and sprightly walk, she seems like a boy dressed a little beyond his years.

She has been wearing trousers for thirty years and longer. Nobody knows exactly how long, for this a point on which the doctor resolutely closes her mouth. She can never be induced to reveal the time or place when she forsook the garb of womankind and adopted masculine attire. "If I were to tell you that you would guess how old I am," is her feminine formula for rebuffing the inquisitive. She will only say that the change came about by degrees. She admits, tho, that she was wearing trousers for some years before she went into the army as a nurse at the beginning of the civil war. The only reason she gives for adopting the garb is the convenience of trousers over the cumbersome skirts which were in vogue when she was a girl.

"This is a free country," she said, "and as I was not responsible for being a woman, I failed to see the reason why I should be compelled to endure the discomforts of skirts for a lifetime simply because I didn't happen to be born a man."

When Dr. Mary was in the army she was an acting assistant surgeon, with the rank of first lieutenant, and she dressed the same as the other officers. She wore trousers at that time with a stripe of gold lace down the side of the leg, a felt hat with gold cord, and an officer's overcoat. Her coat was not like that which she has since adopted, but was shaped like a blouse cut loose by about the neck.

"When I had on my overcoat, though," she said, proudly, "I looked every inch the man, and I am sure I acted it, for I was the only woman holding a commission in the army of the United States, and I am the only woman who has been granted a medal by Congress for active military duty."

As she said this the little doctor pointed to the bronze medal fastened with a bar of bronze, with red, white and blue ribbon to the lapel of her coat. On the back of the medal was engraved the legend: "Presented by the Congress of the United States to Mary E. Walker, A. A. Surgeon, U. S. Army."

"Do I ever have unkind things said to me?" she said, echoing back my question. "Yes, of course—by ill-bred people. I always consider the source from which they come, and attribute them to ignorance or viciousness, but there are very few experiences of this kind, and when anybody does say anything unpleasant I usually have something to say in return which makes us quits. You would be surprised to find how little trouble I really have, and then think what a relief it is when one arrives in a strange city to be able to pick up one's grip and walk up the street, without bothering anybody at all. Sometimes having a soft-spoken fellow come up with a smirk and 'Is there anything I can do for you, miss?' Oh I tell you, trousers are a great thing!

"I have been taken for a Catholic priest a good many times," said Dr. Mary. "More than once people have sworn to me that I was Father So-and-So, and they wouldn't listen to a denial. Once at the White House a man hailed me as Brother Brown of his church in Atlanta, and when I told him he was mistaken I couldn't get him to believe me. Sometimes the mistakes have been very funny. Young girls have tried to flirt with me, and I have been simply shocked by the brazen effrontery of some women whom I have met while traveling. One of them actually asked me how often I shaved. She thought I was a boy, and wouldn't take my word to the contrary. Some women delight in asking me why I don't dress like them. I always tell them I buy my own clothes and I really don't see why I can't have them cut as I like without having people ask me questions about them. I tell such women that if they will send me their gowns I will wear them. I take very good care not to say how I will wear them, and as they have never sent me any I am saved the trouble of explaining. One lady promised to send me a skirt and asked me if I would wear it as she wore hers. I told her I would put it on over my trousers and then hold it up as she did so as not to interfere with my walking. She was angry and left me. I suppose she gave me up as a hopeless case."

He—I'm saddest when I sing.

She—Well, how do you suppose I feel?—Judge.

BLUE THE DOMINANT COLOR.

(By special arrangement with the N.Y. Sun.)

Bodices are so covered with decorations of various sorts that the original material is visible only in spots. Pretty silk blouses are decorated all over with applications of black or cream lace, trellis designs of ribbon or ruches of chiffon, and the very smartest bodices of all are those which are finely tucked. Yokes extending out over the sleeves equalet fashion, but in realty forming the top of the sleeves and made of plaited frills of narrow ribbon, are one of the latest fancies. The frills encircle the shoulders and plaid and plain ribbon are both employed, as are frills of narrow lace sewn on a narrow insertion, and put around the yoke in the same way. Yokes of some form and device are an almost universal feature of dress. Certainly the gown without a yoke is the exception, and revers are almost if not quite as popular. They are cut in every conceivable shape, turning back from a vest either above or below the bust. A feature of the fashionable dress is the black satin or silk coat to wear with any kind of skirt. It may be a plain, sailor-made affair with plain or fancy revers, or a dressy little garment covered with corded tucks set in at intervals and sometimes cut bolero fashion in the back, with round or square tabs in the front.

Handsomely embroidered linen lawn is used for vests and yokes, and plain white batiste is employed for vests in waists of dotted batiste. A vest of deep tucks fastened with two or three turquoise buttons is very pretty. Batistes with embroidered dots and fine lawns in plain tints of figured patterns are all voguish for warm weather, but fine silk seems to be the all-prevailing fabric.

Sun bonnets not unlike those that were worn in the days of our grandmothers are a feature of headgear this season. They are made of shirred chiffon and organdie, and of dimity without any shirring. The material is cut double for the fronts, stiffened with crinoline, and edged with lace trimmed frills. Young ladies are to wear sun bonnets for tennis and golf with their pretty muslin gowns in the afternoons, and they will supply the matron's garden hats as well.

Some of the prettiest shirt waist are made of a new washing fabric of silk and linen, with cords running through

WILLIAM R. DAY.

SECRETARY OF STATE AND PERSONAL FRIEND OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Position Sought the Man, Not the Man the Position—When McKinley was Governor of Ohio Day was His Close Adviser.

Less than fifty years ago, on April 17, 1849, William R. Day was born at Ravenna, Ohio. His father, Luther Day, was Judge of the Supreme Court of Ohio. He sent his son to school in Ravenna to prepare him for the entrance into the University of Wisconsin with the class of '70. Of apparently delicate physique, he devoted himself while in the university with such unremitting zeal and interest as to cause concern among his classmates as to his ability to pull through the course without breaking down. He was tougher than his classmates supposed, and he pulled through with credit, to begin the study of law in Ravenna. Returning to Ann Arbor to attend lectures, he became librarian at the university, and in July, 1872, was admitted to the Ohio bar. Two years later he formed a partnership with William A. Lynch at Canton, Ohio, the home of Mr. McKinley. This firm continued until June, 1886, when Mr. Day was elected Judge of the Common Pleas Court of the Ninth Judicial District.

JUDGE WILLIAM R. DAY.

The new Judge had not sought nomination or election. He was averse to the routine of the bench; he had been content with his office and his practice, and the practice he had left was more lucrative as well as more congenial than the service of the bench. He resumed practice in 1887, his old firm having been dissolved by the addition of his brother, David B. Day, to the company, which was styled Day, Lynch & Day. His fitness for public place was recognized by President Harrison, who nominated him to be United States District Judge for the Northern District of Ohio. The Senate confirmed him, and his commission was made out, but by advice of his physician, his health having been impaired by overwork, he declined the honor of serving.

The President has known Judge Day almost from the time he began his practice in Canton. The two became warm and intimate friends. The President needed the advice of just such a friend as Judge Day. He had every expectation that Mr. McKinley would be President he had learned to trust to the calm, sagacious advice of the pale, spare and reticent lawyer, then quite as devoted in his friendship as he is now. While Governor of Ohio and President of Ohio he trusted to Judge Day's help in deciding many questions that seemed vexatious, and when he was standing before the country as the candidate for President there was no more zealous and helpful friend than Judge Day.

There is no doubt whatever that if there had been any office under the President which Judge Day desired to occupy after Mr. McKinley had been inaugurated he could have had it. Indeed, it is not improbable that he was asked to accept an office, and that he declined to accept. But the President did not forget him. When it seemed necessary to the President that he should have a report on the conditions in Cuba made by some person in whose judgment he could trust implicitly he turned to Judge Day to perform the service. But the State Department needed a First Assistant Secretary. Mr. Rockwell had been sent to Greece as Minister, and there was need of the guiding hand of a sound lawyer and a man of judgment and courage. Judge Day was stopped while on his way to Cuba and made Assistant Secretary. Sherman's resignation soon followed, and Day then became actual Secretary.

Judge Day has not lacked spirit or patriotism in his conduct of the many negotiations about the Spanish-Cuban controversy. If his feelings occasionally moved him to favor a more vigorous treatment of Spain, his judgment and his absolute loyalty to the President have restrained his personal preferences. Calm, with no inclination to talk, either upon his own motion or in response to questions, this spare, cool, calm man has conducted his business with great tact not only with the diplomatic representatives with whom he has come in contact, but also in his own office, in which respect for his chief and loyalty to the President made it necessary that he should at all times avoid a course that would provoke complaint from his immediate superior that he was in any sense lacking in respect or fidelity.—New York Times.

From the Heart of London

In the house of the great Madame Dalbert, Regents Park, London, Eng., there lives a French girl named Angelus Daubene, whose restoration to health through taking Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids has attracted the attention of many people in the neighborhood of Regents Park. She writes as follows:

THE CAPSULOID COMPANY.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the good fortune to know your Manager. I say "good fortune" because six weeks ago when I met him I was a physical wreck through ulcer of the stomach, which caused me dreadful distress as my stomach is so bad that I was as pale as any corpse. I had not left the house for nine weeks, and I had made my will although only 22 years of age. When your Manager asked me to try Capsuloids, each told me they were not a patent medicine and contained only iron; I smiled and said iron was poison to me, that I would not dare touch it. He kindly explained that your Capsuloids contained natural iron, exactly like the iron which my blood lacked so woefully. He offered to stay with me for an hour after I took the first Capsuloid for, in spite of his assurances that Capsuloids were as mild as milk, I expected to suffer indigestion pain immediately. I was surprised to find that my stomach was as free from pain as the end of the hour as before I took the Capsuloid. I have taken them regularly now for six weeks, without once feeling discomfort from them; the ulcer in my stomach is healed; I can eat every meat and potatoes; I can assure you my cheeks are rosy; I have gained 13½ pounds, and I am better and stronger and freer from headache and backache than I have felt in years. I cannot repay you, but I am sure you have sold two hundred boxes in this locality through the change you have brought about in me.

I am ever thankfully yours, ANGELUS DAUBENE.

are sold at 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, by L. W. Randolph, Druggist, 143 West Front Street, or sent by mail on receipt of price, by THE CAPSULOID COMPANY, 146 Fifth Ave., New York.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a broker M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a wholesale deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of them like unto the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun, as in the person of every new customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the testimonials. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other ones like unto me, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the bellyaching about my permanent address some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, chastised by their normally she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

A four-styles packed containing ten Ripans Tabules may be purchased for five cents (the price of one), at any drug store in the United States. This low price will be found convenient for those who do not care to buy the regular size package containing sixty tabules for sixty cents. The four-cent packet is intended to be carried in the vest pocket, so that one may be had when needed. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price is sent to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. In a compact envelope which will slip into the vest pocket, and contains six packets (containing sixty tabules), may be had for thirty cents. Ripans Tabules are the best known remedy for indigestion, sick headache, biliousness and all stomach troubles. The given address.

LINCOLN.

Lincoln, July 6—The New Market baseball nine visited this town July 4th to cross bats with the local team. When the visitors discovered that three of the regular nine of the home team were absent visions of an easy victory beamed up in their eyes. If they had an idea that New Market could produce a ball nine, they were sadly disappointed when the game began. The visitors went to the bat first and were retired for two runs. The Lincolnites then took their turn and pounded the visiting pitcher for eleven runs. Nine innings were played which resulted in a victory for this hub of the universe to the tune of 37 to 9. The features of the game were the playing of Apgar, Pohemus, Smalley and Leerraric.

WAR NEWS!

WILL FIGHT TILL DEATH.

General Toral Definitely Refuses to Surrender Santiago.

YELLOW FEVER IN OUR CAMP.

Dewey Captures Spanish Forts at Subig Bay with Little Resistance—Americans and Insurgents are Working Independently—Insurgents Attacked Manila But with Little Result—Impatience in Washington over Lack of News.

WILL NOT GIVE UP.

Toral Definitely Refuses to Surrender and Santiago Will Now Be Assaulted.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Off Juragua, Cuba, July 12, via despatch boat to Port Antonio, Jamaica, July 13, 1:35 p. m.—All negotiations for a peaceful surrender of Santiago de Cuba ended in utter failure tonight when Gen. Toral, the Spanish commander, definitely refused to unconditionally surrender the city and his army.

The city must now fall by assault and the army only awaits the word of its general to begin the final struggle. When the attack will be made depends upon the time that ensues before it is possible to get all the batteries to the front, as it is now definitely settled not to begin the attack until all the mandate of heavy artillery are properly placed.

The road beds are in very bad shape, making it next to impossible to move the artillery. It will therefore probably be twenty-four hours before the engagement opens.

The town of Siboney lies in ashes tonight. It was burned by the order of the health authorities of the army for the purpose of ridding the hospital camps of the unhealthful dirty buildings and to drive away the scores of Cuban followers whose presence was a serious inconvenience to the surgeons and threatened to convey disease to the wounded.

Almost every building in the village was fired and the occupants, mostly Cubans, are flying to the caves in the overhanging hills.

YELLOW FEVER IN CAMP.

Reports That the Dread Disease Has Appeared Among Americans at Siboney.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington July 13, 1:45 p. m.—Despatches conveying the information that yellow fever has made its appearance among the troops in the vicinity of Santiago were received at the War Department today.

President McKinley, Secretary Alger, Adjutant-General Corbin and Surgeon-General Sternberg were in conference this morning. Every precaution is being taken to prevent the spread of the disease in the hospital.

A special quarantine camp will be established in the charge of immune doctors and nurses who have already been ordered to Santiago. Stringent measures will be adopted to prevent the refugees from Santiago from coming in contact with the troops.

All information regarding the extent of the fever is refused by the authorities of the War Department. As near as can be learned, however, the disease broke out in the vicinity of Siboney, which was immediately ordered burned by Gen. Miles to prevent further infection.

DEWEY'S DECISIVE ACT.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Manila, July 8, via Hong Kong, July 13, 11:27 a. m.—The insurgents, July 6th, reported to Rear Admiral Dewey that the German gunboat Irene, which was at anchor in Subig Bay, had refused to permit them to attack the Spanish fortifications on Grande Island.

Dewey promptly despatched the United States cruisers, Raleigh and Concord, to Subig Bay, to investigate the circumstances. On entering the bay, the Raleigh opened fire on the Spanish forts, whereupon the German ship slipped her cable and steamed out by the other channel.

After a feeble response to the American fire, the Spaniards surrendered everything. Five hundred prisoners were taken besides a quantity of arms and ammunition.

The commander of the German warship Irene tried to explain his action in refusing to allow the insurgents to attack the Spanish. He said that he interfered in the cause of humanity. He offered to turn over a number of refugees who had sought safety on his ship but Dewey refused to accept the offer.

FIGHTING AT MANILA.

Insurgent Forces Attack Spanish Lines, Independent of American Assistance.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Manila, July 7, via Hong Kong, July 13, 12:21 p. m.—The insurgent forces made a vigorous attack on the Spanish lines in the vicinity of Manila yesterday with but little results. They shelled the Spanish intrenchments and captured many guns. Over one hundred men were killed on either side.

The Americans and insurgents are acting entirely independent of each other. Both are conducting their own operations, hoping to evolve a satisfactory agreement afterwards. Aguinaldo's influence is believed not to be of great extent or duration among the insurgents. After the Spanish are expelled from Manila, it is believed that all would be in a state of chaos unless the Americans assume control of the islands in force.

The Americans are postponing operations against the city until they are fully prepared to meet any contingency. Thirty thousand reinforcements are expected soon which will enable Dewey to effectually control the whole of the Phillippines.

HUSBAND AND WIFE LANGUISH IN JAIL.

The Children Are Now Living at the City's Expense.

HUGHIE O'DONNELL'S STORY

OLD OFFENDER OF THE EXCISE LAWS AND ARRESTED MANY TIMES.

Lived in a Scantily Furnished House on South Second Street—Hughie Defied the Law For a Day—His House Besieged—Finally Captured—Wife Continued Illicit Business at the Same Place.

There are many names, sorrowful to say, that are familiar ones on the police court docket. Some usually land there for one of the minor offences and usually escape with a light sentence after spending a night in the city jail. Of those, however, who come before the City Judge on more serious charges, the O'Donnell family has furnished more than its share of offenders. The charge has always been the same—the violation of the city excise laws. And now both husband and wife are serving terms in the county jail at Elizabeth on that same charge.

The annals of the police court hide many pitiful stories of desperate characters and flagrant violators of the city ordinances. The exploits of Hughie O'Donnell and his wife are, however, not to be equalled. It is the only case on record here where both man and wife have been thrown into jail and the city compelled to look after their children.

Now, Hughie O'Donnell is not such a bad man, taking them as they go. The only trouble is that he considers it perfectly fah to sell liquor without a license on Sunday. And furthermore, he has been carrying out his ideas with a persistency that astonished the local authorities. Six times has he been arrested on the same charge. Hughie, despite his illicit trade, has been by no means wealthy, and has had no money to fight the city in their prosecution. He has had lawyers several times, but is usually content with admitting his guilt or tendering a plea of non rule, which in his case is nearly the equivalent.

He lives, or rather did live, in a rambling old structure on South Second street, sadly in need of repair. The furniture of the place was scanty to the greatest degree. Even Hughie admits that he never had more than three chairs there. One bed sufficed for the whole family. A table was a necessary article, however.

The family consisted of a husband and wife and three children. The eldest was a boy of perhaps eighteen years of age. A seemingly quiet lad who showed no inclination to follow in his father's footsteps as a law breaker. He took a position some time ago in the store of a local merchant and has shown himself reliable. His only time at home was at night when he returned to sleep.

The second child, a daughter of sixteen years, was also employed out. She, too, was not at home except at night. The baby was a girl of nine summers who lived at home and played with the children of the neighborhood when her mother would let her leave the house.

During the winter, O'Donnell continued his illegal sale of beer and now and then a little whiskey. His house was crowded on Sundays with his customers who were all sworn not to give the place away. There was a secret watchword that admitted them and only the initiated were permitted to enter the portals of Hughie's establishment. The arrangements there were of the crudest, but beer was to be obtained there on the Sabbath and the customers cared little for the surroundings.

Finally the police laid siege to the place, O'Donnell refusing to answer the repeated knocks when they arrived. The siege lasted a day and then the police gained from the owner of the place entrance to the first story and easily made their way to the second floor which the O'Donnells occupied.

O'Donnell was arrested, brought before the Judge and finally sentenced to five months in jail. The five months expires the last of July. During the spring, Mrs. O'Donnell continued the illicit trade and was promptly arrested. Owing to the fact that the children would be left alone, Judge DeMeza was inclined to look upon her case with considerable leniency. Sentence was delayed for week after week until the police learned that the old customers were once more flocking back to Hughie's Sundays, where his wife looked after their wishes. So it was that last Sat-

ANOTHER DRIVING ROD BREAKS ON THE CENTRAL.

OCCURRED EARLY THIS MORNING.

Train Was Just Pulling Out of Finderne—No One Was Hurt by the Break.

Finderne, July 13.—It was 2 o'clock this morning before the passenger train leaving Plainfield at 11:28 for Somerville, left this place. It was about 12 o'clock when the train came into Finderne, and just as the train was leaving the station a driving rod broke on the engine.

There is no telegraph station here and a member of the train crew was obliged to walk to Bound Brook and secure another engine before the train could be taken to its destination. No other damage happened outside of the broken rod.

This was the second accident of its kind on the Central this week.

A FAIRIES' CARNIVAL.

The Eldorado parlors at 327 West Front street resembled a scene in fairyland Tuesday. Seven little girls, Molly J. Pratzner, Jeanette Kohn, Virginia Devine, Violet Hope, Irene Hope, Sadie Lichtenstitt and Rosebud Kohn, gave and entertainment consisting of songs, dialogues, recitations, etc., and called "An evening in Fairyland."

The little girls were dressed in light, airy costumes to resemble fairies, trimmed with flowers, and carrying bright flowers in their hands. The programme presented was a long one, and held the attention of a large audience through the entire evening.

An admission fee of ten cents was charged, which entitled one to a plate of ice cream, and the proceeds were sent to the Red Cross Society.

Officers Installed.

Plainfield Council, No. 44, O. C. F., met Tuesday and initiated three candidates. After the initiation the following officers were installed by Deputy Morgan, of Elizabeth: Councilor, M. R. Lantz; vice-councilor, A. L. Bell; secretary, James Bell; treasurer, W. G. Crevelling; prelate, A. W. Weseman; marshal, W. P. Henderson; warden, R. L. Bellows; guard, L. T. Morrison; sentinel, Oscar Anderson; trustees, H. G. Normer, A. W. Weseman and D. D. Williams. Visitors were present from Elizabeth, Jersey City and Newark.

National G. A. R. Encampment.

The G. A. R. National encampment will be held at Cincinnati next September from the 7th to the 9th of the month. It promises to be fully as well attended as the one held at Buffalo last year. Department Commander W. C. Smith, of North Plainfield, is making arrangements to attend the encampment. The rate will be about $14 for the round trip. Commander Smith will gladly furnish information concerning the trip to anyone who desires to know about it.

Installation at Minerva Temple.

Tuesday evening the officers-elect of Minerva Temple, Rathbone Sisters, were installed by Mrs. Lida E. Palmer, Supreme Deputy for New Jersey, and the work was very satisfactorily performed. The retiring chief officer, Mrs. R. Mattis, was presented with a past-chief jewel by the members of the temple, after which refreshments were served by the members of the good and welfare committee. There was a large attendance of the members and the meeting was one of great interest.

Will Make Fine Streets.

The macadamizing on Madison avenue between Ninth street and Stelle avenue is about completed, and when the two blocks between Fifth and Seventh streets are done there will be a fine road from Front street south to Stelle avenue. Work on Stelle avenue also is being pushed to completion. Tuesday the roller was put to work upon the street, to roll down the crushed stone.

Rossel To Be Sentenced.

Elizabeth, July 13.—Supreme Court Justice VanSyckel is expected to visit Elizabeth Friday, to pass sentence of death on Louis Bossel, the murderer of Farmer James C. Pitts, of Summit. Bossel is aware of the fact that the Court of Appeals has decided that he must hang, but he manifests scarcely any concern over the matter.

Home Missions.

Tuesday night at a home missionary meeting in the Filmore Baptist church Mrs. P. H. Brown, of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, delivered an address on work among the home missionaries. Miss Alice Tate was elected president of the society, and it was decided to take up the 12-cent-a-year system of raising money.

—Dr. O. L. Jenkins, of East Front street, is making some improvements about his place.

PATRIOTIC TALKERS CALLED ON TO ACT.

Several Local Organizations Invited to Volunteer for the Army.

SOME CALL IT A JOKE.

THEY PASSED RESOLUTIONS IN THE SPRING OFFERING TO VOLUNTEER.

Now Adjutant-General Stryker Has Communicated With the Juniors and Hook and Ladder Company—The Juniors Already Have Five Members in the Ranks—The Catholic Club Ready.

There is, when it comes right down to it, some difference between standing up before a crowd of enthusiastic friends and voting to unanimously offer your services to the State in case of war with Spain, and putting your name down on enlistment papers when there is a very active prospect that you will soon be made a target for Mauser bullets. Some people are just beginning to find that out.

When the agitation over the destruction of the Maine was at its height and before war was declared, there came offers to Adjutant General Stryker, of the New Jersey National Guard, from many organizations offering to volunteer in case of war with Spain. Others came after war was declared.

In Plainfield, four organizations offered their services to the government and passed patriotic resolutions declaring their willingness to volunteer. Now in Plainfield, as in every other place, there did not seem the slightest likelihood of there being any lack of volunteers or that the situation would be such that these offers would ever be accepted. In fact, several of the officers of three of the organizations admit that the resolutions were really nothing more than a little outburst of spread-eagleism and had very little real meaning. For while every good American would be willing to go to war if they were really needed, the very members who voted for these resolutions had no wish to go unless the exigencies of the situation made it their actual duty.

Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., was one of the organizations to pass such a series of resolutions, and now the secretary has received a communication from Adjutant-General Stryker asking for volunteers. Secretary Horace G. Adams has notified the members and, as a result, there is considerable excitement among the members. Of course, they cannot be held by the government for service but many of the members consider that they are not put in a pleasant light. The resolutions were unanimously adopted at a meeting at which there were twenty present of the enrolled 200 members of the Council.

To a reporter yesterday morning one of the principal officers of the council said that the whole affair was a "bluff" and would amount to nothing. The council already has five members at the front and will pay the dues of such others as enlist. He did not consider, however, that the present call would have much effect.

There was a good attendance at a meeting of the Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company when similar resolutions were passed. As one of the prominent members expressed himself to a reporter yesterday morning, "They were just fooling." They received a letter from Gen. Stryker last week but have done nothing about it, and this member said that nothing would be done. The resolutions were passed in a spirit of fun and that would end it.

The chiefs and braves of Miantonomo Tribe of Red Men also offered their services. It was known at the time, however, that it was merely a joke, as no one had any idea that they would really be needed. It has been impossible to learn whether they have received any word from the Adjutant-General as yet, but if it does come, the tribe will probably remain in Plainfield as before, for few, if any, of its members are prepared to go to war except in extremities.

The other organization that volunteered was the Plainfield Catholic Club. Their offer was in earnest, however, and they are now just as enthusiastic on the subject as when the resolutions were first passed. Already a number of their members have gone to swell the ranks of the Jersey regiments at the front.

A reporter interviewed the president, George J. Tobin, yesterday morning. He said that while the Catholic Club had not received any invitation to volunteer, he was confident that the members would loyally respond to any call. He thought that there were at least a hundred members who were willing to go if needed, of whom 90 per cent. could successfully pass the examination. He declared the members meant just what they said when they offered their services and they were willing to back it up whenever the call came.

NO SPECIAL SESSION, SAYS THE GOVERNOR.

DEFINITELY SETTLED YESTERDAY.

Newark Board of Trade Expects Contributions Will Meet Needs of Soldiers' Families.

Trenton, July 13—Gov. Voorhees authorized the statement yesterday that he has no intention of calling a special session of the Legislature. Referring to the published statement that Mayor Seymour, of Newark, had written him a letter asking for a special session to pass a law authorizing Newark to appropriate money for the families of soldiers who have gone to the war, the Governor said he had received no such letter. The Governor added that he was informed that the Board of Trade of Newark had raised all the money needed.

Nearly $8,000 has been contributed by Newark citizens for the relief of distressed families of soldiers. The relief committee of the Board of Trade, which has this work in charge, decided Monday that a special session of the Legislature is not necessary, and that people, so far as Newark is concerned, will contribute sufficient sums to meet the requirements.

LARRY WALLACE NOT A DESERTER.

At Least Not the Larry Who Resided at Scotch Plains.

Fanwood, N. J., July 13—In reply to a letter sent by Mrs. Julia Wallace to J. O. M. Gilmore, at Fort Hancock, asking if the report was true that her son, Larry Wallace, had deserted from the army, Mrs Wallace received an answer today from Captain J. R. Wendell, commanding Co. A, Third N. J. Volunteers, in which he says that Larry is still in Co. A, and had not deserted as reported. Larry had been confounded with another man of the same name who deserted from Sea Girt.

The captain says that Larry's record is all right; that he is there in service and in good health. The letter is signed by Corporal Edward L. Tiffany, clerk to the commandant.

Trolley Car in His Way.

Harry Canfield, of Craig place, escaped serious injury Tuesday evening while riding his wheel around the corner of Craig place and Somerset street. A trolley car coming along going toward the mountains and young Canfield in dodging the car ran into a horse being driven by a farmer. Fortunately the horse was very docile and allowed Canfield plenty of room between his legs. In the collision Canfield's wheel was wrecked, but the rider escaped with a slight cut on the wrist. Neither the horse or Canfield were going very fast, and thus serious damage was averted.

No Word From Mrs. LaCasse Yet.

John Hummel, of Duer street, with whom Mr. and Mrs. A. C. LaCasse stored their household furniture before they sailed for Europe, is expecting to hear from his former neighbors every day. Monday Mrs. Hummel wrote a letter to Mrs. LaCasse, who is still at her sister's house, 173 West Third street, New York, congratulating her upon her escape from death with the sinking of the LaBourgogne, and asking her when she expects to come back to Plainfield. Mrs. Hummel has not yet received an answer.

Brunswick Race Meet Postponed.

New Brunswick, July 13.—The race meet which was to have been held today and tomorrow at this place, has been postponed until Friday and Saturday of this week, on account of the weather. This is the last meet in the series of four that were scheduled under the auspices of the Central New Jersey Driving Association.

250 Out of Work.

New Brunswick, July 13—The works of the New Brunswick Tire Company have been shut down indefinitely because of the general dullness of trade, and 250 operatives are thrown out of work. The managers of the plant have no idea when work will be resumed.

Summer Night's Festival.

A picnic and summer night's festival will be given by the West End Hose Company, No. 2, of the borough, at Mountainside Park Grove, end of Somerset street trolley line, Thursday afternoon and evening, July 28th. If stormy, will be postponed until the following day.

American Day Parade.

The State Council of New Jersey has ordered a general parade of the Order to take place at Asbury Park American Day, Thursday, Aug. 18th. Every American Mechanic who can, is expected to be in line on that day for the grand parade.

HOW THE FOURTH WAS SPENT OFF HAVANA.

New Jersey Naval Reserves Have Joined the Blockade.

THE FIRST TASTE OF WAR.

THEY ARRIVED OFF HAVANA ON THE FOURTH AND CELEBRATED.

The Badger Was Present When the Alphonso XII Was Run Ashore and Burned—Warm Weather During the Day, But Very Pleasant Evenings—The Water Has Dark Brown Taste.

On board the U. S. S. Badger with the blockading fleet off the harbor of Havana, July 5—Well, we have at last reached Cuba, although we have not yet attended any dances in Havana, but we are hoping to be able to in a short time.

We left Key West last Sunday evening, arriving off Havana at sunrise, Monday morning, the Fourth of July. We distributed the mail to the fleet and then took our station on the blockade between Mariel and Havana.

Our first vacation from work came the Fourth. We did nothing all day and in the evening had games and an entertainment.

The fleet here keeps changing all the time, but it consists principally of small gunboats like the Vicksburg, the Castine, the Bancroft and the Montgomery, the converted yachts Mayflower and Hawk, the monitor Amphitrite and the auxiliary cruisers Prairie and Badger.

The first view of actual warfare for us came last Tuesday when the Castine chased a four-masted steamer ashore at the entrance to Mariel, and then set fire to her by shelling her. The Prairie, Hawk and ourselves immediately ran in to assist the Castine if necessary.

The Prairie had the senior officer aboard and they began firing at the steamer and shore batteries, but ordered the fleet of us not to fire although we were as close, if not closer, to the Spanish steamer than the Prairie. After firing for half an hour, as there was no response from the shore batteries, we withdrew. It was quite exciting to see the burning ship with the shells dropping around her and the batteries in the background.

Since then we have had nothing much to do except catch sharks, which are in abundance here. We have had some very good views of Morro Castle and vicinity, as we have been within five miles of it and within less than a mile from other parts of the shore. The ammunition of the Spaniards must be very low as they very seldom fire at the boats anymore, although we run within easy range of their guns.

They do not make us do much work down here as the days are fairly hot. The nights, however, are elegant. We have only had one shower of fifteen minutes' duration, although we have seen a number pass over the island every day.

Our worst trouble at present is in getting water. What we have here is too hot to give any satisfaction, for we have no ice. Then the water has a dark brown taste anyhow.

The following is a programme of our Fourth of July celebration:

U. S. S. BADGER,
OFF MORRO CASTLE,
JULY 4TH.

SCHEDULE OF SPORTS ON THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

Second Event—Three-legged race, to be run in boats. (100 in the shade.) Prize, a plug of tobacco.

Fourth Event—Tug-of-war between eight-men teams from each division. Prize, two cigars to each man on winning team.

Music by the Cat head choir.

Concerting solo by Walter Tander McLoughlin.

"Plantation Echoes," by the Galley Niggers.

"Little Egypt" in her famous Cuba Libre dances. (Her first appearance before Havana.)

Instrumental and vocal solos by assorted artists.

National anthem by the ship's company.

In the first event Volney F. Green, of Plainfield, tied for first with three others. In the run-off he was second. He was the only Plainfielder to distinguish himself in the sports of the day.

Bids for New Hosehouse.

The fire and building committee from the City Council is now preparing to advertise for bids to erect a new hosehouse in the West End. A meeting was held last evening to examine changed plans as submitted by Architect E. V. French.

Dr. D. C. Adams, of Grove street, has returned from a pleasure trip.

Unthreshed Oats for Horses.

For several years I have fed unthreshed oats to my horses and the longer I follow the plan the more I like it.

In harvesting oats that are to be fed in the bundle, the cutting should be done a few days before they are ripe. The grain is as good then as it will be later, and the straw is much better. And early cutting prevents the loss that otherwise would occur from the dropping off of grains when handling. If one has barn room the bundles may be hauled in directly from the shock as soon as dry and piled up in close fitting rows. If there is no room for them under cover they may be stacked outside. When the stacking is well done oats will keep all winter and both straw and grain will come out fresh in the spring—all excepting the coarse ends of outside bundles.

Horses fed to like oats are served in this way just as well as though they were separated from the straw. And they derive more benefit from them, for they are obliged to eat more slowly and masticate more thoroughly.

For colts unthreshed oats are a most excellent feed. The grain being in a less condensed form there is less danger of injury resulting from its use. I sometimes run the bundles through a cutter before feeding. If the straw is long and coarse the last six inches of the bundle are thrown aside.

Cows relish a daily feed of unthreshed oats, and the needed variety may be widened through their use. To feed threshed oats unground, or whole grain or any kind, to cows is an extravagant waste. To have the oats ground only adds another unnecessary expense to cost of threshing. The cow will do her own grinding and do it well when the oats are fed to her as are cattle that eat them, straw and all.—C. L. Hill, in Agriculturist.

The Peach Tree Borer.

It is a common complaint among fruit growers that their peach trees die the first or second year from planting, supposing that this generally will be an amateur in the business. The loss that occurs at this age of the tree is nearly as great as from the dreaded "yellows," and to the uninitiated is much of a mystery. If one examines his young trees about the first of September he will notice at the base of some of them a kind of sawdust mixed with gum adhering to the bark; scrape this away and a small hole will be seen just entering under the bark various distances, according to the time the insect has been at work. This is the work of the borer, and if he is allowed undisputed possession he will girdle many of the trees to death. This worm is the larva or young product of a moth which lays its eggs in July or August on the bark of the tree near the base, and as they hatch work their way downward into the bark, they live at the roots of the tree nearly a year, when they enclose themselves in a pod-like case, in which they remain a few weeks, and then emerge again as a moth to again propagate their species. A great many ways have been suggested and tried by which they may be exterminated, but only one safe method has yet been discovered of doing it, and that is to dig them out.—Troy Times.

Cleanliness in Milking.

To prevent milk souring, or at least to delay the process, keep it perfectly clean. Brush the cow's flanks and udder and wash them if necessary. See that the milker has clean hands and wears clean clothes. Milk the first two or three streams on the floor, as these contain great numbers of bacteria. Milk out of doors if possible, as stable air contains more germs than that outside, but in any case keep the stable well aired. Be especially careful about straining. Provide several thicknesses of strainer cloth and allow the milk to trickle through slowly. Use nothing but tin pails and cans. Thoroughly scald with steam and expose to the sun. Remove the milk from the barn as soon as drawn and cool as quickly as possible.

Green Pumpkins for Feeding.

While there is generally a market for all the large, ripe pumpkins at more than their feeding value, there are always green specimens that are not salable which are nearly as good for feeding purposes. Remove the seeds and cook them. All the delicacies in nutrition will be made good by some meal, which will be better digested than if given without the cooked pumpkins. If the seeds are not removed the nutriment of the pumpkin will be largely neutralized, as the seeds have a strong diuretic effect. It is also important to remove the seeds from pumpkins fed raw to cows. Even the green pumpkins may be kept till January if protected against freezing.

When to Sow Fall Turnips.

Fall turnips can be sown from July 1 to the middle of August. A piece of well-rotted sod ground is best. Pulverize as thoroughly as possible and sow on seed broadcast at the rate of three to six pounds per acre, covering with the harrow. Turnips will grow well upon rich bare fallow. No labor is required after the seed is in the ground. The roots can be allowed to mature or sheep may be turned into the field two months after seeding. They should have free access to the turnip field, just as they would to pasture.

Feeding Pigs in Summer.

Summer is the time to make pork. Making it in winter requires too much food to keep up the animal heat. Hogs have plenty of grass in summer and about half the corn they will eat they will fatten rapidly and my belief is that three pounds can be made on less grain than one pound in cold weather with a hog in a close pen. The grass is cooling and loosening and counteracts the feverish properties of the corn. Hogs will never melt in summer, however fat, if they can have access to water and mud to lie in and in a very little time. Hogs in cool weather. It absorbs too much animal heat. Milk is cooling as a drink and almost indispensable in raising pigs.

But very little corn and no corn meal should be fed to young pigs before they are four months old. Food has to be fermented before it will digest, and if fed to young pigs before it is fermented it will overtask their digestive powers and spoil them. Lettuce is good for young pigs.

The middlings should be put with milk at night after feeding has been done, and allowed to remain in the milk until morning. Never allow the swill tub or trough to get empty. Always leave a little at the bottom to act as yeast. The swill should never be allowed to get stale. Slop feed should be given often and never more at a time than will be taken up. Slops will make larger hogs than dry feed. After the hogs get to be three or four months old, their food can be made stronger, but a pig will not bear much strong food until it begins to change from a pig to a hog. Too much farmers do not know the value of rass as a feed for hogs. At least one would not think so, when their hogs of all ages may be seen during the whole summer in small yards or at best on very small pastures, but few would know the real value of such feed would as soon think of raising cattle and making milk and butter by feeding their stock grain alone during the whole summer. Rass will pay more and make the business profitable without a good supply of grass. Some men make pork with little or no grass, but it costs more and the hogs are not so healthy.—American Agriculturist.

Save All the Bones.

The bones of fish and fowls and the large and small pieces of bones which are bought with beefsteak and mutton constitute the very best food for fruit trees and grapevines if the fragments are only placed where the roots can lay hold of them. Instead of being cast into the backyard as food for stray dogs and cats, care should be taken to deposit everything of the sort in a small tub with a cover. As soon as a few pounds have accumulated, take the tub to some grape vine or fruit tree, dig a hole three of more feet long, a foot or two deep, dump in the bones and fill in the soil. The more fragments of bone can be spread around the better, but they should be buried so deep that a plow or spade will not reach them. The roots of growing vines or fruit trees will soon find this mine of fertility, and will extend their tendrils in all directions, greatly promote the growth of healthy wood and the development of fair and luscious fruit. Many floriculturists and farmers buy bone dust costing not less than $20 per ton, simply to enrich the soil around and beneath their vines and trees. Fragments of bones are just as valuable as ground bone, although their elements will not be as available in so short a time as if the large pieces were reduced to a mass. Nevertheless, if large bones are buried three or four feet from a grapevine, the countless numbers of mouths at the ends of roots will soon dissolve, take up and appropriate every particle. When cast out of the kitchen door bones are a nuisance, but if properly used they become a source of valuable fertility.

How to Have Cauliflower in Winter.

When sowing cauliflower for a summer of autumn crop, do not overlook the fact that it is far more valuable as a winter than as a summer vegetable, and as a rule, in many sections of the country a more certain one. As in summer removed from the sea coast, cauliflower is a very doubtful one, which is due to the fact that it will not thrive in a hot, dry atmosphere. But sow the seeds in June and transplant them when the seeds are of suitable size, and with favorable conditions of growth fine heads will be formed and ready for the table by the last of October, and as the plants rarely suffer in summer time, the season will last until the plants are ruined by excessive cold.

When the season is nearly over, there will always be found many plants that just begin to form heads. If these are lifted and put in a cool cellar and the roots covered with earth the heads will develop nearly as rapidly as in the field and frequently get to be from four to five inches in diameter and they are far more delicate than when grown in the field or garden.—C. L. Allen, in Agriculturist.

Clover Hay for Food.

An article of food is now being put on the market for sale, largely used by those who have tried it—ground clover. Clover hay is ground as fine as meal, the poultrymen add it to the rations of poultry with beneficial results. It is also excellent for young calves. The ground clover should first scalded with boiling water and thickened with cornmeal or any other ground food that may be preferred.

Grow Gooseberries and Currants.

Both of these are much neglected, yet few small fruits are easier to grow and none more easily handled. The markets never seem to be glutted with good gooseberries and currants, but if such should be the case they can be shipped long distances, or held several days in a moderately cool place. Their season for marketing is quite extended.

The chief enemies are mildew of both gooseberry and currant, and leaf spot of the currant, both of which can be combatted by selecting an open location with free circulation of air and thinning by judicious pruning. Applications of bordeaux mixture and potassium sulphide do much to keep these pests in check. Downing and Houghton are the best gooseberries and should be planted together for cross fertilization. Victoria, Red Dutch, White Grape, Fay's and Cherry currants are the best varieties of currants. The latter are more susceptible to the attacks of mildew and lear spot than the others named. Thorough cultivation and plenty of manure to keep all plants in a vigorously growing condition are great preventives of disease. It is generally the weak, sod-bound plants and trees which attract diseases and insects.—American Agriculturist.

Good Grass Seeding.

Grass seeding fails to a great extent for want of the precisely right process of putting the seed into and not on to the soil. To merely scatter the seed on the surface and leave it to all the accidents of weather and season is following in the footsteps of nature, whose waste surpasses belief and common knowledge. Not a tenth of the seed sown in the ordinary manner escapes either a dry time or the ineffective efforts of the surface roots to get hold of the ground. The method is to seed with a winter grain crop. Then if there is an implement that may be used in safety to go over the wheat in the spring and merely loosen the surface without injury to the roots and disturb and loosen the soil to some extent, why then the wheat is benefitted and the grass seeding fully insured. This covering thus given to these small seeds enables the tender first roots to get into the soil, where they take a fast hold and are able to resist those dry-heat trials of summer. The moisture which the surface sown seed is killed on its birth and the tender germ is dried as of old and perishes because it has no depth of earth in which its roots can be safe.

Useless Seeds.

A farmer recently wrote to Senator Platt of Connecticut as follows: "I received a bag of seeds from you which I cannot get any one to take and I will state the reason. We have all been deceived with seeds sent out from Washington that no one wants them. We know it is not your fault that the seeds are not good. Very often they will not come up, and if they do, they are not true to name. The custom has said there were as many as ten varieties of cabbage in one little package. Market gardeners will not use them. The government gets awfully deceived in them. Many times they are old seed that will not germinate, and the farmers will not use them. If the money spent for them were used for the free delivery of the mails the public, especially the farmers, would not only be better satisfied, but would rise up and call you senators and representatives blessed. It is very interesting to farmers to plant seeds and then, when they do not come up, to have to go to a reliable seedsman and buy that which we know is good, as it makes at least two weeks' difference in the market value of vegetables in the spring. The system is so unsatisfactory that farmers will not use them."

Good Roads Profitable.

The road commissioner of New Jersey, Mr. Budd, points out that it costs 3 cents a bushel to haul wheat on a level road a distance of five miles, and at least 9 cents to haul it the same distance on a sandy road, which goes to illustrate the practical economic importance of good roads. This is a point which deserves the serious attention of farmers. Sandy and rough roads are wearing out their horses and vehicles and increasing the actual cost of their farm supplies and of the marketing of their products. Though little recognized, this is a fact most potent to the careful observer, and most pointedly and truly expressed in Mr. Budd's report. When this fact penetrates the minds of farmers more generally they will begin to put more money and labor expended on road improvement will save money for them in reducing the actual cost of hauling and in saving vehicles and horses.

It is high time to dispense with the idea that roads are luxuries, mere fancy frills, and to regard well-made highways as among the necessities.

Mix Fertilizer with Soil.

Do not allow fertilizer to come in direct contact with the seed of any crop. This caution is constantly urged in fertilizing pamphlets and otherwise, but most of us fail to properly heed it. Careful and scientific tests have shown that "ammonia, nitrate of soda, chlorate and sulphate of potash and ammoniated superphosphates exert an injurious effect upon the germination of seed in general." But this can be wholly avoided by mixing the fertilizer with the soil.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD

A Woman Train Dispatcher.

Miss Edith Jarnagin has been appointed train dispatcher of the Chattanooga, Southern Railway by General Manager Hoskins. She is 19, and a Georgia girl. She was a master of Morse and drawing a salary as telegrapher at 14. About a year ago she entered the general manager's office of the Chattanooga, Southern, and General Manager Hoskins, who is himself an old telegrapher and thorough railroad man, gave her every opportunity to develop the talent which has been recognized by her promotion to chief train despatcher. The office is one of great responsibility and the safety of many lives depends upon the efficiency and faithfulness of the person who holds it. The engineer and conductor can manage their own trains, but the despatcher manages them all. Every railroad has its time schedule, but if there be many trains over the line, perhaps a majority, and sometimes all of them are off the schedule time. Then the despatcher becomes a living schedule. Not a wheel can be turned without his special order. By the reports from the operators along the route he knows the position of each train, the capacity of every engine, and of every man; he knows the accommodation of every siding, the exact topography of the road. The train despatcher must combine knowledge of telegraphy, the railroad system, quick wit, nerve and memory. Every train is sped from starting point to destination by the guidance of that commanding genera of railroad traffic. The New Orleans Picayune, from which this data are obtained, describes Miss Jarnagin as a beautiful and amiable girl, and a social favorite when off duty.

Comfort in Tan Shoes.

Tan shoes are just one of the things that make for comfort in dog days. The mercury begins to make passes at the hundred notch in the tube. There are always croakers about everything, and the tan shoe comes in for its share of abuse. The chiropodist is the man who says there is nothing in it, and this is odd, for if the tan shoes are injurious to the feet, as he claims then what is another man's misery is his meat, and it does look as if he ought to know enough to keep quiet on the matter. The tan shoe is cool to, and he says that there is something used in preparing leather for tan shoes that hurts tender feet. All the same, tan boots and low shoes are more worn to-day than ever.

The fashion in leather shoes are always of a conspicuous color when new. Some women turn away from them for this reason and buy the cheaper shoes of a beautiful dark tan or rich shade of brown. The former show dust more readily and need polishing, while elbow grease combined with shoe dressing soon makes those of cheaper grade a sight to be hold.—New York Sun.

More Liberal for Women in France.

Women are slowly obtaining a few rights in France, notes the New York Post. A short time since they were permitted to act as witnesses in a legal sense and to sign wills and other legal documents, and they now to be allowed to take part in the administration of the charities and hospitals in Paris, being made eligible for the higher council of the assistance public. This concession has been extended to the sex who have contributed most largely to the charitable funds, and have taken part in house-to-house visitations, after a report by Dr. Naples, who eulogized the work of women in connection with the administration of charities in England and the United States. He held up good model to France, Miss Florence Nightingale, and the governors of the Paris charities considered that France also could claim Florence Nightingales if they gave their women a chance in the work of organization.

During a Thunder Storm.

Thunder and lightning, through natural operations, are a cause of great alarm to many. It is seldom any person is injured who keeps away from considerable metallic substances and avoids immediate contact with the walls of the house. The middle of the room is in general perfectly safe and the lower floor more so than the upper. A bed removed at a slight distance from the walls of the room is perfect security, even if the house were struck. When lead is used on the roofs of buildings particular care should be taken that it communicates with the spouts, and by these means with the ground. To determine the distance of the lightning, count the seconds between the flash and the thunder, and reckon less than a quarter of a mile for every second.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cost of Form in Walking.

Fashionable folk say that it is bad form now to keep step with a companion with whom one is walking. It may be bad form to keep step, but it is certainly uncomfortable not to do so. The thing to do is to break step and walk with a long, swinging stride. Only persons with good, strong nerves should adopt this fad. Nothing is more irritating to the average man or woman than to walk with one who constantly loses step. It causes a lack of harmony. It makes a man feel like using words he never learned in Sunday school, and as for a woman is sets her nerves on edge, and everybody knows how that affects her.

ON THE HEIGHTS.

"Alan, Alan, I am really and truly going to papa to-morrow."

The girl's face glowed with happiness; her little feet kept time as if to some gay march, and her fair curls fell about her face; truly, her Quaker-like garb was a mockery to Elizabeth Weston.

Her lover took her hands in his, saying wistfully,—

"You will leave me alone?"

"Oh, Alan, I could not stay—I could not!"

"You are young; you will outgrow this restlessness, and I would make you happy."

"You would make me happy here in poverty-stricken Orroway? Shut in from the world by the hills, for all your love, you do not understand what this narrow life is to me; to you, who are of the elect, it is happiness; I look at you as you sit in meeting on Sunday, and you look as if heaven were near while I feel as if the bare, white walls were crushing me; and I long for music and flowers, for a beautiful home and costly gowns. Alan! Ambition beckons me to come to her, and some day I shall reach the heights."

"We might reach them here. Love beautifies even whitewashed walls, and, you can have your flowers, and sing. I shall be content with your love. Is love nothing to you, Elizabeth?"

"Nothing, nothing!" she repeated, as if to convince herself; then she went on, "My restlessness would disturb your peace. I am like my father, of the world, and you belong to Orroway." Then, entreatingly, "Do not look so grieved, Alan. I love you dearly; I could not have borne existence here without you. I shall always remember your goodness. Kiss me now—and go."

He kissed her slowly, sadly, and walked away from her, with bowed head, through the arbutus scented wood; and once, while she watched him, she stretched out her arms toward him, as if to draw him back then let them fall by her side; and the purple twilight fell upon her.

In the after years there was no time for dreaming—scrambling over rough places, slipping, falling, then going bravely on again, following the gray figure, until at last Elizabeth stood face to face with ambition on the top of the mountain. Success and Fame came to her, placing the hard won laurels on her fair hair.

Then she looked about her for some one to give her a word of praise. There was no one. She had had no time to make friends; her father had died before she came to know him.

"If Alan were only here," she cried, "he would rejoice to see how I make people laugh and cry at my will; he would say, 'Thou hast bravely fought and won.'"

She looked down into the Commonplace Valley and saw the women dancing their bables, and wondering if love really made the valley beautiful; then she said,—

"They tell us one cannot have everything. I have success—I will be content."

She went on working still, as if she had reached the top, and wishing vaguely that she had not so much time to look down.

"A gentleman to see madam."

Alan Maslin, her dear, kind Alan, stood within her door. He had come so her at last. It was a foolish man who said: "Whom the gods have abandoned love." Success had crowned her, and now Love, too, had come.

"You have come, after all these years, these long, long years, Alan!"

"They have been long to you, Elizabeth?"

"Very long. You need not be afraid to touch my hands; they are the same you used to kiss—only a little whiter than when I helped Martha with the butter."

"They are very small and white. You have changed, Elizabeth."

"Grown old and ugly?"

"No, no—more beautiful! You are happy?"

"Is one ever happy?"

"But you have all you desired—success, beautiful gowns, and," glancing about him, "you must be rich."

How sore he was! Why did he not take her in his arms and tell her he loved her still? She would prove her love for him by giving up all for his sake—hushing her beautiful voice, and going back to dreary, whitewashed Orroway.

"You are rich?" he repeated.

"Yes. But tell me of yourself, of Orroway. Martha has been married to me since I left the sheep for the goats!"

"You are not married?"

"No; I never had but one lover."

Surely now he would speak!

"I remember you thought love folly. Perhaps it would have been for you; but mine for Anne grows greater every year."

"Anne?"

"My wife, Anne Hilary that was. I thought you knew I married her." Then, looking into her white, drawn face, he queried, anxiously,—

"Are you cold, Elizabeth?"

She clasped her shoulders and smiled brightly, as she answered,—

"A little, Alan. One is always chilly on the heights."

Finished Her Education.

"The parcel postman has just called at the Twickenhams', and, left a football, a bicycle, two cricket balls, a package of sweaters, a pair of spoon oars and a bundle of golf sticks."

"Then their daughter must be home from college and her education finished."—London Figaro.

THOSE "JOBLINSES."

BY ELEANOR ROOT.

"Miss Stebbins, I'm goin' to git married, an' I brought you over my gravestone money!"

I looked up in astonishment. Saphira Joblins stood before me. She refused the proferred seat, and folding her weekly delivered herself of the following:

"Yes, I'm goin' to git married. It aint becus I feel to hate to be called an old maid, nur yet becus I feel to be better'n the rest o' the Joblinses girls. 'Taint none o' that a tall. I'm goin' to git married—well, I'll tell you 'bout it, an' the reason that I'm goin' to git married—you know, I'm a thinkin' on fur years—an' then, I don't like my name! It don't make so much difference when I'm livin', but you know yourself how it is when you're dead. Not 'at I'm livin', they jes' call me Saphiry, an' that's the end of it; but when you're dead—well, you know the row o' Joblinses, father's sisters? Every summer when the summer boarders come to town they go over to the graveyard an' talk about 'em. They say 'Joblins, Joblins, Joblins! Here lies Miss Saphiry Joblins, an' Miss Lucindy Joblins, an' Miss Hannah Joblins, an' Miss Mary Joblins, an' Miss Roxany Joblins, an' Miss Lycady Joblins, an' Miss Clarissy Joblins, an' Miss Remembrance Joblins, an' Miss Ann Joblins!' And then they laff and say 'Why didn't they change their name some o' them?' an' then I feel as if they go huntin' around to poor Uncle Billious's grave stone an' talk about that when Uncle Billous couldn't a changed his name if he's been married a hundred times. An' his first name—he wan't no more to blame than I be for mine. He was glad to him before he was old enough to rightly appreciate it. An' then they say 'Billous Joblins' in such a way, and laff, 'at it makes my blood boil.

"An' then they hunt up Uncle Billous's first wife's grave over in the corner. An' they read on that carved figger of a hand that's pointin' down, and they read them words above it—'Gone Home'—an' they laff again. I should think that any buddy'd have sense enough to know 'at it don't mean that.

"Now Miss Stebbins, perhaps you don't know it, but my middle name's Eglantine. I've hed it in my mind all my life to have it put on my gravestone. I've saved up considerable from my blackberry money, an' my rhubarb money, and hain't eat no butter this summer nur fall, except what I got to the mite societies, and I put it with what father left, and I've got enough to git a handsome stone—and some besides. And I want Eglantine put on it—Mrs. S. Eglantine—but I'll tell you the, last name. It's goin' to be Van Wycke—Mrs. S. Eglantine Van Wycke. It sounds kind o' stylish, don't it?

"Do you mind Hi Van Wycke—him that tended Squire Shuttleworth's lawn last summer? Well, he come back this summer but he was too late for a job, and he was around trying to borrow money of me. I told him no. He come to me. Well, I made a bargain. I hope I hain't demeaned myself—and I know that none o' the Joblinses girls ever done such a thing afore—but it hain't no worse—no it hain't half as bad as them Gould and Asterbilt girls done, a marryin' a man with their money for the titled noblility, for all they're thinkin' of is the things o' this world—and my thoughts is set on the next. That's what I'm a doin't it fur.

"It'll do good all around, fur Hiram was a-goin' to have me his name fur a consideration—that's what he called it—a consideration.

"We're goin' to be married to-morrow mornin' at seven o'clock—so's he kin git the eight o'clock 'commodation. And he haint never comin' back. That's in the bargain. I jes' let him be dun't want to. He's goin' to make his fortune out west. That's what he says. But I don't know. He haint the kind to be forehanded. But I haint no call to worry about him.

"Now about that gravestone money, Miss Stebbins, I want to believe I'm all when I make up my mind; all the Joblinses be, and I feel to believe that Hiram Van Wycke's honest. But he might ask if I couldn't let him have a little more'n I agreed on, after the ceremony, and my heart might agree—they say it's you never can tell—and so I'd a little rather hev the gravestone money here where I can't get at it, and I kin tell him so. Here it is." She untied her handkerchief and emptied its contents into my lap. There were two or three bills and a great quantity of small coin.

"There, Mis Stebbins," she continued "that'll jes' make it. I've been pricin' gravestones for a good long while, and I know jest what I want, an' how much it ought to cost. I'm goin' to be kind the next time I come over, but I got to go home now and do up my lawn dress. It looks bridier'n anything else I got, and it haint been done up sence the last mite society.

Without waiting for a word from me, she departed as noiselessly as she had come. I watched the little limp figure climbing over the back fence, making as much haste as it could to get ready for the bridal of the morrow. I did not know whether to laugh or cry, but I made up my mind that Saphira should indeed have a tombstone "stylisher'n any o' the rest o' the Joblinses."—The Home.

How the Century Plant Was Named.

About two centuries ago a Russian nobleman travelling in Mexico saw and admired the maguey plant, which is a native of Mexico.

The plant was so much admired by the Russian for its beauty and utility that he was eager to have growing specimens in his own country. So, when leaving Mexico he procured some roots to take home to the czar as a present.

On his first visit to court after he reached the capital city, he told of the wonderful plant and asked permission of the czar to present to him the specimens which he had. The czar graciously granted his request, and gave the roots to the court gardener, who promised to give the plants his best attention, but unfortunately before he could plant them properly, as he intended, he was taken suddenly ill and died without having accomplished anything.

Another gardener was appointed. In the meantime the roots lay in the sack in which they were first placed. The new gardener not knowing their value threw the sack away, and it lay unheeded in a corner of the garden day after day. Some time afterward his little daughter picked up one of the roots, and, in a playful mood, planted it, but paid it no further attention. The czar had forgotten all about it. In course of time the ruler died and also she second gardener.

The plant in after years put out a few spikes for leaves, but did not thrive in the cold air of Russia. It grew very slowly and its origin was not known for years and years after the height of twenty feet. Soon many clusters of small buds appeared, which slowly unfolded and became white blossoms. The wonderful plant had bloomed at last!

The gardener said it was 100 years old, and had blossomed in honor of the new czar. Word was sent to him and he and his whole court visited and admired the flower and the plant.

The poor exile from the sunny skies of Mexico has earned its reward and a new name, for ever since that day it has been known as the "century plant."—Godey's Magazine.

Language of Flags.

To "strike the flag" is to lower the national colors in token of submission. Flags are used as the symbol of rank by admirals, and officers using them being called flag officers. Such flags are square, to distinguish them from other banners.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for a parley or consultation.

The white flag is a flag of peace. After a battle parties from both sides often go out to the field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead, under the protection of a white flag.

The red flag is a sign of defiance, and is often used by revolutionists. In our service it is a mark of danger, and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.

The black flag is the sign of piracy. The yellow flag shows a vessel to be at quarantine, and is the sign of contagious diseases. A flag at half-mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with a flag at half-mast to announce the loss or death of some of the men. Dipping a flag is lowering it slightly and then hoisting it again, to salute a vessel or fort.

If the President of the United States goes afloat the American flag is carried in the bows of his barge or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.—School Journal

The Lucky Poodle.

Probably no dog has ever rendered such signal military service or been so honorably recognized as the celebrated poodle Moustache, who shared the victorious fortunes of the French army through most of the wars of the Consulate and of the French empire. He won special honors at Marengo, and was decorated on the battlefield of Austerlitz by Marshal Lannes as a reward for having rescued his regimental standard from an Austrian soldier when in the act of snatching it from the grasp of the standard bearer as he fell, mortally wounded. The plucky poodle drove off the assailant and then, seizing the tattered colors in his teeth, dragged them triumphantly till he reached his own company.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE KEY MONUMENT.

IN HONOR OF THE WRITER OF THE GREAT NATIONAL ANTHEM.

This Poem of Francis Scott Key's Needs No Organization to Push It Along—Its Name and Music Wait the Soul to the Skies.

It was Fletcher of Saltown who said: "Give me the making of a nation's songs and I care not who makes its laws." It is perhaps the irony of fate that this saying was destined to be contradicted in the circumstances of Key's case. Sympathy remained a barren abstraction untranslated into action. For eighty-four years while distant California raised a monument to Francis Scott Key his own Maryland was silent and unready or failed to see the merits and genius of her industrious son. At the entrance of the Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, there has been these many years a splendid monument rising to a height of fifty-one feet to commemorate the services of the author of America's great national lyric. It cost $60,000 and consists of a double arch, under one of which is seated a bronze figure of Key with the manuscript of the "Star Spangled Banner" folded in the hand. However late in the day, therefore, Maryland honors herself and contributes to the gratification of the national feeling by the erection of the new properties in respect of her national songster. Five thousand dollars was recently appropriated by the Maryland legislature, and the balance of the present monument was subscribed by the generous and patriotic hearts that were quickened by the famous song which has now become the national anthem of America. It is usually sung at the close of public meetings and never fails to awaken in audiences that intense thirst for the spirit of freedom which is the cement of the true sons of the Queen" and therefore little liked to rank with "Hail Columbia" o "Dixie," or even "Maryland," or "Yan kee Doodle," or the "Bonnie Blu Flag," or to inspire the strong nations sentiment of the Spanish national air. This poem of Francis Scott Key's need no organization to push it along. It name and music waft the soul to th skies. It springs into the minds of ag and youth alike upon all occasions, an continues to move as with a divine pathos all loyal American hearts as the immortal and undying chant of American independence and freedom.

There is no other national hymn needed while American States raise memorials to the sublime genius of its author.

French Superstitions.

The French superstitions regarding deaths and funerals are all but numberless. "If you meet a funeral while driving you will have an accident before your drive is over unless you turn back," they say. Many a gambler en routs for Monte Carlo will not gamble that day for fear of ill luck, others will bet only at rouge et noir, and persistently on the black. The peasants have at least a hundred superstitions about bees. They believe (and did not Virgil, too, or did he but chronicle it of the unsophisticated?) that bees are bred of dead men's bones and flesh. This seems to be one of the oldest of the current French superstitions, for on a very old tomb at Arles (found in the world-famous Alyscamp) is this inscription: "This has become the home of unhallowed bees."

The peasant pharmacopoeia of France is wonderful—most wonderful. Wine is an ingredient of every prescription. In fever cases it is always the predominant one. The French peasant's faith in fermented grape juice is truly beautiful. If his children are stricken with the measles he gives them beakers of wine, well sweetened with sugar, and a dash of cayenne pepper. For a severe cold he administers a quart of red wine and a melted tallow candle mixed. For scarlet or brain fever he gives eggs, white wine and soot, well beaten together. Not all the superstitions are curious—some are pathetic. A mother, for instance, often buries her dead child with its favorite toy or her own beautiful hair in the coffin, "that it may not feel quite alone."

A Historical Bell.

Hardly of less historical interest than the famous Liberty Bell of Philadelphia was the old clock at which announced the hour on July 4, 1776, when the Declaration of Independence was promulgated.

The bell had been used in earlier days to call assemblages of the citizens of the Quaker City, but after the Revolution it was hushed.

Recently the Philadelphia Press discovered that the relic had been destroyed. It had been bought for a few *hundred dollars by the Roman Catho*lic Church of St. Augustine for its steeple. The whole clock machinery was brought, but the question is yet unanswered as to whether the dials were sold or not. The church was burned down in 1844.

Several of the firemen collected from the mass of bell metal pieces broken by the fall of the tower and carried them home as souvenirs. Several of the fire laddies had these molded into buckles of their organization, the Humane Engine Company, and one of the men promised to bequeath to some museum of Revolutionary relics his belt and buckle, so that the country may have another remembrance of the crowning point in our history.

A Clever Race.

King Alexander of Servia, when only eighteen years old, summoned his Regents to a dinner-party, rose as if to propose a toast, drew a revolver from his pocket, proclaimed himself of age, and dismissed the Regents, whom he packed up all ready in the dining-room, while he went round to assure himself of the fidelity of his guards.

IN A STREET CAR.

BY CID CRANE.

It isn't everyone who can have a fascinating young woman sit upon his knee in a street car in broad daylight without embarrassment on his part. But there is an exception to every rule—so they say—and your humble servant *poses as a living ex*ample of that exception, although how he got into such a great battle. They would have revealed a little inquiring at the break of day in tones of intense patriotism and of tremulous emotion whether that flag, which meant for him liberty or death still waved from the battlements of the beleaguered fort. It would, even, were we to know no more about its author or its origin, have revealed its inspiration as effectively as do the words of the "Marseillaise" betray the stirring scenes of De Lisle' war song in Paris at the end of the last century.

The "Star Spangled Banner" therefore originates from a noble inspiration. It comes from the American heart and appeals to the American heart. It was written rapidly in obedience to strong feelings and while the author was under unusual conditions. There is therefore a glow, a freshness and a sparkling spontaneity about every line and phrase to which not even "My Country 'tis of Thee," while charming as a song and tender enough to be a church hymn, can ever hope to compare. One is only half-American; in the other patriotism glows through the lines. One while affecting to laud *liberty is redolent of that meek sub*mission which saps liberty; the other breathes a noble love of liberty and is interwoven with the spirit of Mars. The music, too, of the "Star Spangled Banner" set to "Anacreon in Heaven,' more powerfully appeals to musical intellects than a poem which seems to have been written to the air of "God Save.

"Mayme" proceeded to comply with her friend's invitation, but I wasn't looking for what happened. She sat herself down in the curve of the lady beside me and on two of mine. I was sorry that I couldn't accommodate her with some more knees. But I didn't have an extra supply with me. Well! You know those big sleeves that the women wear now? Of course! You wouldn't have minded it so much if she hadn't stuck them right into my face. It rather placed a chill upon my enjoyment of the occasion, but then, one doesn't have such a pretty creature to sit upon his lap every day in the week, and on a street car at that, so I tried to overlook it. In fact by stretching my neck a trifle, I did look over it. All that seemed to be lacking was a nice grate fire of anthracite.

If I hadn't been so tormented hungry I would have ridden to the extreme end of the line, rather than to disturb her restful attitude, for "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis better to remain ignorant." But as it was, no. I had to get off pretty soon, and besides, she began to become heavy. I squirmed around a bit, but she did not seem to notice it, although the newspaper artist opposite me did, and mentioned the fact aloud until he got my feet drawn. They were sticking out from under her flowing skirts, beside her own, and I suppose the conductor, who used to be the manager of a dime museum up in Michigan, was thinking about long lost opportunities, et cetera.

I squirmed some more, but with the same result, or rather, without any result at all, for she sat as firm as the tower of Babel. I was growing desperate. I couldn't get off until he got my hands before—or on my knees, more properly speaking. I had to get off at the next square, and unless she voluntarily removed herself from my lower appendages, I should certainly have made her feel unsurprised. I wasn't embarrassed myself, as I said at the beginning. But the Fates were against me, for on she sat; or, to be more lucid, she still sat on me—and a good hundred and thirty pounds gets to be quite a load when you don't have a chance to shift about occasionally. "Well, here goes," thought I, coming to the last resort, and the last square on the avenue.

"Madam," I said timidly, "I have to get off here."

"Well," she replied, over the top of her sleeve, rather suspiciously, I thought, "I'm not hindering you."

"Really, ma'am, I have enjoyed this ride with you immensely, but—"

"Immensely!" she exclaimed.

"But you are sitting on my knees," I said tenderly, as I thought of the mutilated creases in my trousers.

Well! If you could have seen the lump which that lady made, you would have had her immediately as one of those modern feminine athletic enthusiasts. I don't know what followed; I didn't wait to see, but like a man who suddenly thinks of a forgotten engagement, I hustled off the car and finally reached home, where I ate a tremendous dinner without speaking once, much to the wonderment of my good aunt Jane.

All this happened quite a number of months ago, and the young lady is now helping me, to spend that six dollars week. Queer coincidence, isn't it? But, then, this would be a queer world, indeed, if it wasn't so queer as it is, with its queer people and queer coincidences.—Boller Monthly.

HAWAII'S QUEER FLAG.

The Design Taken from the American and British Banners.

All histories that are printed of the Hawaiian Republic fail to tell of the interesting story connected with the adoption of the flag of country. The incident bears a little romance and shows in a way the ingenuity of the natives. The adoption of the emblem dates back about twenty-five years, when the country was still a monarchy and King Kamehameha II was on a tour. As the country was continually visited by the warships of the different nations of the world and the ruler of the Hawaiians had a difficult time to keep his little land from being seized by some foreign power.

The story is handed down by posterity. The exact date of the occurrence is not known, though it was in the year 1873. The King of the "key to the Pacific" awoke one morning to find a French warship anchored safely in the harbor of Honolulu. He became alarmed at the prospect of a conquest, and sent at once for his Prime Minister. He was advised by him to run up a flag and show the visitors that the country belonged to someone and was not a "no man's land," to be pillaged at will by the first foreigners who should happen to call. Acting on the advice, cast about for a piece of bunting to represent his nation, and fell upon an old British flag. This he had run up to the top of his highest flagpole.

The bunting had hardly had time to unfurl itself to the breeze when one of the chief advisers of the King came running to him and told him that he would have to take that flag down, as the first thing he knew if he did not an English man-of-war that was expected at the island would arrive, and, not remembering finding his nation's colors flying over Honolulu, would take possession in the name of the Queen. This frightened Kamehameha, and he started another hunt for a flag. This time the searchers unearthed an American ensign.

Taking the two flags, the ruler had them made into one. The jack in the corner of the English emblem was left, while the stripes of the American flag were added to it. Thus the Hawaiian flag at first had thirteen stripes and a jack the same as the English. The King, when he had disposed of his French visitors, had time to think over the matter. It was decided that it would be better to have only eight stripes, representing the eight islands of the nation, so five stripes were cut off, leaving the eight stripes, with a white one on top. The jack still carries the St. George's cross, the St. Andrew's cross and the St. Patrick's cross, the same as the English.

Soon after the adoption of this flag the whites, who had begun to settle in the island, came more and more into power each year until, as a result, the monarchy was finally overthrown and the republic placed on a firm basis, with white men at the head of the government. The natives, who are superstitious, regard the change in power from the copper-colored people to the whites is directly due to the fact that the white stripe is directly over the red in the flag. They say that had the red been first the whites would *never have gained the ascendency in Ja*pan sufficient to warrant their taking the reins of the government in their hands.

As a result of this superstition the Legislature of Hawaii scarcely ever meets but what some new bill to change the position of the stripes on the flag is brought up. The wisest of the men among the natives are kept constantly at work on the drawing up of such measures, and their members in the congress are every busy trying to put the bills through. The bolder of the natives, as soon as the order of the stripes is changed, the red having the preference, the copper-colored natives will again ascend to the power and have full away in the government.—Chicago Chronicle.

Some Smart Sayings of Mark Twain.

When in doubt tell the truth. Noise proves nothing; often a hen who has merely laid an egg cackles as if she had laid an asteroid. History is better than prophecy; in fact history is prophecy, and history says that, where a weak and ignorant people possess a thing which a strong and enlightened people want, it must be yielded up peaceably. Honesty is the best policy, but sometimes the appearance of it is not. Be slow to look for praise or other people's approval if we do right and try hard, but our own is worth a hun*dred of it, and no way has been found* out to secure that. Truth is stronger than fiction, but it is because fiction is obliged to stick to possibilities; truth is not. Man is the only animal that blushes—or that needs to. The man with a new idea is a crank until the idea succeeds. Let us be thankful for the fools; but for them the rest of us could not succeed. Those people do not respect me who are sharply offended; yet deep down in his private heart no man respects himself. There are several good protections against temptation, but the surest is cowardice. Hunger is the handmaid of genius. Fear is the cause of all talent, but to get the full value of joy you must have somebody to divide it with.

Youthful Reasoning.

Tommy does a great deal of thinking on his own responsibility, and he broke out the other day with: "Papa, I guess old Father Time's kind of a back number, hain't he?"

"What makes you think so, Tommy?"

"Cause if he was right up to date he'd have a mowin' mersheen 'stead of that scythe he carries 'round.—Detroit Free Press.

SIMON'S NEMESIS.

The grey wolf of North America is not often an enemy that man has any great reason to fear. When he is especially hungry, which is chiefly in the winter season, he will band together and hunt anything.

But when I tramped through Green's Timber it was not winter time, and I knew of no reason why wolves should be hungry. Green's Timber is the same growth as is particularly in piece of Jungle forest on the banks of the Snake River in Idaho. I was thrusting my way through the brake and thinking of anything but wolves, and particularly of the fear girl whom I had walked some miles to see that morning. Alma Trelethen had been my dear girl for only a week, and naturally my head was full of her as I tramped cheerily homeward. When I saw a long-coated grey form steal away from a glade as I entered it I scarcely marked the occurrence. But later I turned and saw the brute's blazing eyes and muscles stiffened for a spring. I barely had time to draw a pistol and fire. When it wanted scarcely an hour to sunset another strange thing happened to dispel my confidence. I had left the forest and had already made some way into an extensive prairie through which lay my road, when there fell upon my ear the unmistakable yelp, yelp of a pack in full cry. I looked around and saw close to the edge of the forest a swiftly moving patch of dots that I knew well enough represented thirty or forty wolves coming on with characteristic eagerness. They were two miles away at the nearest point, but about four miles back upon my trail, which I could see plainly they were following. In less than half an hour they would catch me up and there was no place of refuge within reach—except the cabin!

The swamps that lie along the Snake River are a terror to all who know them. In them the poisonous Crater moccasins live and thrive like mites in a cheese. Unlike most snakes, this reptile is credited with a spiteful aggressiveness that makes it far more dangerous than others of its kind. According to all accounts, the man who entered the swomps ran the continual risk of being assaulted and even pursued by the deadly reptiles. But with no certain data to illuminate a danger behind me I was ready and almost anxious to take the risk.

A howl of disappointment told me that the pack had arrived at the margin and dared go no further. I had terrors enough for them, and was particularly glad to reach home—about 8 o'clock. "I thought you were lost," said Simon, my chum, with a scared white face that gave me a cousiderable shock. He looked more terrified than I had a right to fear, and I told him so. He spoke with eyes averted, as he reached down the plates for supper they clattered like castinets. When I had changed my wet garments for dry ones, and when a steaming hash had been placed upon the table, I began to relate my adventure.

I spoke but briefly of having seen Amy. Only a week ago he had seen almost as much of her as I, and I had a suspicion that her engagement to me was sore distasteful. I accordingly hurried on to tell about the wolf in the wood. "What a strange thing," he said, turning away his head and speaking constrainedly. "I suppose the beast was mad. Been eating carrion flesh, likely."

Then I told how I had seen the pack on my trail four miles behind. He got up from the table, with clenched fists.

"How did you get away?" he asked. I told him the rest.

"With a bound through Moccasin swamp," he ejaculated. "It swarms with snakes. No man has been through it before." It struck me that he spoke as though he was disappointed at my escape.

Suddenly he put his hand to his head and sprang into the air, with a piercing shriek filled the room "I'm bitten, I'm bitten! You brought it home," he shouted, and to my terror I saw a long, black body hanging from him, its fangs buried in his neck. Simon had leaned his head against my jacket that was hanging to dry, and the snake must have been in one of the pockets.

The reptile was quickly dispatched, but Simon's case was quite hopeless. The fangs had almost severed the jugular, and a few minutes sufficed for the poison to reach the heart.

Ere he died Simon blurted out a strange confession. He recited his love for Amy and her preference for me. Jealousy, he said, had overcome possession of him; he had last night rubbed my leggins with valerian, an infallible attraction to wolves. Only the swamp could save me from the pack, and that was almost certain death by snakes. I had passed safely through the swamp, and had accordingly brought home with me the instrument of his punishment.

I thought the confession over, and resolved to believe that it was all an imaginary story, the outcome of the potent valerian in the veins. I only hope that this may be so, but I confess that I so far allowed the possibility of another version as to burn those gaiters.—The Golden Penny.

Had No Chance to Tell.

"Don't you come around here with any more of your patent frauds," said Uncle Reuben. "I've been took in once, but you ain't goin' to catch me again."

"What's the matter?" asked the gentleman meekly. "The lightning rods I sold you are all right, aren't they?"

"All right? Well, maybe you call 'em all right; but they've been up for more'n six months now, and the lightning hasn't hit 'em once!"—Chicago News.

MARTIAL LAW FOR KLONDIKE.

England Preparing to Thoroughly Garrison the Northwest.

In no part of the world has the Klondike attracted more attention than in England. The British intellect which is dull and stocky at the best of times, has been stung into a feeling of humiliation at finding that while a Jameson raid into the Transvaal was being organized in London, the keen and irrepressible Yankee was discovering a rich auriferous region either in close proximity to or actually within the Canadian Dominions of the Queen. To have half a dozen statesmen or great dukes defeated, or perilously near to irretrievable disgrace, at the hands of Oom Paul, was simply awful ill luck. But to have John Bull's dear cousin realize all the fruits of discovery in the Northwest was too tantalizing in the extreme. Accordingly Englishmen have wonderfully bestirred themselves within the past six months and having poured capital into various mining properties in British Columbia, under a syndicate which has a royal Duke for its President, they are now engaged in trying to form one huge trust of all the mining claims in the Klondike.

A great scheme of this kind needs something more than money; and therefore besides large subscriptions of capital there has been a quiet enrollment going on in England for what is suphemistically termed "the North West Mounted Police." Instead of being what it pretends to be it is a distinctly military organization. In other words it is a most efficient form of cavalry service under the rather deceptive name of "police." This force already numbers considerably over 1,000 men and is organized under the command of an officer who discharges somewhat analogous duties to those invested in the military wing of the Royal Niger Company of Africa. It is drilled too as a cavalry force, each man carrying a Lee-Metford carbine and in addition to the usual accoutrements, a bush-ranger's knife. It is a belligerent and militant force in the highest sense rather than protective or political.

Formerly the Canadian authorities retained a few scattering officers properly termed a Mounted Police in Manitoba and the Assiniaboine regions to prevent smuggling and to do the usual routine duties of an ordinary nature. But the members were very different in physique, equipment and efficiency from those now enrolled which the British Government have lately sent into that portion of the North West bordering on the Klondike, and since the rush of Americans there in the summer of 1896 the Transvaal failure to be recouped in Alaska? In speaking of these Canadian Mounted Police an English organ of the Army and Navy interests states that "there is hardly a finer force in the world," the italics are those of the writer, from such a source is that these mounted dragoons are intended as a fighting rather than as a police force on our Northern boundary. Of this fact there can be no doubt whatever because in a further description we are told that this British regiment is "composed of men nearly all six feet high, who can ride and fight like any of the red skin heroes of Fenimore Cooper's romances." Such is the character given of these men as standard troops in the British Army. Obviously therefore the word "police" applied to them is either a misnomer or a joke. They would answer excellently in case of a raid. But there is even a more interesting kind of information about this regiment and the work cut out for it, furnished from Canada, where British feeling is more accurately, even if oppressively, interpreted for the benefit of Americans than is always possible in the case of the mother country. An American newspaper was recently so much attracted by this dragoon mobilization on the part of the Canadian Government that it sent interrogatories on the subject amongst others to the editor of the Toronto Empire" of Toronto. The Canadian Editor replied that these were nearly all the sons of well-to-do Englishmen specially recruited for services in Canada, that they were all splendid marksmen and would be loathe to shoot if there was any trouble in the Klondike. Until the Army and Navy Journal corroborated in substance this information there was a belief that these border editors were playfully exchanging cartoons; and that there was really no significance to be attached to the substitution of these dragoons for the old Manitoba Mounted Police. But the concentration of a force of "heroes" that can "ride and fight"; that would not hesitate

A Patriotic Duty.

It is none the less a patriotic duty to care for the needy families left at home by the brave boys at the front than to provide for the armament and support of the soldiers themselves.

There is no doubt but that there are many families throughout the country who have been left in dire straits by reason of the patriotic course of their heads and supporters. By private resources all is being done for these unfortunate families that can be done, but it is not enough

Unfortunately, however, there is no law at present that permits the use of public money for this purpose, except through the humiliating channel of the town's pormaster. The one who would suggest that dependent families of soldiers should resort to the common pauper's means of getting the necessities of life would be a blot upon our country's reputation for faith and honor in the men who are shedding their life blood to maintain its integrity.

What is needed is a levy upon public funds in a way that will not make the beneficiaries feel that they are dependents on charity. The suggestion made by Mayor Seymour, of Newark, for a special session of the Legislature, to be convened for the purpose of empowering municipalities to raise funds for this purpose, was prompted in a spirit viewing such a condition of affairs and striving to relieve them in the best way possible. However, Governor Voorhees' aversion to a special session may prevent taking advantage of this scheme, and communities, in which the stress of soldiers' families is greatest, will have to resort to some other methods to relieve it. Here in Plainfield there are no families, so far as known, who are inconvenienced by the absence of soldiers upon the field of duty, but in towns where companies of National Guards were maintained such cases are frequent.

It is quite within the bounds of proper legislation to provide in some degree for their support when deprived of the earnings that come to them in time of peace.

Gives Jersey a Bad Name.

New Jersey editor of the New York Tribune has a wholesome horror of those Jerseyites who go forth parading the disreputable mosquito as a distinctive State "bird." The Tribune says:

A number of newspapers report that H. Brewster Wills, School Superintendent of Middlesex county, has designed a badge for the teachers of that county to wear at the convention of the picture of a mosquito. To some people it may seem excruciatingly funny, bright and original to thus go forth, proclaiming to the whole country that New Jersey is the home of the mosquito. Others there are, however, too obtuse to appreciate the point of this joke. New Jersey is no more the headquarters of mosquitoes than is Long Island or Staten Island, and in both the latter places the plague is infinitely worse. New Jersey has many things to be proud of; it is not proud of the fact that in some parts of the State mosquitoes abound, and is a poor kind of humor for any Jerseyman or Jerseywoman to go parading around the country representing this commonwealth as being noted chiefly for its mosquito crop.

Must Be Open and Above Board.

It has been a favorite practice among property buyers to conceal the real purchasing price by writing the amount of consideration in real estate transfers as "$1 etc.," but now Uncle Sam has put a stop to this in his new war revenue law.

Hereafter real estate conveyances will have to show the amount paid for a piece of property, instead of the customary "$1 and other valuable consideration" that has been named for the purpose of securing secrecy. The consideration will have to be named, and the deed must bear stamps to the amount required by the price of the property and provided for by the law.

The Bounty Money.

A Washington item brings the plain statement that at least $350,000 in bounty money has been won by the officers and men in the United States Navy off Santiago.

In view of the fact that there is a possibility of one of the Spanish warships being raised and added to our navy equipment, which would be as quieting a ship worth three of four million dollars at a slight cost, the bounty money will bring pretty good returns to Uncle Sam.

But even if there is no returns from the bounty money, we wouldn't complain. The boys on the war ships deserve all they will get, and a good deal more besides.

Yelled Like a Boy.

In the patriotic wind-up of Congress, Representative Fowler, of the Third district, was the enthusiastic member to propose "The Stars and Strips." His cheers were among the loudest and his gestures among the most earnest of hundreds on the floor.

Asphalt or Vitrified Brick.

Like Plainfield, Passaic is pondering over what is the best permanent pavement and is unable to arrive at a confident conclusion as to whether vitrified brick or asphalt is the most durable. Unquestionably both are clean, smooth and beautiful. But it is wear which determines the actual value, and on this point a good deal of doubt seems to exist.

The Passaic News has made the rather novel suggestion that a test be made by paving one-half of a street with asphalt and the other half with vitrified brick, and after a year's use decide in favor of the method that shows the best results. The Paterson Press deories this suggestion as decidedly impracticable. It seems to us that The Press is about right in its conclusions.

The city of Syracuse has spent large sums of money in the last few years in the improvement of its streets, and the official opinion of Mayor Jacob A. Amos on the question is not only interesting but of value as showing practical experience:

The asphalt pavement laid in Syracuse since 1889 cost from $2 to $2.50 per square yard. But the $2 pavement was simply a low bid for one company to get a foothold here, and does not represent a fair cost. The $2.50 is a ten year guarantee. The average price for the five year guarantee of asphalt is about $2.20. The brick average for five year guarantee is $2.15. This is all on a concrete foundation of 6 inches. The cement used is Rosendale. I am informed, and it is my belief, that the average life of the asphalt is from seven to eight years. The greatest length of time that the brick pavement has been laid in Syracuse is five seasons. There have been no repairs on the brick pavement up to the present time. An asphalt pavement and a brick pavement that was laid five seasons ago would be a good comparison. Asphalt has been repaired for the last two years, and the brick has not had a dollar's expense and is in good condition. The brick pavement referred to is Castle Street, which we have within the city of Syracuse. The asphalt I mentioned is on a resident street. In my opinion, the brick pavement will outlast two asphalts, if you get a good brick that is properly constructed. It is very essential to have a good foundation to any pavement.

Poor Postal Service at the Shore.

For several years past newspaper publishers have come to regard Asbury Park as the champion town of the Eastern States in developing complaints from subscribers who either fail to get their papers at all or else receive them after several days of delay. It is a notorious fact the postal facilities in Asbury Park are totally inadequate to the number of people that have to be served in the summer season, and though countless complaints and appeals have been made to the authorities at Washington in reference to the matter, the aggravating condition of affairs still prevails there.

If Postmaster Bird, of this city, was compelled to shoulder a bag and go forth to distribute mail, what would the people of Plainfield think? Un doubtedly they would think that Uncle Sam was not doing the right thing by Plainfield.

Now, that is just exactly what the postmaster of Asbury Park has to do nowadays. And in the summer months Asbury Park is from ten to thirty thousand greater in population than Plainfield. Asbury Park deserves and should receive better attention from the hands of the postoffice department in Washington.

Shyster Lawyers.

Shyster lawyers, who abuse the confidence of clients and appropriate the belongings intrusted to their care, are criminals of the worse sort. When the court disbars them from practice it bring just retribution upon their heads, but a few years spent behind prison bars is what they deserve.

The Court of Errors Friday disbarred Horatio L. Barton, said to be a prominent Trenton lawyer, who, despite the fact that he was paid a large fee by his clients, appropriated $3,250 out of $8 000 put in his hands with which to effect a settlement of litigation.

There is no profession in which the members hold greater confidence to their clients than the legal fraternity. For lawyers to betray their trusts and impose upon clients for their own benefit is dishonest greed of the kind that deserves nothing but the severest condemnation.

County Boards of Election.

By commissioning the Republican members of the County Boards of Election throughout the State, yester day, Governor Voorhees gives an official warning that election time is again rolling around. For Union county John W. Murray, Jr., of Plainfield, was appointed for two years, and Edward C. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, for one year. For Somerset county Charles B. Bateman, of Somerville, was named for two years, and George W. Cooper, of Somerville, for one year.

In the Congressional Field.

Now that Congress has adjourned the New Jersey Representatives have returned to their various homes and are busily engaged in the effort to have their constituents return them to Washington for another term. War, of course, kept them in Washington longer than usual this year, and many of the honorable gentlemen have been restive under their absence from home, lest some antagonistic forces should be undermining their chance for renomination.

Up to the present the Congressman's duty has been to his country, but now he can be expected to view his obligation from the standpoint of pulling all possible wires in the political machine to have himself honored by the title and emoluments again.

Congressman Fowler, of the Eighth district — in which Plainfield is situated—is confident that he will be renominated. He also feels quite certain of his election over any Democrat that can be nominated. He is at his home in Elizabeth now laying plans to capture all the Congressional delegates in the district. He figures that Plainfield Republicans will grant him strong support.

Congressman Howell, of the Third district, has served two terms in the National Legislature, but he is willing, in fact, anxious, for another term. About the only opposition that has been suggested as liable to develop against him was the candidacy of Senator Charles A. Reed, of the borough, but a long time ago the "Tall Sycamore of Somerset" said that he had no idea of opposing Mr. Howell, and so the field seems clear for Howell in the Republican camp. But he will have a popular candidate against him if former Congressman J. J. Gardner should become the Democratic nominee. He is said to be seeking it. A few years ago the Third district, as well as the Eighth, was normally Democratic, but now-a-days it cannot be safely ascribed as such.

Little Heard of Lee Now.

War is the greatest thing on earth for making and breaking popular heroes. In the agitation leading up to the present war Consul General Fitzhugh Lee was the most conspicuous figure in the minds of his countrymen, and in a certain sense was looked upon as the Moses of the American forces destined to lead them to victory in the territory then ruled over by the Spaniards.

He was the first of the new Brigadier Generals to be named by the President, and at the moment his name was on the lips of every patriotic citizens. Since his elevation to a military post, however, Lee's name has rapidly fallen into the background of the thrilling events of warfare, and it is only now and then that we hear of him through the routine channel of military orders sent out from Washington.

The Omaha Exposition.

While the bugles of war are ringing and the thunder of American guns is reverberating throughout the world the grander interests of peace are served with as much energy as ever in their countless phases. None is more significant than the Transmississippi exposition, which has drawn so many additional thousands of visitors to Omaha and serves as a'shining landmark of the progress of the great west. One of the orators at the opening of the big fair illustrated the significance of the event by recalling that in the region of which Omaha is one of the principal centers the redskins wandered at will only 50 years ago, where now there are 22,000,000 people representing $23,000,000,000. Nothing so illustrates the marvelous growth of our nation as the accomplishment of the people of the region which this exposition exploits. Without repeating that descriptive detail of which the public press has had its due share the fact may be emphasized that in organization, buildings and completeness of arrangement, in architectural beauty of structures and adaptation to its purpose as an American exhibition, this magnificent fair scarcely yields even to the Columbian marvel on the shores of Lake Michigan. The best architectural talent of the country was taxed, money was at lavish command and the whole country, specially the west, nobly responded in contributing to the display. The managers had all the previous experience of the country and of the world in planning and managing the enterprise, and within the limits of the purpose they have bettered the instruction.

It is scarcely to be expected that as an exposition of the whole world's products and manufactures it should rank with its two great predecessors. Yet even here it makes a noble show. But as a brilliant and instructive spectacle of what America has achieved, more particularly the greater America of the west, it is a result of which the whole nation may be proud. As an object lesson of the matchless growth of the republic by fixing attention on the evolution of the forces of civilization at the very heart of the continent, the Omaha fair easily carries off the palm from its predecessors, and however commercial the original impulse of the project may have been it has been carried out with commendable liberality and bigness of outlook.

Among the minor signs of the times there are few things that count more eloquently in the development of social civilization than the advance in the art of cookery. The progress made in the last quarter of a century has been noticeable. No country in the world furnishes so great a variety and quantity and fine raw materials of the most wholesome and palatable food as the United States, yet in few countries has food been so generally mismanaged and maltreated in the kitchen. Perhaps the very abundance of food has been responsible for this waste and carelessness of treatment. In France, where compulsion has bred economy in use, it has naturally produced skill and attention to the art of preparation. But as science has begun to educate our people in the importance of little things it has stimulated us, too, in the direction of the cuisine as applied in the household. We have awakened to the truth which Brillat Savarin expressed with some extravagance in his saying, "The discovery of a new dish does more for the happiness of man than the discovery of a new star."

The multiplicity of cooking-schools in all our large towns and cities registers this change in public feeling about the importance of the cuisine. It costs but little more to serve the table with skillfully prepared, wholesome and palatable dishes than with the indigestible abominations so long current among even our middle class families. But it requires some culinary knowledge and the conviction of the importance of good cooking as a primary factor in health and family enjoyment. The cooking-schools have gone far toward this end, and none but the best cookery manuals (and these are little fortunes to the writers) are in demand at the bookshops. The knowledge has passed from the city to the country, and intelligent women generally recognize with the force of personal ambition that it taxes both science and art to make the table what it should be, a source of harmony, pleasure and culture in household life. To this end cooking-schools have immensely contributed. There is no reason why this education should not begin in all our public schools. This would naturally lead to a study of the higher branches of the art in after years. The cooking-school is a great fact and should be systematically encouraged.

The Disease of Worry.

Modern science is beginning to discover that worry is an actual disease. It is a mental disease at first. The habit of worry fastens itself in the mind, as the habit of taking cocaine, morphine or alcohol becomes fixed in the physical system. By degrees the diseased mental state affects, then breaks down the gray matter of the brain and kills the unfortunate individual, who might have resisted the formation of the deadly habit in the beginning.

If worry ever did any good in bettering our affairs or in helping or reforming those whom we permit ourselves to go to pieces over, then something might be said in its favor. But the bald truth is that it injures, only injures, both ourselves and others. It clouds our judgment, making us less capable of attending to our affairs, causing us to carry with us an atmosphere of unrest and unhappiness and driving friends and well wishers away from us. Next it wrinkles our faces, makes the hair and teeth to fall out, ruins our digestion and gives us gout and rheumatism, finally kills us, though often it is called at the last by the name of some other disease.

Pharmaceutical Products explains the fatal action of worry on the brain in these words: "It is as if the skull were laid bare and the surface of the brain struck lightly with a hammer every few seconds with mechanical precision, with never a sign of a let up or the failure of a stroke." In time the brain cells are injured beyond repair all through our own foolishness.

Can we stop worrying? Yes, we can. The way to stop it is just to stop. Think instantly of something else, something bright and pleasant, when the worry habit begins to assert itself. Make yourself think of something else. You cannot do it in a week or in a month, but in a year you can. Our mental states are always within our own control.

The Spanish consul at St. Thomas emitted a stentorian shriek because some American war songs republished in a Danish newspaper insulted, as he alleged, the majesty of the Spanish queen. He succeeded in getting the offender fined on a technicality. The more insulting war songs sung by the months of our great guns have not, however, been effectively resented so far.

The Chinese full bloods and half breeds are the most prosperous and thrifty tradesmen of the Philippine islands and have done more than any other class in developing their wealth. We shall needs split hairs with great dexterity in modifying our own laws anent the Celestials when we take permanent possession there.

It is pleasant to observe that recognition by government of gallantry in battle is likely to be more promptly made in this war than it was in the last. Medals of honor and similar tributes have been strung along over 20 years, and there are many brave exploits still left unrewarded.

AT PINE GROVE FARM.

Many Summer Visitors Are Enjoying Life There.

Pine Grove Farm is the name of a beautiful country seat located in North Plainfield near the mountains and not far from Rock avenue avenue. It is under the direction of Miss Carrie J. Debele, a sister of C. T. Debele, assisted by Mrs. Elizabeth Bailey, who has opened this place for the first time. The spot is an ideal one and she has a number of friends from Philadelphia who have come to live at the place for the summer months. Many attractions are offered for them and altogether life will be quite gay. Last Sunday there were guests present to the number of sixty, mostly Philadelphians, and those who are at present stopping at the farm include Mrs. E. L. Steel and daughters, Edward Steel, Willard Kreps, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Cook, Miss Laura Cook, Miss Minnie Trout, Miss Ella Senn, Miss Marguerite Heritage, Mrs. Amos H. Hall and daughters, all of Philadelphia.

Next Monday evening it is proposed to have a flag-raising, and an effort will be made to secure Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., of this city, to conduct the exercises. Saturday evening of this week the guests will enjoy a strawride over the mountains.

Thanked for Flowers

Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, read a letter Sunday morning from Dr. Judson, of the Judson Memorial church, of New York, in which the Doctor thanked the members of the Christian Endeavor Society for the basket of flowers which have been sent to the address connected with that church during the past weather, and telling how much the flowers were appreciated by the poor among whom they were distributed.

CATHOLIC CLUB ELECT.

JOHN H. HILLMAN CHOSEN PRESIDENT FOR A NEW YEAR.

New Members Elected and Financial Report Showed Club to be Prosperous—The Club to Purchase a New Piano.

The annual meeting of the Catholic Club for the election of officers, reading of reports and the transaction of other business, was held Monday in the clubhouse. The meeting was largely attended, and much interest was shown.

Four new members were elected, John Reardon, John McKenna, Patrick Fahey and Albert Traynor. The club now has 131 active members, 10 junior members and 110 associate members, besides a large number of honorary members, many of whom are at the front with the army.

The following officers were elected: President, John H. Hillman; vice-president, Michael J. Nevins; secretary, Frank T. McInersey; financial secretary, Edward Flynn; directors to serve until July 1st, 1900, George J. Tobin, Patrick Traynor, Thomas J. Comerford and John Moran. Philip Butscher was elected librarian.

A committee of three, Thomas J. Comerford, Frank Blatz and J. J. Goff, was chosen to purchase a new piano in place of the old one.

The financial report showed that the finances of the club are in a healthy condition.

The committee on entertainments reported that there was a balance of about $71 left from the strawberry festival.

The officers were installed amid enthusiasm, and responded with short speeches that were heartily applauded

PROPOSED COUNTY BOULEVARD VIEWED.

Board of Freeholders Went Over the Route Monday.

MR. BERGEN WENT ALONG.

IDEA WAS TO ACQUAINT FREEHOLDERS WITH WHAT HAS TO BE DONE.

Started from Elizabeth in the Morning and Drove to Plainfield, Inspecting the Different Changes That Will be Necessary to Convert the County Road Into a Great Boulevard With the Trolley On.

Five three seated carriages formed a procession that followed along the line of the proposed trolley from Elizabeth to Plainfield Monday, examining the different changes that are required to convert the county road into the great boulevard with the trolley road in the centre as proposed some time ago by Frank Bergen of Elizabeth. The occupants of the five vehicles were the members of the Board of Freeholders of Union county and their various officials who will be called upon to vote on the advisability of the boulevard at the next meeting of the board.

It was more of the nature of an educational feature than anything else that the procession of Freeholders and other county officials took the day off to drive from Elizabeth to this city. It was the wish of those interested that every Freeholder should thoroughly understand the situation and the changes to the topography of the country made necessary by the proposed widening of the roadway. So the members of the Board were invited to personally inspect the route and hear an explanation of the changes made right on the ground, so that they could exactly see where they stood and just what inconvenience it would cause.

It was nine o'clock yesterday morning that the Freeholders and others of the party gathered at Keron's livery stable, Elizabeth, where the transportation was awaiting them. The party consisted of Director J. Frank Hubbard, of this city, Freeholders King, Adams, Hulskamper, Miller, Brucklacher, Mc.andless, Robison, Higgins, Wahl, Tier, Ehrlich, Farrell, Burnett and Scudder. Freeholders Roll and Swain, both members of the county road committee, were absent but they had both been over the road many times and were thoroughly conversant with the situation. The others of the party were Clerk Byno, of Rahway; Collector Wood, of Elizabeth; County Attorney W R. Codington, of Plainfield, and County Engineers Frank J. Hubbard, of Plainfield, and Bauer, of Elizabeth. There was also present the real estate committee, whose duty it had been to estimate the cost of the property to be absorbed by the new boulevard, Louis Quiley, of Elizabeth; J. D. Runyon, of Plainfield, and J. N. Wilcox, of Westfield.

Frank Bergen was along and did his best to point out the advantages of the scheme with which he was perfectly conversant. The two county engineers, Messrs. Hubbard and Bauer, had their complete sets of maps and estimates with them, and told the Freeholders just how the road was going through, buildings to be moved and cost of the various improvements.

They looked especially at the Cranford river and the bridging of that waterway; also the advisability of going through Cranford and Westfield with the boulevard its full width, 100 feet.

There were frequent halts all along the road and the party often left their carriages to examine the buildings and see just what the engineers had planned to do. The morning was entirely occupied in looking over the road from Elizabeth to Westfield.

The whole party stopped at Grogan's Hotel, Westfield, and partook of a bountiful meal that had been prepared. After an hour and a quarter spent in enjoying the repast and allowing the horses to rest, the procession moved on toward Plainfield.

The trip to Plainfield was a shorter one and the obstacles in the way of the boulevard were not as numerous so it was only three o'clock when the party reached here.

They were driven to Tier's lake house where Freeholder J. H. Tier treated them to his ice cream. For the time being, the officials waived the consideration of the important business of the day and then followed a discussion in which the situation was talked over informally.

While there was no formal vote or expression of opinion of the various members of the Board, most of them volunteered the opinion that the proposed boulevard would be a good thing if it was in the bounds of possibility. The possibility of its being built seemed to rest on the cost of the great thoroughfare. If it could be done for a figure which some trolley corporation would be willing to give, then they thought that the boulevard should be made. If, however, the property owners along the line stand out for exorbitant awards for their property, the whole affair may fall through.

After the discussion the party departed, some by train and some by carriage.

CHANGES AT WHITE'S.

Millinery Department Has Been Moved to the Second Floor.

Edward White, the West Front street dry goods merchant, who is continually making changes in his store to better accommodate his customers, has just completed another change that will meet with approval at once.

The millinery department has been moved from the centre of the new store to the second floor where there is double the room formerly occupied, and connecting with the ladies' parlors and waiting rooms. The office, which adjoined the millinery department, has been moved to the third floor.

The space left has been prepared to receive all the bargains offered at special sales, and has been named the "Bargain Centre." In it will be found all the bargains as advertised.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Had to Kill the Horse.

A valuable horse, one of a team owned by Mr. Randolph, of Bound Brook, dealer in mineral waters, had to be shot last Saturday evening on Watchung avenue between the bridge and Chatham street. Mr Randolph was furnishing mineral waters for a picnic on Johnston's Drive, and the horse became unruly. In kicking the animal broke one of its hind legs. Marshal Wise was called upon to assist in taking care of the horse, but it was finally necessary to shoot the animal The shooting was done by Frank Vermeule with Marshal Wise's revolver.

Jury in Case of Banks Against Hoagland Give a Verdict for Fifty Cents, But Defendant Must Pay $8 in All.

William T. Banks, of East Second street, and Augustus Hoagland, a neighbor, are at law Monday over the ownership of a second hand oil stove which both claim as their property. The stove originally brought $10, and now Banks estimates its value at one half that sum, Hoagland, on the other hand, says that it was old and worn when he took it from Banks' barn to his house, and it required three new wicks and other repairing to make it fit for use.

The trouble between these neighbors started sometime ago when Hoagland worked for Banks. Banks is a tallow dealer, and the former traveled around the county for him purchasing fat and hides. One night near Evons Hoagland collided with a trolley car in which the wagon was injured and he was hurt.

The trolley company settled with the injured man, and Hoagland says that Banks told him that when he wanted him to come back to work for him he would let him know.

Some time before this Banks said that he missed an oil stove which had been left in the barn. When he asked Hoagland what had become of it the latter told him that he had taken it. Banks says that he told him to be sure and return it, but that he has never done so. Therefore Banks brought suit against him in tort.

Hoagland claims that Banks told him he could have the old stove, and so he took it away.

Banks was represented by Walter L. Hetfield, who asked the jury if any of them had read the article in last night's Press about the coming trial, and the estimate which Hoagland put upon the stove. Mr. Hetfield evidently thought the statement would mislead the jury, but they all said it would not.

Hoagland was represented by Counselor S. S. Swackhamer and the jury were John Rose, Abraham Rockafellow, Leon Spangenberg, Chas. Howard, Chas. Wood and Jas. H. Searing.

The case was given to the jury about noon, and after deliberating for ten minutes they returned with a verdict of 50 cents in favor of the plaintiff. Hoagland demanded the jury, which will cost him $4.25. The costs of the court amount to a little over $3, which, with the 50 cents, will make the neat little sum of $8, which Hoagland will have to pay beside the counsel fees.

The plaintiff was satisfied with the verdict, but Hoagland says that he will appeal the case. He claims that the stove was given to him, and that the suit was brought through malice because he settled with the street railway company without Banks' consent.

Heavy Fan Fell With a Crash.

One of the large electric fans used to cool the atmosphere in Armstrong's pharmacy became loosened Sunday morning and fell with a great crash to the floor several feet below. The weight of the fan and the motor by which it is operated was enough to tear a hole in the floor that indicated that if anyone had been under it when the accident occurred there would have been serious injuries sustained.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement is announced of Miss Helen Augusta Hazen, daughter of Mrs. Charles P. Hazen, of 905 Watchung avenue, to Albert Sampson, son of William H. Sampson, of 229 East Fifth street. Miss Hazen is attending Mt Holyoke College, and Mr Sampson is engaged in business in Jersey City.

SEASON IS FAIRLY OPENED AND MANY GUESTS ARE THERE.

Saturday Night Hops Will be Given Every Week—August Will be a Gay Month—Those Who have Engaged Rooms

The summer season is now fairly opened at Mountain Park Inn, and there are a large number of guests stopping at this favorite resort. The first hop of the season was given on the evening of the Fourth of July and it was an auspicious event. The hops will be continued every Saturday evening and Manager Moulton will perhaps see that every comfort is given to those who stop at the Inn. For the month of August nearly every room and cottage is engaged, and the season gives promise of being one of the most lively since the Inn was opened two seasons ago. Many Plainfield people are affording themselves of the opportunity of spending an afternoon and evening at the Inn and enjoying a first-class dinner there.

The following are the guests who have taken rooms at the Mountain Park for the season:

Mr. and Mrs. John Byers, John Byers Jr., Valparaiso, Chili; Mr. Claud, Philadelphia; James Stikeman, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Herbert, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Stigt, and Richard Stint, Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Benjamin, Mrs. A. Archer, Mr. and Mrs. A. Chalmers, Miss Elsie Chalmers, Master F. H. Chalmers, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stillwell, Miss Aid Stillwell, Miss Ethel Stillwell, Miss Hazel Stilwell, Master Stillwell and maid, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stickney, Miss Stickney, Mr. and Mrs. Alexandia Strazewski, all of New York.

MUST RETURN THE WAGON.

Justice Moffett Decides in Favor of the Somerville Man.

According to the decision rendered by Justice Moffett in his court Monday, Augustus Baldwin, of West Fourth street, will have to return to Elijah Stevens, of Somerville, a rubber-tire road wagon which he purchased from him a year ago, and has since neglected to pay for. Baldwin bought at the same time a set of harness and a lap robe, the whole amounting to $104. Baldwin gave notes to cover this sum, but did not meet them as he agreed.

Stevens brought suit in tort. Pope & Runyon represented the plaintiff, and Councilman Walter L. Hetfield represented the defendant. The case was tried Saturday morning, and Monday afternoon the Justice handed down his decision. Baldwin must return the wagon and pay $15 for the harness besides the costs of the court.

Baldwin, through his counsel, said that he was willing to return the wagon today, but demanded back the notes, which the plaintiff refused. Upon this Baldwin says he will not leave the wagon. Stevens says he will appeal the case.

Big Flagging Contract Finished.

Alexander Kane, the contractor, has just completed a large contract for flagging that was commenced last November. Both sides of West Eighth street, from Plainfield avenue to Spooner avenue, and Spooner avenue, from Eighth street to Ninth street, have been finished. In addition to this, Kane has been flagging the Plainfield avenue side of the lots located on the corner of Plainfield avenue and West Seventh street and Plainfield avenue and West Eighth street.

Death of John E. Wyckoff.

The death of John E. Wyckoff, son of the late Peter Wyckoff, of West Fourth street, occurred at Jersey City, last Saturday, after a long illness with asthma. Mr. Wyckoff was formerly a resident of this city, and he has many friends here who will be shocked to learn of his death. He was fifty three years of age and he leaves a wife. The funeral services were held from the late residence, 361 Fourth street, Jersey City, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

A FINE WATER TRIP.

Hudson River and Peoples Line Attractive to Tourists.

There is indescribable splendor in the sunset or sunrise on the Hudson river, and the best opportunity for appreciating the beauties of nature along this majestic stream is a trip taken on one of the boats of the Peoples Line — maintaining the finest river craft in the whole country. The boats leave Albany and New York every evening when there is yet time to see Old Sol go down in all his glory, and while they are still plying towards their destination at the other end of the line he has traveled his course around the globe and appears on the horizon to greet the passengers with his early morning rays.

But the sunset and sunrise are mere incidentals of the trips afforded by the steamers of the Peoples Line. To go the length of the Hudson on either the Adirondack or Dean Richmond is a journey that lingers long in the mind as one of the pleasureable memories of recreation days. The Adirondack and the Dean Richmond are magnificient crafts, fitted throughout in a sumptous manner and officered by crews whose duties seem determined only by the greatest pleasure that can be given the patrons of the line.

Plainfielders who are in doubt as to just where they will spend their vacations cannot do better than to lay out plans so as to take in a trip on the Hudson by one of the Peoples Line boats They will never regret it.

Boats leave New York and Albany every week day evening at 8 o'clock. For particulars address M. B. Waters, general passenger agent, Peoples Line Steamers, Albany, N. Y.

SOMERSET COUNTY FAIR.

Arrangements for the Annual Exhibition Now Being Made.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Somerset county fair, held Tuesday night, Chas. L. Voorhees was elected general superintendent The board has decided to eliminate pacing from class 2, 2:24, purse $250 formerly open to both trotting and pacing.

It was stated at the meeting that poultry fanciers in the State had black-listed the Somerville fair on account of the failure of the old association to pay the premiums. The directors will endeavor by means to establish confidence among exhibitors in the new association, which is financially able to meet all its obligations.

The speed entries for this season the directors report to be unusually promising, applications for the entry of a large number of noted horses has already been made.

A DAY OF THANKSGIVING.

Sentiment of President's Proclamation Echoed in Churches.

IN PRAYER AND PRAISE.

Local Pastors All Unite in Giving Thanks For Successes of Our Victorious Army and Navy—Prayers Were Made for the Restoration of Peace.

A thanksgiving service was held at the First Baptist church Sunday morning and was attended by a large congregation. The musical part of the service consisted of a soprano solo by Miss Harris and a duet by Mrs. Ward and Mr. Taylor, and were in keeping with the spirit of the service. Rev. Dr. Yerkes, pastor, gave an impressive talk on thanksgiving in accordance with President McKinley's proclamation. He praised the President for his expression of Christianity at such a time as this. He recited the many important incidents in connection with the present war and showed plainly how God is leading the American navy and army forward to success. He urged all to be thankful and to praise God for His wonderful goodness. In speaking about the disposition of the Island of Cuba, he said, that the people of that island should not be allowed to control it, as they are wholly unfit to do so. He also spoke of the glorious opportunity that will be opened to the missionaries of the world to do a grand work in the newly acquired lands

There was a very large attendance at the Trinity church Sunday morning, when a service in harmony with the recent proclamation issued by President McKinley was held. The American flag was draped attractively over the pulpit, and everything about the service was of a praise and thanksgiving nature. The pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., and the congregation read responsively Psalms 116 and 111, and the Scripture lesson as read by Pastor Schenck was Psalms 124, 125 and 145. The hymns sung during the service were all of a thanksgiving order. The pastor's sermon was from Psalms 98 1, and was full of praise for the valiant navy and army of the United States, and of thanksgiving to God for the way he is leading this Nation in the present conflict. He said all should thank God for a Christian President and Christian leaders, both in the army and navy. At the close of the service Rev. Mr. Todd, of Dunellen, offered a fervent prayer.

Rev. Charles E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, took President McKinley's proclamation as the subject of his sermon Sunday morning, and preached a discourse in which he held up to the eyes of his congregation that God is with this land in their war with Spain. Mr. Herring first read the entire proclamation, then chose his text from the prophecy of Hosea, 1st chapter, 5th verse.

Mr. Herring said that there were two things in the proclamation that we ought to observe; first, to give thanks for what God has done; second, to pray for restored peace. Mr. Herring spoke of the action of Captain Phillips of the Texas in publicly acknowledging that he believed in God, and said that only because God is with us, are we able to wage war so successfully with the enemy.

A patriotic service was held Sunday morning in the Congregational church. President McKinley's Thanksgiving Proclamation, issued last week, was read by the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, after which the Long-Meter Doxology and the last verse of America were sung and prayer was offered. The sermon was patriotic in tone, and unusually strong and impressive. After the benediction, the congregation rose, and stood while the organist, Mrs. R. T. Barnes, played "The Star Spangled Banner." An American flag was appropriately draped over the piano.

A large and interesting congregation was present at the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday morning, in response to the President's proclamation which was read in the church and formed exclusively the basis of a powerfully patriotic and most excellent address from the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy. Special prayers and lessons were excellently rendered. All present felt the enthusiasm of patriotism from this most interesting service.

The day of thanksgiving, as appointed by President McKinley in a proclamation issued last week, was observed in the First M. E. church Sunday morning. The President's proclamation was read by the pastor, Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, during the morning service and was followed by an earnest prayer of thanksgiving along the lines suggested by the Chief Executive of the nation.

At the Crescent Avenue church Sunday morning, the pastor, Rev. Dr. D. Richards, read the President's proclamation and preached a special sermon upon the times, using as his subject the hand writing on the wall.

A special prayer was offered in the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday morning for the success of our army and navy in Cuba.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

The Young Christians to Meet at Saratoga Springs This Week.

The annual convention of the Epworth Leagues, which is to be held in Saratoga, July 14th to 18th, promises to be one of the most largely attended and productive gatherings ever held for the benefit of young people by the Second General Conference District of the Methodist Episcopal church. In this district, which comprises the New York, New York East, Troy, New Jersey, Newark, Delaware and Wilmington conferences, the League has a constituency of 125,000 members. Every church has a chapter the League and each is entitled to one delegate besides the pastor in the coming convention. An excellent programme has been prepared, with addresses by prominent speakers and also reports and discussions on all phases of League work by popular leaders. To afford leaguers and their friends an opportunity to attend the convention at nominal cost, an excursion will leave foot of Franklin street, New York, Thursday morning, (July 14th,) at 10 a. m. Lunch will be served en route and $10 will cover all expenses from New York for the entire four days.

There will also be side trips to Lake George, Saratoga Lake and other places of interest.

Plainfield leaguers should plan to meet the special train which leaves New York Thursday morning.

A WORTHLESS CLEW.

No Trace of George Scherer, Who Mysteriously Disappeared Recently.

About four weeks ago, George Scherer, of Somerset street, left town very unceremoniously. He also left his tailoring business, wife and family. Since that time nothing has been heard of him. In the meantime Mrs. Scherer has been endeavoring to learn of her husband's whereabouts, but without success. Saturday she heard that he was locked up in New York. She informed Chief Marshal Wilson, of the borough, and asked him to find out whether the report was true. The officer telephone to New York this morning and was told that no one by that name was in confinement in the city. The search will be continued for the missing husband until he is found.

IN DR. RICHARDSON'S PULPIT.

Pastors Who Will Officiate During the Vacation Period.

During the absence of Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, his pulpit will be occupied by the following clergymen: Next Sunday Rev. Dr. Main, of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, will preach in the morning, and in the evening the pulpit will be occupied by Rev. A. A. Phelps. The following Sunday, July 24th, Rev. Dr. T. F. Chambers, of this city, morning and evening. July 31st, Rev. Frank Fletcher, of New Market, morning and evening. During the first two Sundays in August, Rev. Dr. Steelman, of Salt Lake City, will preach, and during the last two, Rev. Dr. S. Gifford Nelson, of Brooklyn.

FINDERNE OVERCOME.

THE CLINTON AVENUE CLUB DEFEATED HER AT BASEBALL.

After the First Inning the Local Nine Had Everything Their Own Way—Finderne Team Went Home Early.

It only took six innings to convince the baseball team of Finderne that the Clinton Avenue Club far outclassed them. Then the Finderne boys wanted to go home. The game was played on the Clinton avenue grounds Saturday afternoon. The victory of the home team was by a score of 22 to 8.

Bulmer was in the box for the Clinton Avenue team, as usual, and Townley caught him. Bulmer had not done any pitching for two weeks so his arm was a trifle stiff when the game opened. The Finderne boys came in with a whoop and a yell and batted out five runs before the local players woke up and put an end to the fun. Two runs were scored for the Clinton Avenue Club in the first inning.

That was all the fun the visitors had. The Clinton Avenue aggregation woke up to the fact that good batting was needed. The visitors had three pitchers with them, and it took them all to hold the Clinton Avenue boys down to 22 runs. Had they not been so well supplied with pitchers, it is doubtful whether the C. A. C. team would have ever stopped.

Bulmer settled down to hard work and the visitors were able to score only three more runs in the next five innings. At the close of the sixth inning, the Finderne captain expressed a desire to return from whence he came. He had had enough and was perfectly willing to acknowledge the fact. The game last strung out pretty well and the home team felt that they had had the worth of their money. So the game was declared at an end.

MRS. O'DONNELL GOES TO JAIL.

Her Husband is Now Serving Five Months in the Same Place.

City Judge DeMeza Saturday sentenced Mrs. Mary O'Donnell, of South Second street, to sixty days in the county jail in lieu of a $25 fine for illegal liquor selling. Mrs. O'Donnell was convicted about a month ago, and sentence was deferred until last week in the hope that she would not sell any more.

But the police say that things have been going on the same as usual there, and so the Judge put this sentence on her. Her husband is serving a term of five months in the county jail for the same offense.

Howard Bennett Not Hurt.

The parents of Howard E. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. B F. Bennett, of the borough, wish to deny the report that has been circulated about their son being shot at Santiago. His regiment, the Ninth, of New York, is still stationed at Chickamauga Park, Ga., and the parents received a letter from that place from their son Saturday. He writes that he is in good health and enjoying camp life.

The Right Sort of Employers.

Friday night was a gala night for the employees of Hahne & Company's palace stores, in Newark, for on that night their employers gave a trolley party to which were invited all clerks. Twenty cars were provided, and the parties rode to Bergen Point were a claim bake was prepared for them. Two bands were with the party, and the cars were gaily decorated with banners and ribbons.

Dislocated His Shoulder Blade.

Last Saturday afternoon while William J. Collins, of Brooklyn, was hurrying up the steps at the North Avenue station, he slipped and fell with the result of dislocating his shoulder blade. He was assisted by friends to the home of Dr. Endicott where the bone was set. Later Mr. Collins was able to return to his home.

An Early Morning Bath.

Alfred B. Marsh, of Plainfield avenue, was treated to an involuntary bath this morning in Green brook. He was paddling his canoe around in the brook when the frail shell upset, and landed him in the water. He was not hurt, but thoroughly wet through.

Again Touching the Good Word.

The many friends of John Hull, of Grove street, will be pleased to learn that he has again resumed teaching at the First Baptist church Sunday-school. He has taken G. H. Batchelor's class of men. Mr. Batchelor is now acting superintendent and will hold that position until fall when the annual election of the Sunday-school will be held.

A Dangerous Spot.

At the corner of Park place and Grove street there is a dangerous spot where a serious accident will occur some day. The drain pipe that crosses the street at that point projects out of the ground and in case a cyclist should strike the piece of iron at night it would cause severe injury.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement of Miss Marguerite Yerkes, daughter of Silas Yerkes, of East Sixth street, to Claude E. Lasher, of Poughkeepsie, is announced.

TESTIMONY EXCITED HIM

"I'LL F X YOU" CRIED ONE WITNESS TO ANOTHER IN COREY CASE.

J. D. Bremmer, of the Borough, Was Unduly Disturbed by What Joseph Gavin Recited in Court in Chancery.

"I'll fix you!" "I'll fix you!" cried the witness for the plaintiff, and, it is alleged, he shook his fist violently under the nose of the defendent's witness. As a result of this unusual little incident that occurred during the noon intermission in the Court of Chancery at Newark Friday, during the hearing in the Corey divorce case, the indignant witness for the plaintiff, J. D. Bremmer, of the borough, nearly landed behind the bars.

Friday was the day set for the continuation of the hearing in the case before Advisory Master Washington B. Williams. In the morning, Joseph Gavin, of Mountain avenue, North Plainfield, appeared as a witness for the defendent, Mrs. Corey. His testimoney was considered of considerable value.

The noon recess was begun and Gavin walked to the back of the court room, where he encountered Bremmer. Now Gavin says, and Bremmer does not deny it, that Bremmer called aloud that he would fix him and that he shook his fist under his nose. Gavin told his attorneys, Codington & Swackhamer, and they immediately spoke to the Advisory Master.

Bremmer was summoned before the Court. He was told that it was the duty of the Court to protect its witnesses, and when he interfered with the Court he rendered himself liable to a visit behind the bars. Bremmer tried to explain that he meant he would "fix" Gavin in only a figurative way by the testimony that he would give later, but the Court was not inclined to see the matter in that light.

After a stern admonition to have nothing to say in the future to any of the other witnesses, the Court finally dismissed Bremmer.

DRIVING ROD BROKE ON ROYAL BLUE LINER.

THE TRAIN WAS RUNNING SLOWLY.

Broken Piece Crushed The Cab, But Unfortunately No Serious Damage Resulted.

The Royal Blue Line express train, which passes through this city at 12:10 noon, was delayed near the Fanwood station Monday for over an hour by the breaking of a driving rod on the left side of the engine. After considerable work the broken pieces of the rod were taken off and the train proceeded on its way with only one driving rod. Another engine was procured at Dunellen.

The train was running very slowly at the time and the broken ends of the rod did not do any damage except to break through the floor of the cab. Had the train been running at full speed, and the fireman been sitting at his place on the left side of the cab, he would have probably been killed and a terrible accident resulted.

NEW YORK LAWYER WAS MAD.

He Accused Chief Grant of Not Enforcing the Law in All Cases Alike.

A New York lawyer accused Chief Grant, of the police force, with partiality last Monday at the depot, because the chief had not ordered his officers to arrest certain people who, this lawyer said, were continually riding on the sidewalk on Stelle avenue. The lawyer lives on that avenue, and has been warned by the police that if he persists in taking the sidewalk in preference to the road hereafter, he will be ordered to appear before the City Judge. Some high words were flung back and forth, much to the amusement of the commuters.

Death of Mrs. Hand.

Monday morning occurred the death of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Hand, of 323 East Front street. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from the house. Interment will be in the family plot at Scotch Plains. Mrs. Hand made her home with her brother, J. E Flannery. She leaves a son, Edward L. Hand, who keeps a hotel at Scotch Plains. The deceased was born in England, and came to this country 25 years ago. She had been an invalid for some time, and her death was looked for. Her mother, Mrs. Mary E. Flannery, was with her at the end. Mrs. Hand was 50 years old.

Must Have Band Stand to Have Concerts.

Ben. LaVere, the leader of the Queen City Band, says that if the people of Plainfield want open-air concerts in the City Park they must erect a band-stand at that place.

Where Politicians Gather.

The National convention of Republican League Clubs will be held at Omaha this week. A number of Republican delegations from New Jersey are in attendance.

The Chief Takes a Fall.

BIG HIGH BRIDGE FIRE.

BUSINESS PART OF THE TOWN GUTTED EARLY THIS MORNING.

No Protection in the Town and Help Was Summoned From Other Towns —The Damage Amounts to $20,000.

At an early hour Saturday morning a fire wiped out the business centre of High Bridge and left five of the principal buildings of the place a heap of smoking ruins. The blaze was a destructive one, causing damage amounting to $20,000.

At 4:30 o'clock flames broke out in the baker shop in the principal business block of the place. The origin of the fire is not known but it is thought that the fire started in some manner from the ovens. The flames attained much headway before they were discovered by the watchman. They rapidly spread through that building which contained also the barber shop and meat market, and set fire to the Rialto building, a three-story structure, the largest in High Bridge. The first floor is used as a general store and the others as the town hall, amusement hall and offices.

There is no organized fire department in High Bridge but the whole town turned out and formed a bucket brigade. Aid was telegraphed for to Phillipsburg and Clinton and several steamers were sent together with a quantity of hose. They came by rail.

The efforts were mainly confined to prevent the flames from spreading. The large Catholic church and the rectory adjoining went up in smoke and flame. The residence of Noah Hoffman was also completely destroyed.

The flames were finally quelled at 6:30 o'clock after five buildings had been completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $20,000, of which $16,000 was covered by insurance.

TROUBLE OVER CHICKENS.

Paradise Alley People Air a Dispute in Court.

The attention of the City Judge was taken up Saturday during the court hour with a case, the parties to which are neighbors residing in that delightful and peaceful part of the city known as "Paradise Alley." Almost every week some representatives of the alley get in the police courts, but Saturday the denizens from both ends of it packed into the court room in such numbers that the small boys had to find standing room outside.

The complainant was Mrs. Ida Levine, a Polish woman, who accused her neighbor, Wolff Miller, with assaulting her by taking hold of her arm and throwing a wash basin full of water over her. The trouble arose over some chickens which Mrs. Levine interested herself in, although they did not belong to her, and which she accused Miller of pelting. Mrs. Levine was represented in court by Lawyer S. S. Swackhamer, who succeeded in having Miller held in $200 bonds to keep the peace.

NEARLY ARRESTED FOR BURGLARY.

E. L. Gifford, Returning Late at Night, Was Taken for a Desperate Villian.

Surrounded by a cordon of police and interested neighbors, E. L. Gifford, of East Second street, came very near being arrested for burglarizing his own home. It happened Friday night when Mr. Gifford returned to his home late at night. He was supposed to be away for the summer and no one know that he was around.

U. B. Crane lives next door. He saw a light in the house and saw a man moving stealthily about the rooms. Leaving Frank Denckian, another neighbor, to watch the house with bated breath and a firm resolve to bravely attack the burglar should he venture out, Mr. Crane hurried down town and secured two policemen who came up prepared to capture some desperate villian.

They surrounded the house and at last caught a peep of the noctural visitor who was then recognized to be no other than Mr. Gifford himself. He was signalled and explanations followed.

Needed Street Repairs.

Madison avenue, between West Fourth and West Seventh streets, is receiving some much needed attention. The street was in terrible condition. Now Street Commissioner Gavett has started one of his gang of laborers there and the steam roller will complete their work.

Victim of Poison Ivy.

Mrs. George Dennick, of West Third street, was poisoned by poison ivy the first of the week. The poison seems to have appeared principally on her face, which is so badly swollen as almost to close her eyes.

Building in the West End.

Since selling the lot for the new fire department building, Elston M. French has sold two more of his lots near Grant avenue to parties who intend building this summer.

Expects to Go to Manila.

George Bolaterli, of the borough, has enlisted in Co. K, of the N. J. Vols., and has been sent to Ft. Hancock. He expects to be sent to Manila.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

MARRIAGE OF MISS JESSIE G. GIBBONS TO CLIFFORD C. SCHOOLEY.

A pretty wedding was celebrated Thursday evening, when Miss Jessie Grace Gibbons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Gibbons, was united in marriage to Clifford Curtis Schooley, of Bayonne City, by Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, rector of Grace P. E. church, at the home of the bride's parents, 223 East Sixth street.

The home was beautified with palms, roses and sweet peas, which were arranged in an attractive manner and added brilliancy to the happy occasion.

The marriage took place at 8 o'clock in the presence of a few admiring relatives and friends. The bride, who was gowned in white organdie over white silk, was given away in marriage by her father. The maid-of-honor was Miss Bessie Earle, of Bayonne City. She wore a gown of pink organdie over white silk.

The best man was Frank Curtis, of New York. The groom met the other members of the bridal party at the altar, where the ceremony was performed. Following the ceremony congratulations were offered to the happy couple, who have the best wishes of their many friends for a life of happiness and success.

A wedding supper was served during the evening by Stephenson, the caterer, and at a late hour Mr. and Mrs. and Schooley left the scene of the festivities to enjoy a honeymoon. Upon their return they will reside at Bayonne. They received a large collection of very useful and ornamental presents from their relatives and friends.

Among those present to witness the marriage were Rev. Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Rodman, Rev. Floyd Appleton, Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Clay, Mr. and Mrs. Waldo, the Misses Brower, Henry Brower, of Plainfield; Mr and Mrs. Kellogg, Charles Green, Arthur Woodward, Milton R. Hudson, Mr. and Mrs. Earlee, of Bayonne; Carl Curtis and Frank Curtis, of New York; Miss Lillian Fales, of Bensonhurst, L. I.; Miss Newkirk, of Jersey City, and a few others.

A BOURGOGNE VICTIM.

Name of a Former Borough Teacher in the List of Passengers.

Among the victims of the LaBourgogne disaster was a Miss Josephine Masso. A young woman by that same name taught in the North Plainfield Public School three years ago and she then moved away. While she had a number of acquaintances here, she was not intimate with any Plainfielders, so that it has been impossible to discover whether the young school teacher and the victim of the French liner are one and the same. The name is the same, and as it is a peculiar one, it seems likely that it was the former teacher who was drowned.

ESTIMATED COST OF THE COUNTY TROLLEY

Report of Commissioners Appointed by Freeholders.

$262,700 WILL COVER IT.

The Highest Damages Allowed is $10,470 to a Westfield Property—Central Oil Cloth Factory, of Plainfield, Awarded $8,700 — Freeholders Went Over the Route Monday.

The three commissioners, J. M. Wilcox, of Westfield, J. D. Runyon, of Plainfield, and Louis Quien, of Elizabeth, who were appointed by the County Board of Freeholders to look over the ground and make an estimate of the benefits and damages that would be entailed by widening North avenue, from Elizabeth to Plainfield, to 100 feet, according to the Bergen plan, have prepared a report for the Board of Freeholders. The report gives the value of the land taken from each property-owner, states the amount of benefits that would be received and the amount of damages sustained. The report covers forty-one type written pages.

The number of separate pieces of property effected is 327, and the amount of damages that the county will be called upon to pay the property owners, over and above the amounts assessed on each piece for benefits, is placed at $262,700. Aside from this will be the cost of grading in some places and filling in others, together with the cost of enlarging bridges. The largest bridge in the proposed line of improvement is the bridge across the Rahway river at Cranford. The estimated cost of the work necessary on this bridge is $11,500. There are many smaller bridges that will cost from $300 to $ 00. The largest amount of not damages allowed on a single piece of property is $10,470, allowed on the brick building, corner of Prospect street and North avenue, Westfield. The next highest is an award to the Central Oilcloth Company, of Plainfield, of $8,700. The lowest award made is $5 to T. S. Bird, in Westfield.

The commissioners recommended that the street through the thickly built part of Westfield and Cranford be left as it is. The Board favored this recommendation, which reduces the cost $32,000 in Westfield, and $21,000 in Cranford.

The amounts fixed by this commission are not binding. Every property holder interested could contest the amount, and a large number of them would do so, as they consider the amounts too small.

After the road is widened a franchise will be sold to the highest bidder to build a trolley line the entire distance, but under the boulevard act the bid must be large enough to cover the cost of widening, as the board will have no authority to bond the county. There is but one bid, that of $100,000, by John Kean, but the board will meet again next Thursday, when all the reports will be in and bids will be advertised for.

The people of Cranford are bitterly opposed to the widening plan and have warned the board that they will oppose every effort in that direction in the courts. It is believed that the plan will finally be abandoned.

A Generous Plainfielder.

E. P. Holden, treasurer of the Y. M. C. A. State work, acknowledges the receipt of $10 from a friend in this city, made payable to "Practical Christianity, E. P. Holden, treasurer." The money will be used in the work among the soldier boys.

A Successful Operation.

Raymond Hodge, of Plainfield avenue, who recently had an operation performed on his throat to remove a foreign growth, has entirely recovered from the effects of the operation. Drs. E. W. and B. VanD. Hedges performed the operation.

Joined the Signal Corps.

Charles Latourette, formerly a telegraph operator at the office of the Postal Telegraph Company, this city, has joined the Signal Corps of the regular army and has reported at Washington.

The Chief Rather Walk.

Sometime ago the City Council purchased a bicycle for Chief Grant, but that genial official does not seem to ride very much. It would seem as though he could cover more ground if he rode his wheel more.

Mixed Up With Fighting Dogs.

F. S. Green, of Mercer avenue, attempted to separate two dogs that were fighting on the Fourth, and one of the canines set his teeth in Mr. Green's hand.

Broke a Plate Glass Window.

The housekeeper for Charles M. Raybert, the North avenue plumber, slipped in front of the store Friday and poked her elbow through a large plate glass window.

MRS A. C. LACASSE BACK TO NEW YORK.

Sole Woman Survivor of The Bourgogne Welcomed by Sister

TELLS HER EXPERIENCES.

ACQUITS THE STEAMER'S CREW FROM THE HORRIBLE CHARGES.

She Says the Outrages Were Committed By Italian and Hungarian Steerage Passengers—She Had Confidence From the First That she Would be Saved—She Looks None the Worse Now.

Mrs. A. D. LaCasse, the only woman to be saved from the Bourgogne disaster, arrived at the Grand Central station yesterday afternoon at 2:40 o'clock. Mr. LaCasse was with her, but inasmuch as she was the heroine of the shipwreck all interest centered in her appearance.

A most affecting scene ensued when Mrs. LaCasse' sister caught sight of her, and, rushing forward, clasped her in her arms, both sisters weeping tears of joy as they kissed each other over and over again. Then the turn of the other relatives came, and there was more embracing, more kissing and more joyful tears.

Mrs. LaCasse, who is a tall, handsome blonde, about thirty years old, showed no evidences of the awful ordeal which she had undergone. She has the air of a woman of resolute courage, and that this is so is abundantly proved by the story of her experience as told by herself.

"I had no doubt from the very first awful crash," said Mrs. LaCasse, "that I should be saved, for I had every confidence in God's providence and His power to save me. Through it all I had no fear. I want to say at once that there is no truth in the stories published of the shameful conduct of the crew. The men of the crew behaved well and did all in their power during the awful confusion that prevailed. It is true that women were knocked down and trampled on and driven away from the boats with knives and oars in the hands of frenzied men.

"These shameful acts, however, were not committed by members of the crew, but by a horde of Italians and Hungarians in the steerage, who fought like wild beasts and blindly struck down all who stood in the way in the mad rush to reach the boats. One of these brutes tried to take my life. He seized me in his arms and tried to hurl me overboard, but I screamed and fought with him until he was forced to release his hold.

"How I succeeded in getting into a boat I can hardly tell, but we managed to get away from the ship, with the shrieks of five hundred drowning men and women ringing in my ears. I do not think I shall ever cease to hear that fearful sound. I had to turn my face away, for I could not bear to look upon the appalling sights that surrounded us. I saw men and women sink right alongside of our boat.

"But my happiest thought," continued Mrs. LaCasse, "will ever be that I had the privilege of saving at least one life. There was a man struggling in the water near our boat and I reached out and seized him by the hair and succeeded in pulling him in.

"If I am the only woman who was saved from the wreck, that poor fellow can say that he was the only man of them all who was saved by a woman. He knelt at my feet in gratitude as soon as he had recovered himself a little, for when I pulled him aboard he was in the last gasp and would have gone down in another minute."

Mr. LaCasse, who is very proud of his wife, said that he could add nothing to her account of their wonderful escape, but that he sincerely hoped that the accident would be made the subject of a searching investigation.

Mrs. LaCasse and her husband went direct to Mr. Millot's home, at 173 West Third street, where Mrs. LaCasse was greatly pleased to find that her friends had prepared a little surprise for her in the shape of a trophy of French and American flags crossed over the door in honor of the solitary woman rescued from the Bourgogne.

The Tax Hearing.

The State Board of Taxation has fixed Monday, August 22d, as the time for hearing the counties of Somerset and Ocean in the matter of adjusting the school tax assessments, complaint of which was recently made to the Somerset Board of Freeholders. The hearing will take place at Toms River, and both counties will be represented.

A Fire Averted.

By the prompt action of Mr. T. J. Larew, of West Fourth street, Thursday morning, a disastrous fire was averted. A gasoline stove exploded, but Mrs. Larew quickly smothered the blaze.

HOME FOR OLD FIREMEN

COMMITTEE OF EXEMPTS DECIDE TO BUY LATHROP PROPERTY.

It Will Cost $65,000 and is Admirably Adapted for the Purpose—Slight Alterations Will Have to be Made.

The board of directors of the New Jersey State Exempt Firemen's Association after inspecting the William G. Lathrop property, has voted unanimously to purchase it for $36,000. The property consists of sixty-five acres of land, a brick residence, a brick stable, a frame barn, a farmhouse, and a porter's lodge. The original cost of the Lathrop residence was $80,000.

The house is situated on a knoll facing the Monmville road, about a mile from Boonton. It is three stories with basement, attic and mansard roof, and has two wings and twenty-six rooms. There are piazzas on two stories, at the sides and rear.

The kitchen is in the right wing, but it may be removed to the basement to give more room on the first floor. Light is supplied from a gas machine on the premises. By making a few alterations in the interior of the house about a hundred men can be accommodated.

Massive stone walls slope from the house to the highway, enclosing a crescent carriage drive and a lawn. The stable has stalls for twelve cows and eight horses, and there is a carriage floor also.

The house and stone walls are covered with green vines. The house is in excellent condition. There are two parlors, a large dining room, a library and a small drawing room, which will do for an office, on the first floor.

When necessary, the roof can be raised and the attic converted into a fourth story, with high ceilings.

Wm. H. Brown, of Newark, chairman of the committee on sites, said:

"We may have to expend about $9,000 on the Lathrop property for alterations and furnishings, making the total cost to us $45,000. We have one of the finest sites in New Jersey. Land near it is held at $500 to $700 an acre. There is a grand view from the house. The floors, stairs, doors and other woodwork are of the best quality of hard wood. There is a fountain in the conservatory. The house is 160 feet front by 80 feet deep. We are to take possession on or about July 1st."

Home Rule in Way Home.

One week last week Collector George F. Brown, of Grove street, drove to Westfield with his horse to see some relatives. While there his horse broke a strap and ran away. Mr. Brown came home on the train. The next morning about 2 o'clock one of the marshals in the borough awakened Mr. Brown and informed him that his horse was running about the borough. Mr. Brown got up and dressed, and together with the marshal chased around the various streets for over an hour before the horse was caught. The animal had broken away from the wagon, but knew enough to come back home.

Piece of Steel in His Eye.

A son of Edward Brokaw, sexton of the Park Avenue Baptist church, met with a very painful accident a few days ago by getting a small piece of steel in his eye. The foreign substance cut the eye considerable and it has caused a fester which threatens serious results. Thus far it has been impossible to get the steel from the eye, but the injured member has to be washed continually every fifteen minutes to prevent a hardening of the muscles. Every effort is being made to save the sight of the eye.

BILIOUSNESS

bosses many a body and burdens many a mind. You can't enjoy the food you like because you are bilious. You take all sorts of precautions, and yet the bilious attack leaps on you like a tiger from ambush. You know the feeling! The blood seeming on fire with a dull heat; the boring pains in the eyes; the head seeming to open and shut; the horrible nausea. You know the irritability which precedes and the languor that follows the attack. It's miserable, isn't it? Why not cure the trouble? There's a pill that will cure biliousness. Dr. J. C. AYER'S PILLS are an acknowledged specific for this derangement.

A. Swanger, Texarkana, Tex., writes: "For fifteen years I have used Ayer's Pills, and find them very effective in bilious complaints. I have yet to see the case where they have failed to cure."

If You are Bilious DO NOT FAIL TO Try AYER'S PILLS

THEATRICAL TREATS ARE NOW ASSURED.

Music Hall is Being Thoroughly Overhauled.

MANAGER EDWARDS BUSY.

WILL PRESENT THE BEST ATTRACTIONS ON THE ROAD.

Season Will be Opened July 25th by the Sullivan Troubadors, Formerly the Kennedy Players, Who Will be Followed During the Season With Shows Which Will Give the Best Satisfaction.

Despite the fact that there has been nothing presented for public amusement at Music Hall the past two months, there has been a vast amount of work done in, around and about the building, that the public generally know nothing of. Manager Mage Edwards has been a pretty busy individual in booking theatrical novelties and cleaning up, the supervision of which has kept him closely confined to his office and theatre. And by the way, this is the first year since the opening of Music Hall that its doors has been always open daily, Sundays excepted, for the transaction of business the year around.

Beyond a thorough cleaning and scrubbing of floors, walls and ceilings, no change will be observed this season when regular performances begin. The proprietors of the building did not feel justified, in view of the expense incured in the plumbing and sewerage two years ago, to expend more money now, but next season it is confidently expected, extensive alterations and renovations will be made. Manager Edwards has personally however, made some notable improvements on the stage, removed the old draperies about the windows, repaired scenery, seats, etc., and an air cleanliness and cheerfulness is apparent all around. While the seating arrangements of last winter were conceded much better than had been for several seasons past. Mr. Edwards announces with much pleasure that he is promised by Mr. Stillman, an entire overhauling of the boilers and furnaces before cold weather sets in, so patrons may be assured of additional comfort the coming winter.

In the matter of amusements, Mr. Edwards will be able to present a line of attractions superior to the general run of "out town" theatres. By an arrangement with the great theatrical syndicate managers, Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, of New York, Mr. Edwards secures all the companies controlled by them and the Messrs. Frohman, when they play the "one night stands," and as the general representatives of Mr. Edwards' interests in New York, the first will undoubtedly route many novelty presentations to this city, which otherwise would not be seen. About one-half of the regular season from September 1898 to May 1, 1899, is already booked and includes some interesting attractions which will be duly announced.

Preliminary performances, however, will be given at the end of this month and during August, the first of which will be by the Sullivan Troubadors, who were formerly known as the Kennedy Players, and who are established favorites in this city. They make their first appearance Monday July 25th, and play the entire week in a series of new plays and latest vaudeville features. During August the Black Patti Troubadors, Katy Rooney and Company, the great melodrama "When London Sleeps" and the new Haverly Minstrels with other novelties will be presented. Altogether the outlook is promising for an interesting theatrical and amusement season, and Manager Edwards is deserving of all success.

THE DOCTORS AT THE INN

MEDICAL ASSOCIATION MET AT MOUNTAIN PARK.

Enjoyed a Splendid Menu as Provided by Host Moulton—Address Delivered by a Talented New York Physician.

The quarterly meeting and dinner of the Plainfield Medical Association was held July 6th at Mountain Park Inn, and was attended by seventeen of the members. The association had as their guest Dr Northrup, of New York, who opened the subject for discussion, which was "The Summer Complaints of Children." Dr. Northrup's remarks were highly instructive and of great interest to those present. After the subject was introduced the members of the association discussed it in an informal manner and there was an exchange of much valuable information.

Following the discussion the members adjourned to the dining room, where an excellent menu was served under the direction of Manager Moulton, of the Inn. The menu is as follows:

Little Necks.
Consomme Imperiale.
Chicken Halibut Gantinees.
Cucumber Salad. Pommes Parisienne.
Lobster Saute, en caisse Newberg.
Roman Punch.
Broiled Spring Chicken, Lettuce Salad.
English Fruit Pudding. Brandy Sauce.
Neapolitan Ice Cream. Cakes.
Cheese. Coffee.

Through the courtesy of Dr. J. T Fritts and the Plainfield Street Rail way, the members were allowed the use of a special trolley car going and coming from the Inn. The physicians appreciated this expression of goodwill on the part of the company.

Repairing the Sewers.

A long time ago an explosion of sewer pipes occurred in the vicinity of Richmond street and Putnam avenue demolishing a number of the pipes. Many were repaired at that time, but recently it was discovered that the pipes on Richmond street needed attention, and the matter is now being looked after. Several pipes have been taken out and replaced by new ones. New curb connections are also being made. The work will be continued in that neighborhood until all damaged pipes are removed.

Autographs of Prominent Men.

Alfred T. Stanton, of East Ninth street, called on his cousin, Brigadier-General Guy Henry, and Ensign William T. M Powelson, on board the St. Paul yesterday and secured both their autographs. General Henry goes to Santiago with the Eighth Ohio, and is a cousin to Mr. Stanton, while Ensign Powelson is a son of an old friend.

Flag Fund Growing.

The Public Library flag fund is slowly increasing, and in time enough money will have been donated to purchase a nice flag. Contributions can be left at the library or at this office.

Plainfield Boys in Cuba.

Clarence B. Demarest, of Park avenue, and Bert Mundy, of West Ninth street, are supposed to be somewhere in Cuba with the army that is attacking Santiago. Both young men enlisted sometime ago.

BABIES GATHERED ON PARSONAGE LAWN.

A YOUTHFUL ORGANIZATION

THE TOTS WERE GIVEN REFRESHMENTS LIKE THEIR ELDERS.

A Novel Society at the Congregational Church for Children Under Six Years of Age—Miss Dwight is President and Looks After Them—Met July 6th on Parsonage Lawn.

The citizens of the next century, the babies of today, gathered on the lawn of the Congregational parsonal, corner of West Seventh street and Madison avenue, Wednesday July 6th, to attend the closing exercises of the "Cradle Roll" of the church. The "Cradle Roll" is something new. It was started last fall through the instrumentality of Rev. C L. Goodrich, pastor of the church. Membership to this youthful organization was limited to the babies of the congregation under six years of age.

The object of the "Cradle Roll" was to connect the children with the church at an early age before they were old enough to go into the Junior Endeavor Society. The "Cradle Roll" is altogether a rather remarkable organization. There are membership cards for it. Instead of a signature, the outline of the hand of the baby is drawn below the clause of membership. The little ones are taught the advantages of giving their pennies to a good cause Each one is supplied with a tiny mite box in which theoretically the baby is supposed to drop an occasional coin, but which generally depends on the parents of the baby for its support.

There were nearly twenty-five of the tots gathered on the parsonage lawn, each under the care of some indulgent parent or nurse. Swings, hammocks and little seats had been arranged about the lawn, and here the little ones gathered and were soon laughing and romping about in their childish play. The little ones who had not yet attained the dignity of being able to navigate alone, chattered and cooed with pleasure, for the good time was a feeling.

Miss Katharine Wolcott Dwight was the president of this tiny organization and on her devolved much of the entertaining of the members. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich and their young son also assisted in doing the honors.

There were a number of new members who joined the "Cradle Roll" yesterday and who partook of the general festivity of the occasion.

Of course, there were refreshments, but the selection of proper ones had given the pastor and the fair president considerable trouble. Milk was decided upon as the most fitting. Then there were souvenirs for each of the tiny guests. They were candy boxes in the shape of little cradles that rocked. Sweets were tabooed, however, and "animal crackers" substituted. The little revellers were very much satisfied with it all, and depanted homeward at last munching stray legs off of cracker bonbon trunks from elephants of the same nature.

BURGLAR SCARED AWAY.

Early Morning Prowler Tried to Break Into Mrs. Edward Baker's House.

Some one tried to break into the house occupied by Mrs. Edward Baker, 465 West Front street, early Friday morning, but was frightened away before accomplishing the purpose.

Mrs. Baker was awakened about 3 o'clock by the crying of her baby. She went down cellar after some milk, and while there heard footsteps on the flagging just outside of the cellar window. Mrs. Baker went up stairs and quietly opening the shutters saw a strange, rough looking man fumbling with the cellar window just below. Mrs. Baker rattled the window as she stepped back to call her husband, and the slight noise frightened the man, who ran away as fast as he could go.

Where to Spend Your Vacation.

GAZELLE STILL ALIVE.

OLDEST FIRE COMPANY FINALLY DECIDE NOT TO DISBAND.

It Took a Long Time to Arrive at That Decision, However—Member Rebel Against Being Moved to West End.

A lengthy meeting of the members of Gazelle Engine Company was held July 6th to consider the advisability of disbanding the company. The members stood half and half on the question of allowing the oldest and original fire company in the city to go into oblivion. The question was argued pro and con, and for a time it seemed as though a decision would not be reached at all.

The officials of the fire department were present and urged the members to reconsider the motion to disband, and finally this was done. The company will not disband, but they say that they will not be willing to be sent to the new house in the West End when it is completed, it having been intimated that such disposition would be made of the comany.

LIFE ON TEXAS PLAINS.

GEORGE ROCKFELLOW SPENT A PLEASANT AND HEALTHY WINTER.

Was Nearly Two Months in Traveling by Wagon to North Carolina—He Likes the Ways of the Southerners.

Ranch life in the far west has its charm for all, especially for young men. However, not all are privileged to see it with their own eyes, or to experience a few months of stirring activity on the plains. George A. Rockfellow, of Park avenue, son of George W. Rockfellow, the grocer, has just returned from southwestern Texas, where he has been spending the winter, and has been regaling his friends with stories of cowboy life until some of them can talk about nothing else.

Mr. Rockfellow left Plainfield October 26th last, with W. N. Flanders, of Scotch Plains, bound for North Carolina. They traveled in a moving camp, and reached their destination, Oxford, North Carolina, December 15th, after several weeks of the most delightful traveling through a country thick with game.

December 27th the two parted, Mr. Flanders to conduct evangelistic services with George Needham among the Virginians, and Mr. Rockfellow to spend the cold months in Texas. After a journey which took him through the principal cities of the south, Mr. Rockfellow finally reached San Angelo, in Tom Green county. He went out on a ranch nine miles from San Angelo, where he spent the winter. Mr. Rockfellow had as neighbors a son of O. B. Tweedy, of Crescent avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. George E. Webb, the latter a sister to Mrs. J. M. Middleith, of Mercer avenue.

Mr. Rockfellow describes the life he led on the plains as a healthy one beyond all expectations. Up with the sun, the boys on the ranch saddle up and scatter to their several duties, some to ride the fences, others to look after the stock, and others to assist a neighbor in a round-up. The wild life on the plains has about passed away. There are no cowboys now hustling with pistols and knives and dressed in the fantastic garb of a Mexican toreodor. The country is cut up into small farms, surrounded with wire fences.

All last winter, Mr. Rockfellow says, the boys went around in their shirt-sleeves, and the weather was soft and balmy. Occasionally a brisk norther would blow up, which would make the thermometer drop to a point close to zero.

The people, he says, are very hospitable and strangers are always welcomed, if they behave themselves. The householders never think of locking their houses when they go away, and any traveler coming along is at liberty to go inside, cook himself a meal and occupy the best bed in the house, whether the family are at home or not.

Mr. Rockfellow is charmed with Texas people, and may go back there some time in the future.

A Smart Plainfielder.

W. L. Glenny, of Webster place, one of the graduating class at Prof. Leal's school this year, has won high honors in his entrance examinations for Columbia College. He won the Alumni competitive scholarship, which is valued at $600, for the best showing in the examinations in which a large number of young men took part.

To Gather at the Beach.

Wednesday, August 3d, will be the first official field day of the Daughters of Liberty, and great preparations are being made by the members of the order in this city to celebrate the day at Boynton Beach. C. W. Boynton will on this occasion make every attraction at his place free.

Fell Out of a Carriage.

The young son of Charles Lyman, of the borough, fell out of the rear of a buckboard a few days ago, while climbing up to get inside, and was run over by one of the wheels. Beyond a few bruises, he was unhurt.

THREE DAUGHTERS AND FATHER LOST.

All Victims in the Terrible La Bourgogne Disaster.

ONCE LIVED IN PLAINFIELD.

EVANS WAS A POOR ARTIST TRYING TO EDUCATE HIS DAUGHTERS.

Scott Evans Came Here Through the Advice of Col. Julian Scott—His Studio Was Located in Room 13, Stillman Building—A Year and a Half Ago They Moved to New York.

Among the victims of the ill-fated La Bourgogne, the French liner that collided with the British ship Cromartyshire on July 4, near Sable Island, there were D. Scott Evans, Miss L. Evans, Miss B. Evans and Miss M. Evans. They were entered upon the books of the company as from Plainfield, N. J.

It was two years ago or more that a hard-working artist, poor like many of his compatriots, moved to this city and opened up a little studio in one of the front rooms on the third floor of "The Stillman." No. 13 was the room. To W. M. Stillman, from whom he rented the room, he gave his name as DeScott Evans.

Evans was an artist of no mean ability. In all branches of the art he was good, but his special aptitude lay in the painting of miniatures. While by no means his ideal branch of the art, he also made quite a feature of interior decorations of walls and panels with various designs and paintings. It was a more lucrative occupation and from it he derived most of his revenue.

Evans had three daughters, only two of whom, however, were known here. One was 32 and the other 30. They were both beautiful girls and followed the inclinations of their father in their love for the artistic. After the death of his wife his one object in life was to give them a good education and provide for them. To that end he worked steadily from morning to night.

His studio was located in New York, but the hard times made his income a scanty one and he was compelled to leave his quarters, owing to lack of ability to pay the high rent demanded. One day he met his friend, Col. Julian Scott, the well-known Plainfield artist. As a result of their little conversation, Artist Evans opened a studio in the same building with Col. Scott.

While an entertaining talker and pleasing conversationalist, Mr. Evans had very little to do with the people of Plainfield. He was a very industrious worker and while he received all who called, and they were few indeed, with courtesy he did not waste his moments.

He often expressed a desire to take his daughters abroad and educate them. They were frequent visitors, or rather two of them were, at his studio and often assisted him or posed for him. Many of his subjects have the face and features of the fair girls who are now sleeping in a watery grave.

Col. Scott is now in Vermont, and he is the only one who can give any of the history of the family. No one seems to know where they lived or where the other sister was. They were not known except to a few and by them only slightly. Mr. Evans was too busy to go out into society even had he cared to, and the young women seemed perfectly content with the company of their father and each other. Although they were in very modest circumstances, they always dressed simply but in very good taste.

In January, 1897, Mr. Evans moved back to New York where he made his home at 14 West Twelfth street. He gave up his little Plainfield studio and this city saw him no more. It was understood that he secured the contract for decorating the dining room to some palatial New York home which was to bring him in a large sum. It is supposed that he completed the work and on the results of it sailed for Europe with the intention of completing the education of his daughters abroad.

Express Men, Move On!

An order has gone out from those in authority to the express men that hereafter they must not leave their horses and wagons standing along the curb in front of the depot or the depot parks. Complaints have been made because sometimes when two or three express wagons are standing along the curb it is almost impossible for carriages to find a place to stop. Chief Grant accordingly has issued orders to all express men that they must not leave their horses along the curb except when loading or unloading merchandise.

Annoyed By Dogs.

Dogs owned by people living in the Eight Acre near Dunellen have been the cause of a complaint to Chief Grant. The residents near there claim that the dogs annoy them so nights that they cannot sleep. The Chief has promised to look after the matter.

PLAINFIELD WATER IS PURE AND HEALTHY

MINUTE BUBBLES OF GAS.

THERE IS NO REASON FOR THINKING THE WATER UNHEALTHY.

The Turbidity of the City Water, as Seen in Many Places This Summer, is Due to the Presence of Globules of Gas Which Have Excellent Qualities for Potability to the Physical System.

Comment has been made by consumers of the city water (so called) upon a phenomenon occasionally noted in the water when freshly drawn from a faucet into a glass vessel of such capacity as to allow of full observation. At times a decided milky or whitish cast is seen, as though a little chalk or lime had been mingled with the liquid. The phenomenon occurs mostly (perhaps altogether) in the summer months.

It is seen in comparatively few houses, and the pipe or faucet which at one time yields the milky water, at another yields clear water.

The unnatural appearance of the liquid which has been a synonim of purity has caused uneasiness in the minds of some who have observed it, and, in a few instances, has led to the rejection of the public supply, and to a return to discarded private wells and the use of inferior drinking water.

Were the habit of accurate and patient observation more prevalent, such uneasiness and such consequences would seldom be known. For the unnatural appearance referred to is soon dissipated; the milky hue gradually clears up—beginning at the lower portion of the water; and the liquid resumes a normal condition of limpid clearness. It is once more our familiar Plainfield water—as good as the best, thank Heaven.

The writer has several times asked to account for this phenomenon which is sometimes attributed to "impurities" in the water; or, again, to disturbance of the sources of supply, by heavy rains, etc. His reply has generally been accepted as fully explaining the abnormal appearance; and he now yields to a suggestion that the publication of the explanation in your valuable paper may serve a useful purpose.

First, then, it should be generally known that water has the property of absorbing or dissolving considerable volumes of atmospheric air, of carbonic acid gas, and other gases. It will, for example, dissolve its own bulk of carbonic acid gas without pressure, at ordinary temperatures; and somewhat more than its bulk at low temperatures. Moreover, the gas is truly "dissolved," and not merely mingled with the water; its particles are no longer visible, they have become an integral part of the fluid without affecting its appearance. To the carbonic acid gas, existing in all vested on all sides. This considered, spring and well waters when first drawn, is due the "sparkling" or "fresh" quality which distinguishes them from rain or distilled water, from sand and river water. Now, when the temperature of a water thus saturated with gas increases, the latter begins to separate and pass away, and water that has actively boiled becomes tasteless, "flat," as everyone knows.

Turning our attention now to a sample of our city water presenting the "milky hue" of which complaint is made, and holding the glass against the light, it will be seen that the turbidity is due to countless minute bubbles or globules of gas (or air) which slowly begin to rise to the surface, leaving a constantly widening stratum of clear water below them, contrasting sharply with the milky stratum above. By degrees the water parts with the un-dissolved portion of gas, the unnatural hue disappears, the whole body of the fluid is normally transparent.

Having in mind the physical property of solution previously named, it should not be difficult to understand why the "city water" is sometimes "milky." Abounding in perfectly dissolved carbonic acid gas as it leaves its source (at a temperature of 42 to 46 degrees all the year round), and further impregnated with air by the mechanical process of pumping, etc., it is made to linger in the pipes—large and small—and here and there exposed to a temperature much higher than that at which it entered the system. The dissolved gas then begins to separate from solution and is ready to appear and dissapear into the atmosphere when entirely freed from pressure by being drawn into an open vessel.

It will now be apparent why the phenomenon occurs only in the summer; why it occurs in one locality and not in another, and why it occurs at one time and not in another.

It will, in fact, occur coincidentally with the exposure of certain pipes to a temperature higher than common, and will be seldom or never observed except in water which has rested in the mains or service pipes for a considerable interval.

Its occurrence is affected by certain conditions other than those here named. But enough has been said to show that the turbity complained of should not be attributed to the presence of impurities or foreign matters of any sort. Per contra, it evidences the presence of substances which contributs to the value of the most esteemed potable waters; which give them the palatability, "snap," "life," so much prized in Appollinaris and other bottled waters, and in the carbonated beverages of the druggist; which, moreover, tend to prevent the deterioration of all water and serve to promote health by a gently stimulating effect upon the organs of digestion.

As the result of a reasonable inspection, then, this scarecrow is found to be an innocent one, almost a friend; and the estimate of the Plainfield water supply, which ranks it among the very best and most wholesome public supplies in America (and in the world), remains unshaken.

Badger Off of Havana.

John Gattelson, the janitor of the Y. M. C. A., has received a letter from Frank Fulton, which was written on board the Badger. Fulton says that at the time of writing the Badger was lying four miles off Morro, and that he could see the moving figures of Spanish soldiers quite plainly with the glass.

THE ENDEAVOR SOCIABLE

DESPITE THE RAIN IT WAS LARGELY ATTENDED LAST NIGHT.

Held in Trinity Reformed Church, Which Had Been Decorated for the Occasion—Pleasing Programme Rendered

The first sociable ever given by the Christian Endeavor Local Union took place Tuesday in the Sunday school room of the Trinity Reformed church. It was somewhat of an experiment in its nature, but judging from the large attendance and the true air of sociability that pervaded the company, it was a success in every sense of the word. Another similar sociable may be expected soon.

The sociable was attended by Endeavorers from all the societies in the city, and from Dunellen, New Market, Washingtonville, Mt. Pleasant and Marconnier, all of which are in the Union.

William O. Chapman, of the First Baptist church society, was master of ceremonies, and succeeded in instiuting a spirit of sociability in the company.

Chairman L. H. Biglow, of the welcoming committee, assisted by Horace J. Martin and E. E. Anthony, were at the door and gave each one that entered a hearty welcome.

A half hour was spent in sociability, then a short programme was presented, followed by serving refreshments.

As an opening song all rose and sang the National hymn, "My Country 'Tis of Thee," for which Miss Saidee Mae Howell played. Miss Ella Serrell followed this with a recitation, "The Village Seamstress." Miss Etta Krymer gave a vocal solo, accompanied by Miss Mabel Force, and Miss Catherine Dwight told "How Tom Sawyer White-washed the Fence." Miss Dwight received an encore, and responded with a little sketch.

After Miss Saidee Mae Howell had rendered a piano solo, Miss Beulah Van Winkle, a little tot, old about "Brother Will." Little Beulah has appeared before in public, and showed no nervousness or embarrassment when on the stage.

A vocal solo by Miss Lottie Messersmith, to which Miss Mabel Force played the accompaniment, and a humorous sketch by A. J. Lake, of Dunellen, entitled the "Irish Schoolmaster," closed the programme.

The room was prettily decorated with flags and green and white bunting, the colors of the local union. L. H. Biglow, Jr., was the chairman of the reception committee and was assisted by the presidents of all the societies. Miss Grace Petrie had charge of the refreshments, and was assisted by young people from the Congregational, First Baptist, First Presbyterian and Park Avenue Baptist societies.

The decorating was done by a committee of which E. E. Anthony was chairman. Miss Robinson, Miss Alice Morgan, Miss Cuming, Mrs. H. J. Martin, Mrs. E. E. Anthony and Frank Clarkson assisted.

Just before leaving Fred H. Andrews spoke a few words about the work done by the Y. M. C. A. and Christian workers among the soldiers in Chickamauga. Mr. Andrews has been there himself and spoke from experience. His words were listened to with great interest.

certainty of the action at Santiago.

It is reported that Gen. Shafter cabled this morning that the bombardment by the ships was ineffectual. It is known that Sec. Alger wired Shafter for immediate details, but no reply was received up to 2 o'clock.

Gen. Miles, in his reports, confines himself strictly to routine matters and makes no reflections on Shafter's mode of operations.

By some it is thought that the general assault took place this morning, but that rumor is discredited by the officials of the War department.

LUSON IN REVOLT.

Manila Expects Attack By Americans July 24th, When Transports Arrive.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, July 13, 1:06 p. m.—A German cruiser brings the report from the Phillipines that all Luson is in revolt against Spanish rule.

The cruiser brought a letter from Governor-General Augustin, which says that all is quiet at Manila but that he expects an attack by the Americans on July 14th when the re-inforcements arrive.

LIEUT. ELY IS MISSING

HE WAS IN THE GALLANT CHARGE UP SAN JUAN HILL.

His Wife was Miss Brooks, of Rockview Avenue, and at Present She is Stopping With Her Parents There.

Word has been received in this city that among the officers missing after the battle of San Juan Hill, which was fought recently, is Lieut. Frank D. Ely, of the gallant 13th United States Infantry.

Lieutenant Ely is well known in this city, for three years ago he was married to Miss Brooks, the daughter of Thomas B. Brooks, a wealthy New York business man, who resides on Rockview avenue. The wedding took place in the Holy Cross church, and was a brilliant one, being a military wedding.

After her marriage Mrs. Ely went to live in officers' quarters on Governor's Island, where Lieutenant Ely was stationed. The Thirteenth was among the first regiments to be sent to the front, Companies D, B, and F being sent south when hostilities first broke out.

The regiment was not sent to Cuba until the army had nearly all been transported. Mrs. Ely came to live with her parents when the lieutenant went South, and has been in constant communication with him since he left. The last letter she received from him was dated Siboney, June 29, and stated that his regiment was expecting to go to the front at once.

Neither officers or men anticipated any hard fighting, and the Lieutenant expected to be out of Cuba shortly. Day before yesterday Mrs. Ely received a telegram from Washington stating that Lieutenant Ely and a number of men had been sent to Elcaney, east of Santiago to erect some fortifications. This is the last she has heard concerning him.

The Lieutenant was a remarkably tall man, standing six feet three inches, and broad in proportion. He was smooth-faced, and dark complexion.

Since his departure from New York, Lieut. Ely has been promoted from second to first lieutenant, but whether for bravery or in the course of promotion is not known.

Mrs. Ely, when seen by a reporter Wednesday, said that she had heard nothing from her husband since the letter mentioned above, but that she was expecting to hear from him hourly.

She does not believe that he was killed, but that he may be wounded so that he cannot write.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

One of the summer attractions in this section of New Jersey is the boat carnival on the Rahway river at Cranford. The affair used to be held on the evening in August when the moon was at full. From all the neighboring towns, even as far away as New Brunswick and Rahway, the people used to flock by train, in carriages and awheel to see the handsome display of boats. Every resident of Cranford decorated his house and lawn with a profuse array of Chinese lanterns until the entire town was converted into a "fairyland."

This year there comes a report from Cranford that the carnival is not to be. For several years the carnival has been conducted in a manner which, to the outsiders, seemed to be a complete success. This year, however, the organizers of the affair complain of a lack of interest on the part of those who have boats to enter in the carnival.

No reason is advanced for the lack of support and the general public is left to infer that the only conclusion probable that the people of Cranford have simply grown tired of the exhibition of decorated boats and need a year or two without any to appreciate it. It is to be hoped, however, that the announcement itself will stir the lethargic citizens of Cranford to a full realization of the situation and that the promoters of the affair will receive sufficient promises of entries to cause them to reconsider their determination and hold a carnival as usual

Among all the characters known in the local police circles there was none who caused more real excitement than "Jack" Benford, the demented son of Maggie Benford, one of the well-known characters of Paradise Alley. "Jack" made a reputation for himself early in life by jumping coal trains. The mere sight of a policeman was a sign for rapid flight with him. Once he jumped from the second story window of his home, carrying sash and all with him, to escape from the clutches of the minions of the law. He became so wild that he was taken to the county jail for sixty days, and while there was examined regarding his sanity. The doctors declared his mind unbalanced, and he was ordered removed to the hospital for the insane at Morris Plains. That happened last summer. It was only a few days ago that Chief Grant was recalling to a few of his friends the circumstances of his last trip with "Jack" when he took him from the county jail at Elizabeth over to Morris Plains. "Jack" was a morose character, especially in company with an officer. To improve his state of mind, the Chief gave him a box of cigarettes, for "Jack" was always a great lover of them. He took them in silence, and after taking one out to smoke, stowed the rest away.

"Hain't got none," growled forth the prisoner.

There was silence for a time, and then Benford turned with a sudden "Gimme a match." The Chief produced the required match, but "Jack" refused to share his cigarettes with his captor.

Later Benford asked, "Where are you taking me, anyhow?"

"Oh, to a nice boarding-house," replied Chief Grant.

After that Benford had nothing more to say and only replied to the officials at the State Hospital in brief and surly tones.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

There is great rivalry between Plainfield and Somerville, but as the latter is not a city, while Plainfield is, and has, besides, a Mayor of unusual energy and wide-awakeness, it is not surprising that Plainfield is generally ahead. It seems, however, that Somerville has one notable convenience not possessed by its rival, and it is thus described by a leading newspaper in the less favorable town: "In front of the principal drug stores there stands a post. On the post is a push-button which connects with an electric bell inside. When a customer drives up to the store it is not necessary for him to leave the carriage or call for a clerk, but merely to push the button, whereat the clerk does the rest."

Apparently everybody who goes driving in Somerville has business at one or more of the drug stores. And yet the people can't be in search of medicines, because Somerset county is a healthy district.—New York Tribune.

urday, as has already been told in this paper. Mrs. O'Donnell was summoned before the City Judge and sentenced to jail for a term of sixty days.

With father and mother both in jail, the city was obliged to look after the children. A boarding place was provided for the two elder ones and they continued their careers without change except of boarding place. The small child was placed at another house by the Overseer of the Poor and her board paid from the poor fund of the city. This will continue until Hughie is released.

As far as the children are concerned they are really in better circumstances than before, for their home surroundings were not exactly conducive to comfort nor were they particularly enjoyable.

LINCOLN.

Lincoln, July 13—About two-thirds of the employes of the Steel Works were laid off last Thursday for two weeks, as the firm are changing to new designs of bicycle pedals. The force still employed are working overtime in order that the works may be ready to start with an increased force about July 20th.

It is rumored that the Mayor has placed a contract with Contractor Whitlock for the erection of twelve new houses, two of which are to be south of the railroad.

Murphy's flats, on the West Boulevard, have received their finishing coats of paint during the past few days, and certainly look very attractive.

Ground was broken last Thursday for the new woolen mill, which will be 50x108 feet, and will employ about 100 hands.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

South Plainfield, July 13—The St. Francis T. A. B. Society, of South Plainfield, will hold their annual picnic at Kellogg's Grove, on the east side of Park avenue near Oak Tree, Saturday, July 16th. All kinds of games and contests will be engaged in, chief of which will be a bicycle race which will start from the grove north by Park avenue to Oak Tree road; thence to Oak Tree; thence along the Oak Tree and Metuchen road to Park avenue; thence along Park avenue back to the Grove, covering a distance of about three miles. A prize will be given to the winner of this race. Prize made known on the ground. The race will take place at 4 o'clock p. m. Entries may be made at any time up to 3:45 p. m. Only amateurs will be allowed to enter.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with the writer, M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them were it if it were any less dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There are no other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

LIGHTNING STRUCK TOOL IN HIS HAND.

Michael Higgins Shocked During Tuesday's Storm.

FELL DOWN UNCONSCIOUS.

WAS WORKING IN THE BASEMENT OF THE INDUSTRIAL HOME.

Higgins Was Using a Calking Iron When the Bolt Came—His Left Arm Was Paralyzed and Marked by the Lightning—He is Feeling Better Now and No Serious Results are Anticipated.

Michael Higgins looked through the open window to the basement of the Industrial Home Tuesday afternoon, and saw the long ridge of mountains, half hidden by the driving rain that was falling in sheets from the ominous clouds above. Then there came a blinding flash, a terrific crash and he was thrown to the floor, stunned by the awful force of the electricity. The steel "corking iron" with which he was working, was thrown from his grasp and his left arm, the hand to which had held the instrument, was left stiffened and without feeling.

Michael Higgins lives on Plainfield avenue. He is one of the plumbers in the employ of George J. Tobin, the North avenue plumber. Tuesday afternoon he went to the Industrial Home to put in a soil pipe in the basement. He drove there in one of Tobin's wagons.

As the sky grew darker and more threatening, Higgins hurried his work as much as possible to complete it before the storm began. It was warm working there in the basement and he left the window close by his side open so that he might enjoy what breeze there was. The storm began.

It was about 2:30 o'clock, Higgins does not know the exact time when the bolt came. At the time, he was using a "corking iron" to cork the joints in the pipe. The instrument was in his left hand.

In describing the sensation to a reporter later in the afternoon, Higgins said that the first he knew what looked like a big ball of fire, two feet across, entered the window and struck the metal in his hand. There seemed to be a great concussion and thousands of stars seemed to shoot in every direction. The force of it hurled him backward to the floor where he lay for ten minutes before he recovered sufficiently to look for aid.

At last he crawled to the door and, at his request, one of the feeble occupants of the city's home for the poor brought him a glass of water. He found that his left arm was apparently paralyzed. He was unable to bend it except at the finger joints, and there was no feeling in it. Along the arm ran a wide red stripe, somewhat swollen.

Higgins' strength returned after a few moments. He gathered up his tools, all but the "corking iron," which could not be found, and drove back to the shop. He could only use the right arm.

Higgins believes that he and the Industrial Home were not built for each other. The last time he was there the horse ran away and one of his fellow-workmen was nearly killed.

BIG TEMPERANCE MAN COMING.

Rev. Albert Lawson to Address the Sons of Temperance Next Wednesday.

Next Wednesday the Grand Division, Sons of Temperance, will hold an all-day convention in this city, consisting of morning, afternoon and evening sessions.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be held in the lodge hall, where dinner and supper will be served to the delegates. The evening session will be held in Reform Hall and will take the form of a temperance rally. Rev. Albert Lawson, of New Jersey, Most Worthy Patriot of the order, will address the meeting. Rev. Mr. Lawson holds the highest office that it is in the power of the association to give, being head of the Sons of Temperance in Great Britain, Canada, Australia and this country.

Funeral of Miss Dolliver.

Monday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. G. Q. Dolliver and son of Fairview avenue, attended the funeral of Mr. Dolliver's sister, Miss Anne Dolliver, at Somerville. The funeral services were held from the house at 4 o'clock, and interment was in Somerville cemetery.

Picnicked on the Mountain.

The young women guests at Pine Grove Farm went by stage to Bernardsville Tuesday and enjoyed part of the day in picnicing about the mountains. In the afternoon it rained and they were obliged to return home. They had a jolly time, however.

Modern Drinking Fountains in Public School Buildings.

DRINK DIRECT FROM FLOW.

CALCULATED THAT CONTAGIOUS DISEASE WILL BE LESSENED.

Stillman, Franklin and Bryant Buildings to be Equipped With the Idea—D. W. Littell Awarded the Contract—High Board Fence May Not Come Down on East Fifth Street Side.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held Tuesday for the purpose of opening bids for putting new drinking fountains in the Stillman, Bryant and Franklin schools. There were only two bidders, D. W. Littell and D. J. Galbraith. Mr. Littell was $53 lower on the entire job, and after publicly opening and reading the bids the Board went into executive session to consider them.

The plan is to place five drinking fountains in the Stillman, Bryant and Franklin buildings, so as to do away with the necessity of using cups. At the last Board meeting the medical examiners suggested that this be done, and the suggestion was immediately acted upon.

These fountains are ornamental and eject a small stream of water vertically, so that to drink one has only to place his mouth over the opening, his lips touching nothing but the water.

Mr. Littell offered to place the fountains in the Stillman building for $193; in the Franklin for $243; in the Bryant for $218; total, $654. Mr. Galbraith's bids were: Bryant, $260; Stillman, $213; Franklin, $244; total, $707. Mr. Galbraith agreed, if he received the contract, to have the work done in ten days after receving it. A bond is required for one half the amount of the contract.

Messrs. Lovell, Lounsbury, Abbott and Jenkins were present at the meeting. Dr. J. B. Probasco being detained, Mr. Lovell was made president pro tem. During the two weeks that have elapsed since the last meeting, Messrs. Abbott and Lounsbury have visited the Bryant School, in accordance with a suggestion made at the last meeting, to see how the school property would look minus a front fence. The property holders on East Sixth street in that neighborhood have taken down their front fences, and have petitioned the Board to have the school fence also taken down. Although no vote was taken at last night's meeting, it seemed to be the sentiment of two of the members present that the fence should not come down, as it is in good condition, and for fear that the children in the neighborhood would make the yard a playground. The others didn't commit themselves. The matter will probably come up for further consideration at the next meeting.

MUST KEEP THE PEACE.

William Stuber Held in $250 Bonds to Behave Himself for Six Months.

William Stuber, a tall, athletic looking butcher, and Charles Muser, short and thin, presented a striking contrast Tuesday afternoon as they stood up before Justice Mosher and told their wrongs. Stuber, the big man, assaulted Muser Monday, and with his big fist bruised the little man's face terribly.

It was hard to find out what the trouble started about. Fred Endress, for whom both men work, saw a little of the fracas, and was the only witness outside of the two parties. It is said that jealously is at the bottom of the fuss, but Stuber gave as his excuse for striking the other that Muser had called him a name.

Muser's counsel was William Sweeney, a law student. Stuber looked after his own interests. After hearing the two stories Justice Mosher held Stuber under $250 bonds to keep the peace for six months. Fred Endress went on the man's bond.

Death of L. B. Finch.

Lucius B. Finch, a retired banker, well-known in New York, died Tuesday at the home of his son, Edward L. Finch, 1106 Park avenue. He was eighty-five years of age and for many years lived in New Haven, Conn. He has been in feeble health for some time. His remains will be interred at New Haven.

Saw a Ball of Fire.

Half a dozen workmen on the tower of the new Hygeia ice-house near Berkman street, were given a scare Tuesday afternoon during the shower. A ball of fire cut up queer antics, and seemed to run around the tower. A sheet of iron, just below the tower, is supposed to have attracted the lightning.

BAD BLOOD INCREASES.

Americans and Cubans Not On Good Terms

TO CONFER WITH GOMEZ.

GEN. GARCIA ISN'T PLEASED WITH SHAFTER'S ORDERS.

Alger Makes Light of the Trouble—Cuban Junta Directs Garcia Not to Offend Americans—The Republic Ignored.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Santiago de Cuba, July 19, via Playa del este, July 20, 12:55 p. m.—Gen. Garcia has left the Cuban camp with a body of picked men and has started westward to meet and confer with General Gomez, the Cuban commander-in chief, relative to the grievances against the Americans.

He makes no secret of his resentment against Gen. Shafter for the latter course of action pursued since the surrender of the city. This coming conference with the Cuban commander-in-chief is regarded with the utmost importance as Gen. Garcia is especially dissatisfied over the fact that the American General will not permit the Cuban soldiers to enter the city until it is evacuated by the Spanish.

The reason for this action is that Gen. Shafter thinks the danger of a clash between Cubans and Spaniards is too great, and so he insists that they shall remain outside entirely.

A thorough system of patrolling has been established by the Americans in the city under charge of Colonel McKibben.

A number of insurgents have already been arrested and turned over to the military authorities, having entered the city disguised as refugees and there attempted to provoke the Spaniards to take part in street riots.

This action has intensified the feeling among the insurgents that the Americans will ignore them in arranging the future form of government.

The Spanish volunteers who formed a part of General Toral's army are growing restless at the rumor that they are to be sent away from the island. As a result, they may prove troublesome. The archbishop of Santiogo received a letter from a volunteer yesterday demanding that he show less friendship to the Americans.

Washington, July 20, 12:40 p. m.—Some apprehension is felt at the outcome of the present strained relations between the Americans and Cubans at Santiago. Secretary Alger makes light of the alleged friction and says that if there is any trouble it will be quickly met.

Very conviently, the representatives of the Cuban Junta here are not in sympathy with the desire of the Cubans to sack the city. They have cabled Gen. Garcia to restrain his men and to permit no actions that will compel the United States to suppress them as menaces to the public safety.

There is a general feeling in official circles here that the Cuban Republic will be ignored for the present at least, and that the Americans will go on controlling what they have won without any union with the insurgents.

Mines Removed.

New York, July 20, 1:29 p. m.—All the contact mines have been removed from Long Island Sound. Most of the mines were saved and will be stored away.

TOO MUCH RED TAPE IN CITY GOVERNMENT

There is a Movement on Foot For a Radical Change.

BOARD OF HEALTH IN FOR IT.

VOTERS SAY THEY ARE DISGUSTED WITH THE WAY THEY ACT.

A Large Petition is in Circulation to Pledge People to Support a Mayor Who Will Change Things During His Term—Republican Leaders Associated With the New Movement.

It is a little early to discuss politics, but nevertheless there is a political scheme on foot that is growing daily. In this scheme there is an effort being made to make a change in the mode of procedure in the doings of the Board of Health. That is going to be the main point to be fought for. The people back of this movement say that they are simply sick and tired of the red tape displayed in the management of affairs in that department. To this end an effort will be made to nominate and elect a Mayor who will pledge his word to follow a different policy in his appointment of members of the Board of Health, than prevails at present.

There are now several petitions being circulated and between five and six hundred voters have already been seen. Most of these have signed the petition and have promised to vote for a nominee for the Mayoralty who will make some decided changes in the municipal government.

It is no secret that much quiet work is now being done in the city and some surprises are looked for at the next election. Several prominent Republican leaders have signified their desire to associate themselves with a new movement and some have gone so far as to say that they will support and work for a change in some of the departments of the city government.

ANOTHER BIG FARM FIRE

A UNION AGRICULTURIST SUFFERS A LOSS OF $5,000.

Origin of the Blaze Supposed to Have Been From Combustion in Green Hay—Valuable Horses Were Cremated.

Rahway, July 20—The large barns on the farm of Frank Cooper, of Union, were destroyed by fire at an early hour yesterday morning. Adjoining the barns were the carriage shed and several barrarks of grain, which all fell victims to the flames. The barns contained 100 tons of hay, which burned fiercely for several hours.

In the stables were two matched teams. Despite the efforts of Cooper and his men the horses could not be driven out and were burned. The cattle were saved. A bucket brigade was formed and the house saved.

The fire started at 2 o'clock and burned until daylight. The loss is estimated at $5,000, which was partially covered by insurance. The cause of the fire remains a mystery. It is supposed to have started from combustion in the green hay stored in the barns.

DOWN CAME POLE AND LINEMAN.

Crossarm Struck the Ground First and Probably Saved the Man's Life.

Bound Brook, July 20—Soon after 6 o'clock last evening, while T. J. Sweeney, a lineman in the employ of the Somerset Telephone Company, was repairing a break in the line, the pole, on which he was working fell, carrying Sweeney with it. He was working at the very top, and the spectators expected to see him crushed to death. As luck would have it the crossarm struck the hard macadam first and Sweeney escaped with a severe shaking up, landing on one shoulder. He managed to extricate himself from the live wires all about him and was taken home.

This morning he is reported as doing well and the chances are that he will suffer no serious injury from his fall. The pole which was nearly forty feet high had become rotten at the base.

Dead Line Established.

Justice Mosher, who is determined hereafter to insist upon his court room bearing the decorum of the Supreme Court, has had a set of rules and regulations drawn up which he says he will insist upon being heeded. The Justice has made up his mind that all persons, except lawyers, their clients and certain privileged persons must not invade the space inside the railing upon pain of ejectment from the court room.

WHITE FLAG IS READY.

Manila Now Only Needs a Show of Force.

WILL THEN SURRENDER

SPANISH COMMANDER REPORTED KILLED IN COMBAT.

German Admiral Credited With Saying He Will Stop Bombardment—More Troops to Sail from Pacific Coast —People for Peace.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Vancouver, British Columbia, July 20, 1:29 p. m—According to despatches that have been brought on the steamer Empress of China, which has just arrived from Hong Kong, Manila is ready to surrender to the Americans.

The archbishop and captain general will not voluntarily capitulate before they are compelled to by a show of force, but the backbone of the resistance is broken.

Upon a real show of force and an intention to bombard, the Spaniards will haul down the flag themselves if the officials do not give in. Intimations to this effect have already been received from many sources.

The newspapers here credit Admiral Detrich, the German commander of the fleet at Manila, with the statement that he will prevent the Americans from bombarding the city.

Victoria, British Columbia, July 20, 12:34 p. m.—The steamer Empress of China has arrived here from Hong Kong having on board Captain Hodgson, the commander of the revenue cutter McCullough, during the battle of Manila.

It is reported at Hong Kong that an engagement took place between the Spaniards and insurgents in which both sides suffered heavily.

Previous to the engagement the Spanish commander challenged the insurgent leader, Aguinaldo, to mortal combat. The challenge was accepted and resulted in the death of the Spanish officer.

The steamer also brings the news that the black flag of rebellion in China is increasing.

San Francisco, July 20, 12:09 p. m—Gen. Otis, with two battalions of South Dakota volunteers, will sail Friday on the transport, Rio Janeiro, for Manila.

Ships Fly from Watson

APPEAL TO COUNCIL TO STOP NEWSBOYS.

They Make Life Miserable for Business Men.

A PETITION IS DRAWN UP.

THEY YELL AND FIGHT IN ENTRYWAYS ON FRONT STREET.

Since the Arrival of the War Specials From New York They Congregate—The Common Council is Asked to Abate the Nuisance—The Plainfield Merchants are Also Affected by Them.

It is war on the newsboys this time. Not on those who are working hard to earn a few pennies by hustling about the city, selling Presses and the New York evening papers, but those who spend their afternoons on the streets in the vicinity of Front street and Park avenue in yelling, hooting and fighting, and incidentally sell a few papers.

Ever since the war, with the extra-specials arriving all day from New York, there have been great times for the newsboys. They are a noisy set, most of them, and they are inclined to look more at the fun of the thing rather than the revenue derived therefrom. The Board of Education saw the situation, but it was rather beyond their jurisdiction. Now the Common Council is to be called upon to take a hand and see if the small boys cannot be put under some restraint, so that those who do business in the neighborhood will be able to enjoy a little peace and quietude.

Early in the afternoon the boys begin to congregate. The corner of Front street and Park avenue is a favorite rendezvous. Sometimes there are two score of them. Each one has a paper or two and importunes the passersby in high shrill tones to purchase it. There are by no means enough people to give them all something to do so they gather and talk and then to quarrel. One small boy gets another's papers. Words pass, then they retire to the entry-way leading to some of the stores and offices and settle the dispute with fisticuffs. Meanwhile the business men in offices and stores have to listen to the yells and howls. Customers and clients are disturbed and go elsewhere.

Chief Grant comes to the rescue. The boys are told to behave themselves. The Chief waits a few minutes while they disappear, but only is his back turned when they all troop back again.

A petition has now been drawn up and is being signed by all the business men and merchants in the vicinity asking the Common Council to do something for their relief. Nothing is suggested. The Council is left to use its own means. The petition will be presented at the next meeting of the Council. The business men feel that they are now called on to suffer an unnecessary evil. It did not used to be so; it is only within the last few months that the small newsboys have grown to be such a nuisance.

The petitioners don't ask that any privileges be taken from the small boys. It is only that they be prevented from disturbing everyone around with their shouts and their fights in the entry-ways.

NO RIGHT TO SELL A PASS.

A Plainfield Man Has a New York Scalper Arrested.

"Timothy G. Cagney was arraigned in the Toombs Police Court today charged with violation of section 6, 1-5 of the Penal Codes which refers to the selling of non-transferable passes on railroad and steamship lines. J. S. Hobbs, the complainant, a lumber dealer of Plainfield, asserts that in the early part of February he purchased from Cagney at his office, 301 Broadway, a pass made out to E. J. Lawler and wife, from New York to Buffalo and return, for the sum of $25.

"P. J. Connolly, of the District Attorney's office, says the case is important as a test case. Cagney was held in $200 to await examination."

Mr. Hobbs conducts a lumber business in Newark, and resides on Pearl street, in the borough. He was married several months ago to a Miss Emma Gamberton, and it was while on his wedding trip that the passes mentioned were used.

HARD WORDS FOR A LOAN ASSOCIATION.

Excited Meeting of Shareholders in Board of Trade Rooms.

MEMBERS HAVE LOST FAITH

SECRETARY LITCHMAN INTIMATED THAT SOME ONE WAS LYING.

The New Jersey Central Building and Loan Association Under Criticism by Prominent Plainfield Business Men—Say the Methods of the Company are Not the Same as Promised.

A special meeting of the local members of the New Jersey Central Building and Loan Association was held Tuesday in the Board of Trade rooms for the purpose of meeting a representative of the association from Newark, who was to explain the workings of the organization and to give the members some additional information.

Charles H. Litchman, secretary of the New Jersey association, who resides in Newark, came to Plainfield and met with the members. In all there were about sixty members of the local branch and among those present at the meeting were W. R. Codington, E. M. Laing, Garret Dunham, F. S. Runyon, L. E. Barkalew, George Hartfelder, Henry Liefke, Dr. J. T. Fritts and many others.

It was evident at the start that many of the members had lost faith in the association and had come prepared to get what information they desired or get out. Some got the information, while others quit. The representative from Newark was subjected to constant cross examination and at times the discussion became animated.

Garret Dunham, president of the local branch, presided at the meeting, and E. M. Laing read the call of the meeting. Mr. Laing stated that he had paid into the association about $30 and all that he could get in return when he withdrew was $40. He said that he had visited the office of the association and found that a rental of $900 a year was paid, and he found the officers living in luxurious style.

According to Mr. Litchman, the association has not made a loan in two months, and during that time nearly $6,000 had been received. Yet with this amount the members withdrawing have not been able to get their money, Mr. Laing stated. Mr. Laing has acted as collecter in this city and he had a number of complaints made to him by members who were fined for not paying dues promptly, yet Mr. Laing said that the association had instructed him to send the dues to them not later than the twentieth of the month. This he did regularly, he says, except during the past month, and then he would not do it when he found out how the association was run. When the discussion grew animated between Mr. Laing and Mr. Litchman, the latter inferred that someone was a liar, and added that it was not himself that was doing the lying.

W. R. Codington asked Mr. Litchman what the association had done with their receipts, but the answer was not satisfactory to the questioner.

It is said that the agent, Mr. Rambo, who instituted the local branch a year ago last January, told the members that they could get their money back after a year with 6 per cent. interest. But Mr. Litchman stated last evening that this would not be done. It was also stated last evening that half of the money received was used for general expenses of the association. As a result of the meeting many refused to continue their payments, while a few others said that they would remain in the association.

MR. LACASSE MAY SAIL AGAIN.

Bourgogne Survivor Is Anxious to Visit His Parents in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. LaCasse, of Craig place, the later the only woman survivor of the ill-fated Bourgogne are still in receipt of a large number of letters every day from persons living all over the country, seeking information of the last moments of the passengers who went down to watery graves from the Bourgogne. All sorts of requests and enquiries are made of them.

Though at first, after his rescue, both Mr. and Mrs. LaCasse firmly decided never to again attempt the ocean voyage, the former has now changed his mind and is seriously contemplating going to Paris in a short time to visit his parents.

Mrs. LaCasse, however, has a horror of a trip across the Atlantic, and is quite positive that she will never try it again.

They have not yet effected a settlement with the French line.

BRITISH SMUGGLERS.

CAVES ON THE COAST WHERE CONTRABAND GOODS WERE STORED.

The Goods Were Stowed Away in the Caverns and Removed Under Cover of the Night—Ingenious Methods Considered for the Donkeys.

A very curious feature of the coasts of England, where rocky or wild, is the trenched and banked up paths from the caves along the coast. These are noticeable in Devon and Cornwall and along the Bristol channel. That terrible sea front consists of precipitous walls of rock, with only here and there a dip, where a brawling stream has sawed its course down to the sea, and here there is, perhaps, a sandy shore of diminutive proportions and the rocks around are pierced in all directions with caverns. The smugglers formerly ran their goods into these caves, when the weather permitted, or the preventive men were not on the lookout. They stowed away their goods in the caves and gave notice to the farmers and people of the neighborhood, all of whom were provided with numerous donkeys, which were henceforth sent down to the caches, and the kegs and bales were removed under cover of the night or of storm. As an excuse for keeping droves of donkeys it was pretended that the sea sand and the kelp served as admirable dressing for the land, and no doubt so they did. The trains of asses sometimes came up laden with sacks of sand, but not infrequently with kegs of brandy.

Now a wary preventive man might watch too narrowly the proceedings of these trains of asses. Accordingly squires, yeomen and farmers alike set to work to cut deep ways in the face of the downs, along the slopes of the hills, and to bank them so that the whole caravans of laden beasts might travel up and down absolutely unseen from the sea and greatly screened from the land side. Unquestionably the sunken ways and high banks are a great protection against the weather. So they were represented to be, and no doubt, greatly were the good folks commended for their consideration for the beasts and their drivers in thus at great cost shutting them off from the violence of the gale. Nevertheless, it can hardly be doubted that concealment from the eyes of the coast guard was sought by this means quite as much, if not more, than the sheltering of the beasts of burden from the weather.

in Belmont, Mass. He was caught in a trap set by Mr. Hutchison, a poulterer, whose small chickens had been disappearing at a rate depressing to his thrift.

Instead of walking about in proper four-legged way, the rat hopped from place to place. An investigation showed that its two front legs were missing, and a post-mortem showed that the rat had been born minus forelegs and had to hop his way through all his chickenesting life.

How the Chinese Do Things.

The Chinese do everything backward. They exactly reverse the usual order of civilization, says the Richmond Christian Advocate.

Note, first, that the Chinese compass points to the south instead of the north.

Men wear skirts, the women trousers.

The men wear their hair long, and the women wear it short.

The men carry on dressmaking, and the women carry burdens.

The spoken language is not written, and the written language is not spoken.

Books are read backward. What we call foot-notes are inserted at the top of the page.

The Chinese launch their vessels sideways, and mount their horses from the off side.

In China the hands of the clocks are immovable; it is the dial that revolves.

Tattooed Royalty.

Foreign gossip says that Queen Olga of Greece has an anchor tattooed on her shoulder as a token of her affection for her father, the late Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, and that Princess Waldmar of Denmark, wife of the sailor son of King Christian, is also marked in like fashion, with the addition of a crown.

Memorial tablets have been placed to mark the headquarters of Prescott and Rochambeau at Newport.

AFTER VALVE LEAKS.

Why It Is Often Necessary to Apply Oil to Steel Tyres.

No matter how sound a tire may be, and how carefully the valve may have been made, the owner and rider of it must not expect that his pump will never be called into requisition. It is to all intents and purposes practically impossible to make an absolutely air-tight valve, and if a tire only requires to be pumped up every week or so, there should be no occasion for dissatisfaction on the part of its lucky possessor.

Not unfrequently, however, it happens that the valve gets out of order, and leaks more rapidly than it has any business to do; and, indeed, a considerable proportion of the slight leakages which let down a tire perhaps in the course of a few hours or a day are due to the dust-cap and not to punctures or any defects in the tire itself. It is, therefore, often necessary to test the valve in order to see whether there is any appreciable escape of air or not.

Supposing the valve to be of a popular type, the first thing to do is to take off the dust-cap and touch the end of the valve with the saliva. If the air is escaping this way—that is to say, through the same channel by which it is pumped in—a bubble will form, though perhaps very slowly if the leakage is very slight.

If no bubble appears at the end of the valve, turn the wheel in such a position that the valve points downwards, and hold a glass of water so that the valve is partially immersed and observe whether any bubbles form. If so, it may be merely that the cap is not screwed on tight enough, and it should be screwed on as tight as it can be with the fingers. No pliers or other instruments should be used to tighten or a damaged valve will be the result.

If no leakage is detected by either of the foregoing tests, even though the valve is still suspected, it may be necessary to open the tire, if it be a double-tube one, take out the inner tube, pump a little air into it, and immerse the entire valve in water. Bubbles must then be looked for where the valve is attached to the tube.

If tightening up does not stop the leakage at this point, it is not wise for any but experienced hands to attempt to remedy matters, and the tire had better be taken to a repairer.

Costume For Dude Cyclists.

W. H. Webster, who has been well-known in New York cycling circles for a number of years, tells of an incident that may perhaps be as instructive to some as it was amusing to him. Webster has a nephew, 19 years old, who is attending a military academy and is quite a man of fashion. Webster asked him a few days ago what to do about laying in his outing clothes for the summer, inquiring concerning the propriety of duck trousers, &c. The young fashionable replied: "Duck trousers? Not much! The only real thing for outing the coming summer will be a bicycle rig—a pair of loud plaid knickerbockers, black and white preferred and tight fitting; a blue jersey shirt, with white buttons; white linen and tie, plain ribbed, dark golf stockings with fancy tops, and patent leather or tan shoes."

Gardiner's Speed Wonderful.

The speed which Arthur Gardiner displayed in the South is commented upon by all. He won his races as he pleased and could sprint eighths without effort in 13 1-5 and 2-5 seconds. This performance could not be duplicated by any man on the track to-day. Gardiner is five lengths faster in the home stretch than any other rider and will prove this the coming season. Gardiner races for pleasure and not for the money there is in it. He never takes the chances of other riders and in this way loses many races

THE BICYCLE SEASON.

Muscles That Are Developed.

The most developed muscles in a cyclist are those of the thigh, which are developed to a marvelous extent in many riders. The muscles of the calf and leg are also benefited, and the tendons of the ankle are strengthened and improved. The pulling on the handles when hill climbing tends to increase the muscles at the back of the shoulders, while the chest and arm muscles are also kept in good condition.

Women and Century Runs.

The exclusion of women from century runs of certain New York clubs has inspired a number of other organizations to make special arrangements to accommodate the gentler sex in their 100-mile trips, and it is not improbable that the outcome of the agitation against women century riders will be that at the end of the season more women than ever will be wearing century bars.

Cooper, Kiser and Bald are expected to lead the American cycle racing brigade this year.

HOW MUCH IT COST.

The Mistake a Little Boy Made by Not Getting Up Early.

One, two, three! Kenneth nestled uneasily. Four, five, six! He bored his tousled brown head deep into the pillows and tried not to hear the seven.

Lazy little Kenneth! The next time the clock spoke it said "eight," imperatively, and sent him into his shoes and stockings in a panic.

Eight o'clock! Not a tardy mark yet this term, but here was danger ahead. Oh, dear, it 'twasn't so far to school, and breakfast at 8, eat, too.

After all, he didn't dare to stop to eat but three muffin-bites and a cooky. Then he snatched his lunch-pail from the pantry shelf and was off. Mamma was up in the berry garden, picking currants. It wouldn't do to run up for his good-by kiss—there wasn't a minute to spare. Kenneth was nine years old, but how he did miss that kiss!

He was late to school, anyway, just by an unlucky minute or two, and on his way to his seat he could hear Miss Periwinkle's pencil-point—hard and rasping—tracing his poor little black mark. Kenneth's heart sank. No prize for punctuality now.

Well, it was a sorry morning, and a sorry day. Kenneth was too hungry and too crestfallen to study, so his spelling-lesson came to grief. He had to stay in at recess to study it and lost the chance to borrow part of his dinner to comfort his hungry little stomach.

When noon did come, how he ran for his dinner-pail! It looked so shiny and comforting, and he sniffed little spicy, consoling smells round the edges of the cover. Didn't he know just what was in there?

"My mother puts up the splendidest dinners in this town!" he cried. "The splendidest in—this—town!"

"You wait an' see! Any o' you fellows got spice-cakes in your dinners, an' tongue sandwiches—an'—an' sage cheese? I guess so!"

The cover snapped off. The boys peered into—an empty pail! Empty as poor Kenneth's little hungry stomach. It wasn't his lunch-pail at all. Why hadn't he noticed there wasn't any small red worsted bow on the handle? This was mamma's milk-pail, and he got it in his hurry—oh, dear!

Of course the boys—being boys—laughed at him loudly, and of course Kenneth's face reddened angrily. But he made a big, brave effort and joined in the laugh. There was a great lump in his throat, and it was hard work squeezing the laugh through—it got caught and broke into two pieces. Still, it was a laugh. He put his hands into his pockets and walked off, trying to whistle.

"My mother puts up the spiea—" called one of the boys after him, but he didn't get any further.

"No, you don't!" Benny said, stoutly. "Ken's a brick! I guess you wouldn't 'a' laughed at yourself. You'd 'a' been hoppin'."

"That's so; so would I," agreed Emile Smith. "Good for Ken!"

"Let's take it over to him. Come on!" cried Benny, excitedly.

And when Kenneth went back to his desk there was a generous dinner spread out on it, waiting for him. Every boy had shared his choicest bits.

So, you see, Kenneth wasn't hungry when he got home to mamma at night, except for his missing kiss. But he was ever so much wiser.

"You see, mamma," he confided to her as he went to do he is laybones. It's dreadful 'xpensive."

How to See Through a Brick.

Construct a hollow box or case, like the figure in the margin. One side is purposely removed in the engraving, to enable you to see the arrangement of the interior. A, B, C, and D are four small pieces of looking-glass, all placed at an angle of 45 degrees, with respect to those sides of the box on which they are fixed; at E and G two flat pieces of glass are inserted, as in the case of telescopes. Supposing you look through the opening E, in the direction of an object placed at O, you would see it in the same manner as if there was an uninterrupted view between E and G, which is evidently not the case. The cause of this is readily explained. The image of the object at O is received on the looking-glass A, by which it is reflected to B, and it is again from B to C, and afterwards to D; and this last image in D is seen by the eye of the spectator placed at E, in the same direction as if in reality he was looking at the real object itself, in the direction of the dotted line from O to E. From this it is evident that the placing an opaque body at F cannot prevent the object at O being seen. Of course all this arrangement of the instrument is concealed, and you place it in the hands of a companion, that he may look through E or G, it matters not which, at any object placed beyond. You may then safely wager that your instrument is of so magical a nature that it will enable you to see through a brick wall; but as a single brick will be more convenient, and equally wonderful, you are willing to satisfy his doubts at once. Of course the hand or the hat, or any other opaque object, will answer the same purpose.

AN ELECTRIC CHAPEL.

A VILLAGE CHAPEL LIGHTED WHOLLY BY VACUUM TUBES.

It Was the Star Exhibit at the Recent Electrical Exposition in New York City —The Beauty and Purity of the Light and Perfect Lighting System.

One of the most attractive exhibits at the recent New York electrical exhibition was the chapel lighted entirely by the vacuum tube invented by D. Mc-Farlan Moore. The visitor was introduced into a passageway leading to the chapel, along which Mr. Moore sought to give the pilgrim a five-minute practical course in the applications of electricity. Emerging from a bend in the passage the front of the chapel suddenly loomed up a perfect reproduction of a stone village church, steeple, clock and all. Within was seen the vaulted roof, ribbed with verticals in lines of light consisting of long curved tubes of glass about two inches in diameter and glowing their entire length with a pure white light. The harmony of the surroundings was everywhere observed. The ear was gratified with melodious strains from a magnificent pipe organ, which filled the far end of the chapel behind the altar fully equipped, even to the lectern. The tube arches sprang from pilasters, each capped with a highly polished, specially designed brass fixture. They took the form of a crown, while at the apex of the chapel ceiling, where the tube arches met, they were joined by a highly decorated brass cylinder bent at its center. These were the first vacuum tube lighting fixtures ever designed, and are a striking example of the manner in which Mr. Moore has worked out the thousand and one details of his lighting system. In this connection it should be mentioned that the chapel was wired completely with iron armored conduits. Over the rear door in colored vacuum tubes was the inscription: "Let There Be Light." The photograph which served as the original for the accompanying illustration was taken entirely by the light from the vacuum tubes.

The Very Oddest Hobby.

Probably the strangest hobby in the world is that of Henry Woolridge of Mayfield, Ky., who devotes all his money and time to developing his plot in the local cemetery in a way which is as grotesque as it is, happily, original. His first modest and laudable effort was to erect a plain monument to mark the family resting place. Not satisfied with this, however, he added to it a white marble shaft bearing on its face a relief presentment of himself on horseback.

Having thus struck the personal note, "Uncle Henry," as he is familiarly called, had a life-sized statue of himself erected at a cost of $1,000. He then introduced statues of his mother and eldest brother, to be followed shortly by similar statues in Indiana limestone of a favorite niece and of a young girl who had brought him flowers during an illness.

His next ambition was to see himself on horseback, and the family gathering was augmented by a life-size statue of "Uncle Henry" on his favorite steed. Then followed presentments in stone of his favorite deerhound, "Tow Head," chasing a deer; another of a fox pursued by his foxhound, "Bob," and a marble sarcophagus with a carved representation of his favorite gun.

The latest additions have been statues of three of his brotuers in the stiffest poses and the most prosaic of dress. As "Uncle Henry," although 75 years old, is still hale and more enthusiastic than ever, it is certain that this strange menagerie will receive many more additions before he sleeps in the oddest environment with which eccentricity ever surrounded a dead man.

Where Wives Are In Demand.

Wives are wanted in Rhodesia. The British South Africa Company is anxious for native conversation. For many years the Chartered Company has discountenanced marriage among the mounted police, civil servants and other employes, a measure for which Cecil Rhodes, whose misogynist views are well known, has been held responsible. But this policy has been entirely reversed, and an edict has gone forth among the Chartered Company's officials promising that preference in promotion will be given to married men and advising all who can do so to enter forthwith into the bonds of matrimony.

Wonder of a Volcanic Isle.

One of the greatest wonders of Java, "the fire island," a large lake of boiling mud, is situated almost in the plains of Grobogans,' some distance to the northeast of Solo. It is nearly two miles in circumference, and in the center immense columns of thick mud may be seen continually rising and falling, like great black timbers thrust forth and then suddenly withdrawn by a giant's hand. Besides the phenomena of the columns, there are two gigantic bubbles near the western edge, which fill up like huge balloons and explode on an average three times per minute.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

How One of the World's Great Men Nearly Lost His Life When a Child.

The world has narrowly missed losing some of its great leaders before ever they grew to manhood. The Outlook tells a story of one of these narrow escapes.

One November evening a mother was journeying toward the city of Marseilles with her son, a lad of 8. She had been to a country house near the city, and all day the child had run about, happy in his new surroundings. Now twilight overtook him, and the mother put him in a peach basket borne by a donkey, and that he might not catch cold in the chill November air, covered the basket with a thick brown shawl.

The boy, cozy and warm, presently fell asleep. The donkey trugged on, getting ahead of the woman in its eagerness to reach home.

There was a local custom-house at the gate of Marseilles, and the wary inspector, if he surmised that a package contained contraband articles, resorted to the expedient of thrusting a sharp steel pick through it.

On the present occasion the donkey had come up to the gate and the inspector was preparing to thrust his pick into the basket, when the mother, some distance behind, caught sight of the movement. The voice of fear is strong, and the sharp cry of the woman that her son was in the basket did not fail to reach his ears. He threw down his pick, and the child was saved. The boy was Adolph Thiers.

The Balanced Coin.

This engraving represents what seems to be an astonishing statement, namely, that a quarter, or other piece of money, can be made to spin on the point of a needle. To perform this experiment, procure a bottle, cork it, and in the cork place a needle. Now take another cork, and cut a slit in it, so that the edge of the coin will fit into the slit; next place two forks in the cork, as seen in the engraving, and, placing the edge of the coin on the needle, it will spin around without falling off. The reason is this: that the weight of the forks, projecting as they do much below the coin, brings the center of gravity of the arrangement much below the point of suspension, or the point of the needle, and therefore the coin remains perfectly safe and upright.

How to Make Leaf Prints.

(By Arthur Hudson. Age 12.)

To make a leaf print you must first get some leaves when they are not too tough. The best time is in early spring. Then you must get some blue print paper at a photograph supply store. This can be had at all prices, the size I use—4 by 5 inches—being ten cents a dozen sheets. Next a printing frame with glass to fit is necessary; but those who do not wish to buy one can buy what is called a transparent slate. This is a frame with a ground glass, and though which, if any drawing is placed under the glass, it can be traced on the glass. Take the ground glass of the printer, and lay out on a piece of plain window glass the same size. Then the sheet of paper is taken out of the package (in lamp or gas light only), and the leaves are laid upon it. Then the leaves and paper are put in the frame, the leaves between the glass and the gray side of the blue paper. Now put the frame or plate into the sun, for a strong sun is needed, and leave it out from ten minutes to three-quarters of an hour, according to the sun. Then take the paper out and let some cold water run over it until the image comes out clear, after which you can dry in the sun without injury.

Sparrows Slay a Polecat.

"You have often heard of the ferocity of birds, no doubt," said William Anderson, a hardy old woodsman, who lives on the lower Ohio, "but I doubt if you ever heard of two attacking and killing an animal that one would imagine could whip three or four fierce curs. While hunting down in the flats near the mouth of Green river several years ago I saw a large and fierce skunk beat an ignominious retreat after trying in vain to beat several English sparrows, and later, when the skunk had screwed his courage up to the sticking point again, I saw those same insignificant looking little birds tear the animal to shreds. When my attention was attracted the sparrows were flying from one side of the thicket to the other, twittering like mad. When I went to learn the cause the skunk, badly frightened, was dodging from one side to the other of a log, trying to escape the savage attacks of the feathered foes. The birds didn't mind me, but kept dashing their little bills into the skunk's well-punctured hide. When the skunk started across an open space to the cover of nearby driftwood his tormentors pounced upon him and riddled the poor skunks hide."

A Tulip Festival.

Tulips are cultivated in Constantinople, and there is a tulip festival there once a year in spring.

PHRASEOLOGY OF THE SEA.

Some of the Most Familiar Titles and Their Origins.

In the early days of the English naval organizations vessels of war had double crews, a military one for fighting purposes and another of mariners for navigating duties. In consequence, a large number of English sea terms have a military origin.

At that time the rank of admiral was unknown, and the chief officer of the squadron was called a constable, or justice. The term admiral as now used is derived from the Arabic "amir" or "emir," a commander (as in "Amir-al-Bahr," commander of the sea). The early English form was "amiral," and is still preserved as such by the French.

The title of captain is not a naval, but a military one. Originally, the real captain of a ship was a "master." A military officer was placed on board, though he knew nothing of nautical matters. Gradually his importance increased, while that of the master diminished proportionately till at the present day the master's office is gradually becoming obsolete. Commodore comes from the Spanish "comendador."

The title of lieutenant is borrowed directly from the French, and is meant as a place holder, or one who took the place of the captain when absent. In former days there were no cadets but volunteers, but with the gradual advance of politeness, the term cadet was appropriated from the French.

"Boatswain" is derived from the Saxon "swein," a servant. The term quartermaster, as used in both the army and navy, appears to be confusing and anomalous. In the army it is the title of a commissioned officer who performs the duties of a responsible duties. In the navy he is simply a warrant officer directing subordinate duties. In the old ships and in olden times his position was a more important one; so much so that he was considered to be the fourth part of the master of the ship's quartermaster.

The ship's cook was once a great man and there are instances on record of his being promoted for efficient preparation of food. The ship's steward was originally the caterer.

The terms larboard and starboard come from the Italian "questra borda" and "quella borda," which by rapid delivery became starboard and larboard; but owing to the strong similarity of sound they were changed into starboard and port (Latin porto, to carry), the use of the terms in the original form having been the cause of many accidents.

Gangway has been handed down from the days of the ancient galley of the Phoenicians, Carthaginians and Romans, it having been a board which ran along the whole length serving as a passage for the rowers to and from their seats. It was also used as a resting place for the mast and sail when not in use.

The cockpit, in the lowest part of the vessel below the water used during an action for the treatment of the wounded, is derived from the old days of the English sport of cock fighting; but this has been modernized and is now known as the "flats"—why, no one can explain.

Anchor came from the Latin "ancchora," or "ancora," which up to 600 B. C. consisted simply of a large stone with a hole through it.

The peculiarity of so many portions of a ship's rigging bearing names derived from the trappings of a horse can only be accounted for from the fact that the early warships were manned by soldiers who, on sailing, the natural consequence being that they, the sailors, adapted some of their terms to meet their fancy, among these being bridles, whips, bits, stirrups, and the like.

Palm Trees of Cuba.

The little island of Cuba has nearly thirty different varieties of palm trees. Chief among them is the royal palm, a majestic tree with a straight trunk and a bunch of plumelike leaves growing out of the top, the lower ones drooping toward the ground. It is the most common as well as the most beautiful tree in Cuba. It has been called the blessed tree for its every part is useful. Its roots are made into medicines; its trunk is easily split into boards for building. The trunk has no bark and the inside is porous, the outer portion being hard and nearly as brittle as glass.

The center bud at the top of the royal palm tree, from which all the leaves grow, is tender substance and is a very pleasant food, whether eaten raw, cooked as a vegetable or preserved with sugar. The stems on the long leaves are odd. They are semicircular and embrace the trunk of the tree. The stem is called the yagua and looks like a thin board. It often five or six feet long and the natives find use to serve various purposes. Sections cut off serve as plates, or if soaked in warm water it becomes pliable and may be bent in any shape, afterward hardening. Sometimes when thus softened it is folded at the ends like a baker's paper hat, fastened with wooden pins and serves the Cuban farmer as a water bucket, basin or pan. Sometimes the insurgents use one of these improvised dishes as a kettle in which to cook their beef and yams. The water in the dish keeps the wood from burning.

In times of peace the yagua or stem of the palm leaf is used to cover bales of tobacco. Set on a frame it may form a very good bed; again, the yagua is used as a tarpaulin or mackintosh. The Cuban soldiers with a few leaves can build tents for themselves.

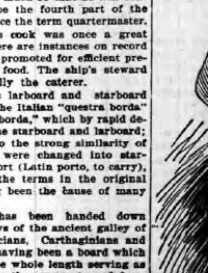
WORLD OF SPORTS.

THE FATAL ALL-ROUND EVENT.

One of the Severest Competitions Ever Attempted by Athletes.

It is a singular thing that within a year two winners of the all-round have died—John Cosgrove of Albany, and Alexander Jordan of New York city. Mr. Cosgrove died from the results of an appendicitis operation, and Mr. Jordan succumbed to trouble with his heart and lung. The all-round is one of the severest competitions ever attempted by athletes, and the strain on a winner in the past has invariably been terrific. Malcolm Ford was one of the very few men who ever started on an all-round competition and finished comparatively fresh and strong. The all-round programme consists of ten events, decided in this order: 100 yards run, putting the 16-pound shot, running high jump, half mile walk, throwing the 56-pound hammer, pole vault, 120-yards hurdle race, throwing the 56-pound weight, running broad jump and one mile run. Under the existing system of scoring, which is the best that has been devised, a man to qualify must equal the following figures: 100 yard run, 0:14 2-5; one mile run, 7:30; half mile walk, 6:22; 120-yard hurdle race, 0:22 2-5; running high jump, 3 feet 9 inches; running broad jump, 12 feet 1 inch; pole vault, 6 feet 6 inches; putting the 16-pound shot, 26 feet 2 inches; throwing the 16-pound hammer, 91 feet, and throwing the 56-pound weight, 25 feet. The above performances equalled gives a man the minimum percentage; the maximum, which is the best on record in every case, gives a competitor 1,000 points.

ERNEST ROEBER,



CHAMPION GRECO-ROMAN WRESTLER OF THE UNITED STATES.

Cornell Wants a Shorter Course.

Columbia, Cornell and Pennsylvania have not yet decided whether Poughkeepsie or Saratoga will be the place for their regatta. In a general way Saratoga is preferred by all three competitors. Cornell is considering the advisability of asking to have the distance of the course shortened one mile. This would mean a three-mile race instead of four miles. It is now decided that the University of Wisconsin will enter a crew. Professor Wheeler of Cornell says that the reports published recently in effect that the University of Toronto had been invited to send a crew to compete in the regatta are not true. It is probable, however, that the Canadian university will yet be represented, as the name of its crew as a competitor will be presented at the next meeting of the association.

MISCELLANEOUS SPORTS.

The number of golf clubs now in the United States Golf Association is 101, an increase of 40 within a year.

A fine old hickory bat that has been in Pete Browning's possession for over seven years has been presented to Fred Clarke by the Gladiator.

The national amateur billiard championship of America, which was to have been held in the near future, has been postponed until the late fall or winter months.

Martin Julian, Fitz's adviser and manager, who has been rather quiet for several weeks, has cut loose again, and this time he announces that Fitzsimmons will fight McCoy sooner than the latter has an idea.

Gaudaur, champion oarsman of the world, and Robert Johnson of Vancouver, have arranged a match race for the championship and a purse. A side bet of $2,000 has been made. The race will be rowed this summer on Burrard Inlet, at Vancouver, B. C.

L. M. Hamburger of Chicago, who is now in Paris as the representative of the American Athletic Union, expects to carry out ideas which will result in a great athletic meet at the Paris Exposition in 1900. Hamburger is an enthusiast on athletics, and has the warm support of every one interested in amateur athletics.

A six-mile professional race for the 100-yard championship of the world will be run off in September by W. H. Robertson. The entry will be $50, and efforts will be made to bring several crack English sprinters over here. The Boston men who have promoted this event heretofore have charged $100 entrance. The added money will be $250.

A CURE FOR POVERTY.

Once [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] and
[illegible] and
[illegible] and to [illegible] ived him
very much.

"Ah," said he to [illegible] frequently to himself, now [illegible] I am! If sickness overtakes me, or if work does not come, my poor children will all die of hunger." Oppressed by his thought, he sat down one day by the roadside, his head resting in his hands. A physician of the market-town chanced to pass,—a man charitable as he was rich. He saw the poor man, and, fearing that he was ill, he stopped and said: "What is the matter, my good fellow? You seem to suffer."

Thus encouraged, the unfortunate man confided all his story to the good doctor, who said, "Ah, yes; if one does not kill grief, then grief itself will kill. Come with me and I will give you a remedy."

"Look," said he to the workman, "here is an ingot of gold which my father bequeathed to me. My father was very poor, but in spite of his poverty he saved a sou each day, and at the end of fifty years he had a little fortune. I, too, was very poor when my father died, leaving me this ingot, but by dint of toil and economy I have made my fortune. I have never broken into the ingot, but the thought that it was there gave me courage. Now my future is assured, I no longer fear want and poverty, so I am going to give it to you. I hope that you will not have to make use of it, but that the possession of the little treasure will put your soul at rest."

The poor man accepted the ingot with a thousand thanks, and with a light heart he hastened to his hovel to show it to his wife.

"Now we can sleep without fearing the morrow," said he, "and if I do not find work to-day, my children will not go to bed fasting."

Nevertheless, he decided not to break into the treasure unless it became absolutely necessary, and went to bury it in the cellar before going out again to look for work.

His frank and beaming countenance, attracted the attention of a farmer, who at once employed him, and, as he did his best for his employer, he received good wages, and was engaged to return the next day. The earnings of each day were sufficient for the family needs, and his wife, who no longer spent the time in gossiping, cultivated the little garden, sold her products, and, rivaling the doctor's father, laid aside a sou each day.

From time to time, as work was unsteady, it became necessary to break into the mother's little savings, but the ingot of gold remained untouched in the cellar, for the man had remained resolute and had vowed that only the last extremity would induce him to touch it.

Thus the years passed on; the children grew to manhood, and, following the example of their parents, were happy and industrious. They soon began to gain, and were shortly independent, so that the laborer and his wife became richer day by day, and when they were old they had need of nothing.

One day a poor beggar knocked at the door, and, in reply to their questions, he told them of his many misfortunes. The workman then told in return his own story, and said at last, "I have no need of the ingot of gold. See, I have saved so much that I am beyond want and care. Let me give you this treasure, and I hope that it will bring good luck also to you."

After speaking thus to the beggar, he went to dig up the treasure, and, returning, gave it to the beggar. The latter, who had received a very good education in his youth, examined the ingot and said: "This is not gold, it is brass!"

The wife would not believe it,— rubbed it vigorously to show how brightly it shone, and in doing so perceived that it bore some writing. Neither she nor her husband knew how to read, so they asked the beggar to explain what the letters signified.

The beggar then read as follows:—

"IT IS LESS PRIVATION THAN FEAR OF THE MORROW WHICH CAUSES THE MISFORTUNES OF THE POOR. GO, THEREFORE, BOLDLY AND WITHOUT FEAR, UPON THE ROAD OF LIFE."

Wifely Consolence in Arabia.

When an Arab woman is tired of widowhood and desires to marry again, she goes the night before the wedding to her husband's tomb and prays him not to be offended. To make quite sure of his forgiveness she brings with her two large goatskins filled with water and with these she waters the grave that the refreshing liquid may soak down to the defunct husband's bones. Having thus done all she can to propitiate his spirit she goes off with a good courage to start life again as a wife.

PREPARED.

Oft have I wondered at the fearless hearts
With which strong men and tender women go,
To meet great Death; but now I seem to know
The secret of their courage. 'Tis a part
Of their whole life, the end of all their art,
O Nature, to their souls. The steady flow
Of time is ceaseless; thick thy hand doth sow
The world with stars, while from earth's bosom start
The lovely flowers, and there are trees and streams,
And women's faces and love's mystery.
And all these things are influences that give
The needful lesson. They are all foreglooms
Of time one strangest, saddest thing to know
Of death afraid when we have dared to live!

DEBORAH'S SECRET.

BY MARION F. GIBBS.

Deborah Beal had a secret which she guarded as the miser guards his gold; yet the very air of Connecticut hospitality draped the long piazza around the Beal homestead, lingered in the swaying vines of bitter-sweet, nodded from the creamy sprays of the wild clematis, and breathed in the fragrance of the golden honeysuckles, while the odor of currant jelly streamed through the open windows, across the dusty road, to the solitary figure on the opposite doorstep, a man of perhaps forty summers, who just then was pondering over a passage read that morning.

"What rights are his who dare not strike for them?" he repeated musingly, but how could he approach her after a silence of so many years? And then, Deborah Beal had a secret!

He remembered how, just fifteen years ago, he, John Hastings, had brought a letter from the office addressed in a bold masculine hand to Deborah. He had asked the name of her correspondent, and she had stubbornly refused to offer any explanation.

The golden haired playmate of his schooldays, but for this slight misunderstanding, would have reigned for years the mistress of Willow Farm. Time but enhanced her comeliness, he was fain to confess. Her hair, as golden as ever, was beautiful, in the rays of the sun filled the west piazza, casting a halo around the quaint rocker in which she sat every afternoon, busy with her needlework.

The Plymouth Rocks were running about in their yard, restrained from wrongdoing by a wire fence, while in the orchard the jangle of children and the ducks were sailing about, their contentment only equalled by the two colts peering inquiringly through the bars further up the hill.

Yes, she had ordered the netting for fear they might be tempted to wander across the way. What did he care about the hens? It was the secret! Even that might remain forever a mystery if he could but summon courage enough to walk up the path, dazzling with brilliant coleus and scarlet geraniums, where Deborah to begin their lives anew.

"What rights are his," he slowly repeated, as if summoning strength, when a scream rent the air, a shrill cry of defiance, a woman's scream—Deborah's—and she alone, unprotected!

For an instant he hesitated, then dashed across the lawn. The sight held him spellbound. In the path, fronting the meadow, stood Deborah, frantically waving a golden wig at a large hawk. Her screams had rendered him powerless to bear away his intended victim, who was trembling at her mistress' feet, cackling in rage and affright.

A thought flashed through John Hastings' mind as he strode past the maples, through the tiny rustic gate, into the dusty road to the meadow beyond, where his hair neighbor stood, still uttering, hysterical cries and still holding the golden tresses aloft.

"Deborah," he said, apparently not looking at the bowed head before him, which he perceived was crowned with short golden curls, "is this," and he paused ruefully at the golden locks fallen now in the crimson clover at their feet, "is this the secret?" And with one shy upward glance Deborah whispered, "Yes."

"It happened while you were in Malden that my mother's illness and relief forced my own," she confessed later. "Almost brain fever, the doctor thought, and I lost the curls you were so proud of. It was the height of silliness, but I wrote to a prominent firm, and upon your return you never imagined that the golden curls you so admired were—detachable. The letter you handed me was from the same firm, telling me of a preparation to insure these short locks," she said laughingly, for the wig had long ago been banished, "a rapid growth. Undoubtedly it proved a ruse, for these diminutive curls still continue to flourish. And this, John, is Deborah Beal's last secret!"

"Yes," he answered gravely, "Deborah Beal's last secret, for to-morrow is her wedding day."

"Cut-cut-cut-a-dah!" came clear and shrill from the wire netting.

"It's Clover," Deborah said. "How that hawk did frighten me!"

But John Hastings looked immeasurably happy.

Unintentional Injury.

"Young man," said the Senator to the reporter, "you have done me irreparable harm."

"What have I done?" asked the bewildered reporter.

"I got in largely on a temperance platform, as you may recollect."

"Yes, sir."

"And you speak of me in this morning's paper as 'drinking my coffee with gusto.' It will take me more than a lifetime to set it out of the heads of my constituents that gusto isn't some kind of alcoholic beverage."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Dine Taffeta Gowns.

Many lovely evening and reception gowns are seen, the models composed of taffeta in delicate pinks, blues and yellows proving the most popular. The new taffeta is much lighter in weight than formerly and is therefore more appropriate for summer wear.

A charming confection in Sevres blue taffeta has the skirt exquisitely embroidered with appliques. The bodice is made surplice fashion, and is caught up at the left side with a rosette. The tiny revers open over a vest of white mousseline de soie, while the sleeves are handsomely embroidered.

Stopping a Leak.

A mechanical genius has devised a method of indicating and stopping a leak by the use of compressed air. He divides a ship into air-tight compartments, fitted with doors provided with packing material, and connected by tubes with a room on deck called the "switch-room." In this room is a junction chest supplied with compressed air from fixed or portable compressors, *and so arranged that the air can be de*livered to any of the compartments. Over the chest is a gauge-compartment from which water can be forced out when required, and electric indicators are also connected with the switch room to indicate the accumulation of water in any of the compartments. Should the vessel "spring a leak," the indicator will show which compartment is affected, so that the compressed air may be forced in to drive the water out.

The Newest Corset.

French women are always complimented by foreign visitors for the easy grace with which they move. It is asserted by the Parisians themselves that the secret lies in the fact that they never wear anything that is really tight. The waist-line is snugly fitted, but for the rest entire freedom is allowed. This, of course, applies strictly to the corset, which is cut low at the top, the hip-line reaching only a little below the waist, and the front cut quite long, which preserves a firm outline. American women have always admired the Parisian figure, and accordingly, their preference and wish being the main guide of importers, the corsets for the coming season are a reproduction or modification of this shape.

Dotted Swiss Waist.

Separate waists continue to grow in favor and in the hot summer months are especially desirable. Many women, however, do not like the stiff, tailor-made looking shirt waists and they have many other varieties of a daintier sort to choose from.

White dotted swiss makes a pretty model. This is made with a round yoke decorated with three rows of insertion. The material composing the lower part of blouses is attached to the yoke in groups of three tiny tucks. The sleeves are quite full and are shirred in at the wrist.

The Ivory Eye.

Paris, which is always doing something extraordinary, has devised the ivory eye as a love token. The emblem of the engagement ring as a pledge of love is sinking into oblivion in favor of the exchange of eyes. The engagement eye must be an exact reproduction of the individual eye. Every model must give his or her artist at least three sittings to get the right shade and the perfect expression. Then the lover carries his sweetheart's eye about with him as a watchful guard against evil.

Gorgeous Feather Bone.

Among the improvements of other fashionable articles of wear, the ostrich feather boas have undergone considerable change. Besides the combination of neutral colors, such as we are more or less familiar with, are now more pronounced mixtures, mauve and green, violet and white, green and rose. These will be worn in beach driving, on hotel piazzas, and on cool evenings, and many will match the color-blendings on the gown or hat.

Fancy Straw Hats.

The majority of the fancy straw hats are so laden with trimming that they look burdensome and topheavy, and are unfit entirely for hot-weather wear. The plainest and prettiest styles are the dainty, pliable Neapolitans, the ever-popular Leghorns, and the sephyr braids, trimmed with orchids and green tulle, lace, velvet ribbon, and lilacs, heliotrope, mignonette, and pink roses, and so on.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

The parasols this year are elaborate, and the colorings, combinations, and new effects in frilling, tucking, inserted Vandykes of richest lace, and accordion-pleatings are simply marvellous. The richest and heaviest materials are utilized in strong contrast to the most diaphanous and perishable. Any very many fabrics which in times past were never thought of in the creation of a parasol are now brought into prominent use. The size and shape of this season's models are varied somewhat from those fashionable a year ago, and the handles of exquisite varieties are exquisite works of art. There are now on exhibition on some [illegible] of brocade, with moire, faille, taffeta, foulard, crepe de chines, crepe lisse, chiffon, grenadine, Indian mull, Swiss muslin, grass-cloth, pongee, surah, and fancy silk—plain, satin, plaited, checked, coin-dotted, embroidered, and striped ribbon, lace, net, velvet, silk-wrought mousseline de soie, pleated chiffon ruches, and elegant guipure appliques are among the trimmings used for these various styles. So much fancy decoration proves that once handsome plain silk from which water can be forced out when required, and electric indicators are also connected with the switch

How It Is Arranged.

"Of course you don't buy poetry by the yard?" he said to the editor of the magazine.

"Certainly not," replied the editor. "Quality has more to do with the price than quantity."

"Well, would you mind telling me just how you decide it.

"Not at all," answered the editor cheerfully. "We have a corps of readers, you know, and it passes through the hands of all of them. If the meaning of the poem is apparent to all we reject it. If one of them is unable to make out what the poet is driving at, it is accepted conditionally, and will be used some time within the next ten or twelve years if we have room. If to prove a puzzle to two of the readers we put it on the hooks to be used at the earliest opportunity, and to be paid for at slightly increased price. If all the readers give it up, we return it to, and if no one about the shop, including myself, can make even a guess at its meaning, we pay triple rates for it, and invite the poet to become a regular contributor."

An Excellent Plan.

A woman who is building a tiny house, which, however, is the crystallization of her ingenuity and ideas of convenience picked up here, there, and everywhere, has in the china closet opening from her dining-room two deep drawers inserted under the bottom shelf. The drawers are each of them fourteen inches deep, and are lined throughout with tin. In one of them bread is to be kept and in the other cake. They fit snugly, the cake drawer locking. Everybody knows that the tin bread and cake boxes bought at the shops are kept on the floors of closets are very well while new, but the careless maids opening and shutting them many times a day soon bang them into a shape which prevents their tight closing. When that condition is reached, they are about as useless as an open shelf for the purpose for which they are designed, that of keeping out the heat and damp air, and also mice, if such infest the place. Housekeepers whose china closets have been in existence for years will find it an easy matter to have such drawers added.

Mistaken for a New Inventor.

Recently two gentlemen, driving in a wagonette, were smoking, when a spark falling from one lighted their cigars set fire to some straw at the bottom of the carriage.

The flames soon drove them from their seats, and while they were extinguishing the fire a countryman, who had the misfortune to be driving a team on horseback, alighted to assist them.

"I have been watching the smoke for some time," said he.

"Why, then, did you not give us notice?" asked the astonished travellers.

"Well," respond the man, "there are so many new-fangled notions nowadays, I thought you were going by steam."

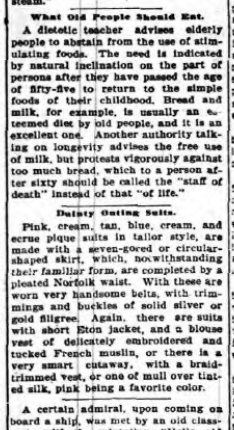
What Old People Should Eat.

A dietetic teacher advises elderly people to abstain from the use of stimulating foods. The need is indicated by natural inclination on the part of persons after they have passed the age of fifty-five to return to the simple foods of their childhood. Bread and milk, for example, is usually an esteemed diet by old people, and it is an excellent one. Another authority talking on longevity advises the free use of milk, but protests vigorously against too much bread, which to a person after sixty should be called the "staff of death" instead of that "of life."

Dainty Outing Suits.

Pink, cream, tan, blue, cream, and ecrue pique suits in tailor style, are made with a seven-gored or circular-shaped skirt, which, notwithstanding their familiar form, are completed by a pleated Norfolk waist. With these are worn very handsome belts, with trimmings and buckles of solid silver or gold filigree. Again there are suits with short Etons and a blouse vest of delicately embroidered and tucked French muslin, or there is a very smart cutaway, with a braid-trimmed vest, or one of mull over tinted silk, pink being a favorite color.

A certain admiral, upon coming on board a ship, was met by an old classmate with the salutation, "Hello, old fellow, how are you?" Observing that the admiral had carefully combed his back hair forward up and over, to cover the bald top of his head, added: "Well, that's the first time I ever saw afterguard doing foretop duty!"



LOST IN THE MAILS.

TAKING CARE OF LETTERS AND PARCELS THAT GO ASTRAY.

Immense Deal of Labor Involved—The Government Endeavors to Return Everything It Can—An Accurate Account of Articles Kept in the Records.

Visitors to the dead letter office never realize the amount of work it takes to produce order in the chaos of letters and parcels gone astray. Ranged along the sides of the great room where the openers are, and also in several rooms near by, are the bookkeepers or recorders. Their labor is seldom appreciated because its results only are seen.

About fifteen per cent of the seven million pieces received yearly contain valuables. An accurate record of each article is made, giving its address and disposition. Six sets of books are used for this purpose, one for money; one for papers which have a money value, as notes and mortgages; one for other valuable papers such as receipts and certificates; one for stamps, one for photographs, and one for property or miscellaneous articles received in packages.

These are all returned to the sender if the address is given. If there is no address, but a legible postmark, they are sent to the postmaster at the mailing office for delivery to the sender. If there is no address and no postmark, or if the postmaster fails to deliver the article and returns it to the department, it is filed.

In the case of property the articles filed are kept two years and then sold at public auction, excepting such books as are selected for the department library. Several hundred books are added each year to the library, which is for the use of the officials and clerks only. They comprise largely works of fiction and poetry intended for gifts.

The money, which cannot be returned to the owner, is kept for three months and then deposited in the United States treasury. It may be reclaimed within four years. In these books one cent receives as much attention as $50, a receipt being signed by each clerk through whose hands it passes. No red tape is spared on account of small values.

The stamps are the most numerous of all valuables received. Every time the department issues a fraud order against any swindling concern that concern is not allowed to receive its mail. Its letters are stamped "fraud-ulent" and sent to the dead letter office. This is done from two to twenty are thus saved by the department and returned to the people in money and stamps alone. The stamps which cannot be delivered are destroyed each month.

The photographs and valuable papers which had been kept on file were allowed to accumulate until the summer of 1893, when the oldest files were destroyed, excepting only such papers as marriage certificates, wills and others of exceptional value. At present, only those photographs and papers filed within the last three years are kept intact. The rest are destroyed.

In addition to these records is a book which gives the postal history of lost manuscripts, which number about one thousand yearly.

There is also a record of inquiries for missing mail, and a record of registered matter. The registered articles received are not distributed among the six desks named, but a separate record is kept of them, so that these are the largest of the record books and the articles kept on file here are miscellaneous in character.

Every month the periodicals which have gone astray in the mails and reached the dead letter office are distributed among the charitable institutions of the city. They are the department missionaries that cheer the sick and bless the lonely.

The amount of matter received at the dead letter office has decreased in the last few years. This is probably due to the efficiency of the "Don't" circulars, to the record books and the articles kept on file here are miscellaneous in character.

This office might be called the headquarters of Santa Claus. At any rate it is where his mail is received. Every autumn his store comes in by hundreds and later by thousands. There is every variety of spelling and childish chirography. There is also a variety of places assigned as his abiding *place, such as the North Pole, Fairy*land and other places not within reach of the postal service.

But the little folks are not the only ones who send indefinitely addressed letters. Two examples will serve to show the rare discriminating powers assigned to the postal employe by the public mind:

"Please deliver to a physician who is a native of either Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward's Island."

Evidently the area involved was too wide and the authorities gave up the search.

"Forward or give to a widow, age thirty-two or over, with dark brown hair and eyes; height, five feet two inches; name unknown."

At a glance this would seem an easier task. To find a widow is simple enough. To find one with dark hair and eyes would be a more specific task, but still not objectionable, perhaps. But making it plainer by using the age limit put things in a different light. It was too delicate a task for an ordinary postman. He was human and loved life. He gave up the job.—Washington Star.

JUST IN TIME.

Carroll Trainor was to go to Mexico to make his fortune and Lila Havens had promised to remain true to him till his return. When they parted, he decided to return to Baltimore at once and make arrangements to go to Mexico. Lila Havens went on alone to friends she was to visit at Sharpsburg.

"We expected you this morning," said her hostess.

"Yes, dear, but you see, I was unavoidably delayed. What a lovely day it has been!"

"And there is a telegram for you, Lila."

"Really? Something must forgot to mention, I dare say. Excuse me." She broke it open carelessly. "Dear me!" She puckered her brow. "Only fancy! The admiral is coming down here to-morrow."

The admiral appeared on the scene the day following.

"My dear Lila," he said, "I must have a little talk with you."

"Yes, uncle."

"Lila, my dear"—they were quite alone—"I have had a proposal for your hand in marriage. If I had chosen the man, I could not be better pleased than to see you the wife of Judge Mason."

"Uncle! He is more than twice my age. I never dreamed of it."

"He is a young man, my dear—a vigorous young man. He will idolize you. You knew he admired you."

"He is a widower."

"But his only daughter is married."

"Oh, uncle, it—it is out of the question."

"My dear"—the old man looked suddenly grave and pale—"there is bad news. You must make up your mind to meet it bravely."

Lila's face reflected some of the paleness of his own.

"Uncle—my—money—have I lost it?"

"There has been a terrible financial failure. Hardly know how to tell you. We only heard yesterday, and we don't know for sure as yet. I am afraid—Lila, you must bear up—I am afraid you have lost nearly all you had."

The girl leaned back in the chair. There was a stunned look in her face. She did not speak. The admiral went on, speaking more rapidly,—

"I can hardly blame myself. It was an undreamed of thing. Of course there is a small real estate left you. Heaven knows I wish it had been all in houses. Judge Mason——"

"Oh," the girl broke in suddenly, "he won't want me now—when he knows I am penniless!"

"My child, he came as soon as he knew it."

She went to her room and locked herself in. Then she wrote to Carroll Trainor:—

"I am no longer rich. There is no use of our engagement. I have lost everything. Perhaps you will be rich some day, Carroll. If so, you must come and find me."

But she said nothing of Hon. Thomas Mason.

The girl's soul sickened within her. A brief note from Trainor told her that he was just leaving for the gulf coast, where he would find a steamship for Vera Cruz. He thought he would never return to the United States.

A great despair came over her. In her sensitive state she felt that he no longer cared for her.

She capitulated and consented to receive Judge Mason's addresses.

Three months had passed. The wedding was to take place the last week of June. Miss Havens was to become Mrs. Thomas Mason.

The wedding invitations were about to be sent out. The wedding day was fixed a fortnight hence. Miss Havens, out on a shopping errand, turned a street corner abruptly and ran against some one. She looked up and grew pale. It was Carroll Trainor.

"You!" she said faintly.

"You didn't expect to see me? Lila, for heaven's sake, is it true that you are going to marry Judge Mason?"

She nodded with an effort. The idea of the marriage to which she had become reconciled, but never enthusiastically disposed, suddenly seemed sickening. Her whole soul revolted.

"Carroll!" she gasped. "Oh, Carroll! If there were any escape!"

"Escape? What do you mean? Isn't it your own choosing? Are you being *forced into marrying the old wid*ower?"

"I—I—oh, you seemed not to want me, and uncle and aunt seemed not to want me! Nobody seemed to want me—except Judge Mason!"

"I—deserted you! I've just returned from Mexico," said Trainor, "and I'm going back there at once. I've got a splendid chance. It's lonesome for a man to be by himself. The climate is like paradise."

The admiral and his good lady were at the breakfast table.

His morning mail lay before him. He took up the top letter of all and gazed severely at it. The handwriting was Lila's. The letter had been posted the night before. He opened it, read it in silence and passed it to his wife.

"Do not worry about the matter," it said, "for I shall not marry Judge Mason. He is a good man and will understand it was a mistake. I love some one else and have gone away to marry him. We shall spend our honeymoon in a palm thatched hut in Mexico."

Mrs. Blair could not speak. After a moment's silence the admiral observed:

"On the whole, I'm glad the marriage is off. The judge's daughter was greatly opposed. She might have made things unpleasant after a bit." And still again, "she's a plucky little creature, Lila is! God bless her!"

No Show for Laymen.

It is rather a remarkable fact that both parties in New Jersey seem predisposed nearly all the time to nominate no one but lawyers as candidates for Governor. On the Democratic side ever since the election of George B. McClellan in 1877 none but lawyers were placed in nomination. That discrimination, however, has not been as remarkable in the Republican party, even though Lawyer John W. Griggs was chosen in 1895 and Lawyer Foster M. Voorhees will be the standard-bearer in the approaching campaign. However, Grubb and Kean, all laymen, tried hard but ineffectually to reach the Governor's chair; but when a lawyer was nominated in the person of John W. Griggs he found little difficulty in getting there. In some of the agricultural counties a strong prejudice exists against electing lawyers to public office. In Burlington county such prejudice is deep seated, but why lawyers should be objected to is not very clear. Should the Democratic politicians be permitted to have their way this time another lawyer would probably be nominated for Governor. They would make a selection from such a distinguished group as Judges Kirkpatrick, Lippincott and Gastman, Marvin W. Crane, Senator Daly, C. S. Atkinson and Howard Carrow. While Messrs. Crane, Carrow and Daly are willing, yet the Judges will not permit the use of their names. To the wealth of lay timber, then, all anxious eyes must be turned or else to the military for a candidate. Generals Donnelly and Plume represent the latter, while in the former class the array is imposing. The prominent laymen are Benjamin F. Lee, Johnston Cornish, Mayor Seymour, David S. Crater, Rufus Blodgett and Senator Braun. And there are others. Either of the men from Mercer county would make an exceptionally strong candidate.

How the Trolley Changes.

Ever since the trolley first made its appearance, the sober farmer all over the country has been treated to a series of surprises that have nearly astonished him out of a year's growth. It is now the turn of the old and staid tillers of the soil from over in Somerset and Middlesex counties to view with awe and astonishment the advent of the whirring trolley car into that section. The cars already ply between New Brunswick and Bound Brook, New Brunswick and Metuchen and Bound Brook and Somerville, while gangs of Italian laborers are busily working on the main thoroughfares in Somerville and Bound Brook, laying tracks and preparing for the advent of the electric cars. It will only be a question of a month or perhaps less when the cars will be running through those very towns. Meanwhile, the work progresses rapidly and the plodding old steed, that has pulled the family for years, dances and curvets about like a yearling at the sight of such strange happenings, and such wierd unnatural creatures that go whirring along without any apparent cause. It certainly does recall to one the steady advance of civilization to see a trolley car go spinning along through the country where once even a passing team was regarded as an event.

Heroes of Pompton Lakes.

Bravery in war does not alone have full play where bullets whine in close proximity to vital portions of the body and where the zest of battle numbs the natural sense of self security. Valorous men there are at the front in far-off Cuba, but their counterparts are seen in the troops who have been left at home to the more monotonous duty of guarding powder mills and other incidentals of international conflict far removed from general attack of the enemy.

Those soldiers who were detailed for guard duty at Pompton Lakes, to keep Spanish spies from doing dirty work at the powder mills located there, have had two chances to make heroes out of themselves and they have accepted those chances with conduct so fearless as to win the plaudits of the country.

But between being in the thick of the battle in the Cuba bush and guarding powder mills there probably isn't a man at Pompton Lakes who wouldn't rather be with the boys in Cuba.

Talking and Acting.

The various societies in Plainfield that waxed so enthusiastic in their wordy demonstrations of unswerving loyalty and support to Uncle Sam, while the agitation over the destruction of the battleship Maine was at its height, undoubtedly are finding that a sober realization of actually enlisting is quite a different feeling than that experienced when the war was simply a prospective outcome of all the talk then going on.

Of course, no one thought at the time that the ogsalutions would be called upon, but now that Adjutant-General Stryker has actually found it necessary to notify them that their services as volunteers could be utilized it throws a different light upon the situation. The number of members in the various societies called upon will probably be so small as to make a good deal of unfavorable comment

West Orange's Good Example.

Unusual terms have been imposed upon the Postal Telegraph Company by the West Orange Township Committee in an ordinance granting the company the right to erect poles and string wires in the township. The company must agree to pay the city $2 per year rental for every pole it erects, and it must, when demand is made by the officials, put the wires underground.

The West Orangemen evidently do not propose to be bamboozled by promises that have no weight in not being established by words of law. In the same spirit the Common Council should treat with the Plainfield Street Railway Company for extension of further privileges. Verbal promises are worthless as determining what the people are actually to get from corporations.

Wards of the State.

There are 20,001 persons of all ages that are wards of this State. These include all in the hospitals, asylums and almshouses in New Jersey. The total maintenance for these people last year was $1,731,403, which is equivalent to a poll tax of one dollar on every man, woman and child in New Jersey.

The persons so supported are divided into three classes. The defectives, who embrace the insane, the feeble-minded, blind and deaf-mutes, number 5,290. The delinquents include the population of the prisons, jails, Reform and State industrial schools, numbering 5,582. The dependents comprise the disabled soldiers and the county paupers, numbering altogether 9,139

Take a Vacation.

Vacation time is here and rapidly passing. No matter how busy a man you are, how much responsibility devolves upon your individual attention to your affairs, try and snatch a period of rest and recreation from the hurly-burly world.

Every man deserves a vacation and no matter how brief it is he feels the better for it. But there is one very important thing to do when you take a vacation. Forget all about your business; just throw your whole energies to enjoying yourself. There are innumerable ways of doing this—every man to his own bent of mind.

But take a vacation by all means.

New Brunswick's Problem.

The New Brunswick Board of Health are engaged in the very hard work of deciding, in the words of the Home News, "how much of an odor must arise from a pig pen before the hog's abode can be determined a nuisance?"

For unique municipal problems New Brunswick certainly takes the cake. Our own idea is that a hog pen has got just about the same right to exist in a city the size of New Brunswick as a Spaniard has to rule over Cuba, which is, in the words of the day, nit.

No Use for the Public to Worry.

Because one street has been closed to the trolley magnates it is no sign that the street railway will not go east toward South Plains. The owning and operation of a street railway is a glit-edged investment in this city and the Plainfield Street Railway Company can be depended upon to work out the solution of a practical route. Then the public can step in and share in the general profit that will come to the community by the consummation of the enterprise.

Plainfield Leads All.

One after another the facts pile up to show that Plainfield is the most flourishing town in Union county.

At the meeting of the assessors of the county in Elizabeth, Plainfield was reported as having the largest increase of taxable valuations in the county during the past year—the increase amounting to $350,000. Elizabeth, with three times the population of Plainfield, reports an increase of $200,000. Another interesting comparison is that the total taxable valuation of property in Plainfield is $8,000,000, while that of Elizabeth is just slightly double that—or, in figures, $17,181,100.

While Elizabeth, with three times the population of Plainfield, has only double the assessed valuation of Plainfield, Rahway, which is about twenty-five per cent. smaller than Plainfield, records just a trifle over one-third the valuation of this city.

Which ever way you look at the figures Plainfield looms up as the banner town of Union county in prosperity.

Sporting Interest Wanes.

Plainfield seems to have lost all interest in sports that a few years ago held popular sway here. This is notably so of baseball and bicycling.

For several years Plainfield was one of the most enthusiastic baseball towns in the eastern States, her team being among the best semi professional aggregations on the diamond. No better evidence of this is needed than the recitation of the fact that several players who became celebrated in the National League began their careers as members of the old Crescents In the days of the old Crescents everybody in town attended the games and were rooters in all that the word implies. The popular hero of the hour in Plainfield at that time was the player whose actions on the diamond won the game for the home team.

But how time has changed things, and what ill-luck has followed in the wake of the successors of the one-time invincible Crescents. The team which represented Plainfield on the diamond this year, and which suffered defeat but once in several weeks of playing with the best teams in the metropolitan district, seemed utterly unable to stir popular enthusiam for the National game. True, a few of the old "cranks" remained steadfast, but without the support of the general public the team was doomed to an inglorious ending. Interest in the game has unquestionably waned to the extent of ever again preventing the return of the halycon days of the old Crescents. It seems strange, but it is so.

Though in a private way bicycling is all the go now, and probably will be for a long time, it has failed like baseball so far as the public cares for racing events. The oval racing track and its appurtenances for handling the crowds and the racers stands as a silent and lonesome monument to the popularity of bicycle racing in Plainfield a few years ago. Up to this season Plainfield has seen some of the best bicycle racing in the country, but with each succeeding season for the last three years the interest in the events held at the oval have lessened until now they are no more. The lethargic interest that prevails in relation to cycling seems unaccountable when one sees the increasing number of individual riders year after year.

Baseball and bicycling are undoubtedly the popular sport and exercise of the American people, yet they fail to thrive in Plainfield where every condition seems favorable for hearty support from the public at large.

Reason to Be Proud.

The first Spanish battle flag captured in Cuba by the American army was secured by Company B of the 1st U. S. Infantry. Company B is the company which Gen. Wm. H. Sterling, of this city, captained in the Civil War, and which he led through many daring and thrilling engagements. General Sterling is justly proud of the distinguished conduct which his old command is showing in the present conflict.

The flag has been received at the War Department in Washington. It is a small one, measuring only about 2x4 feet, and is poorly constructed of cheap material.

Company B, which captured the flag, is part of the First Brigade, Second Division, Fifth Army Corps. The flag was captured at Juraguacita, June 23, 1898, by the following detail: Corporals Newman and Boyle; Privates Keyser, Cooley and Houghtaling.

Take Down the Fence.

A high board fence is not a very nice ornament to a residential section such as East Fifth street, and if the majority of property owners along that thoroughfare want the fence in front of the Bryant School building removed the Board of Education ought to comply with their request.

The purpose of the board fence is to keep the scholars within the school grounds and prevent them from trespassing upon private property. But if the householders in that immediate vicinity are willing to take the risk of destruction of lawns and the consequent aggravation of mind if the fence is removed, the Board of Education would seem to be exercising too fine a point to leave it standing for fear it might result in a condition of things that the petitioners are willing to assume all the trouble of.

A Temperance Lesson.

When a white-haired woman, bowed down with three-score of years, is hailed before the city cadi on a disreputable charge and begs to be sent to the county jail for thirty days, is there any better temperance lesson to be secured from the mirror of our daily life? The case of old Mrs. Fleming, witnessed in the police court yesterday morning, was one of the most forlorn and pitiable seen there in many a day.

The Paris Exposition.

There has been some resentment, and naturally so, caused by the petty hostility of the French press and a considerable section of the French people growing out of our war with Spain. Not a few of our hotheads have urged as a proper act of retaliation the withdrawal of interest and co-operation in the French exposition of 1900, for which the Gallic capital is making immense preparations. This method of resentment would be quite as petty and childish as the disapproving grimaces of our French friends. Whatever feeling of annoyance we may have, such a course would scarcely comport with American dignity, which can well afford to be serenely indifferent to mere exhibitions of spite. The obligation rests on us the more as nowhere on the continent of Europe do we have profounder sympathy with us in view of inevitable results. We are too big to acknowledge French antipathies with more than a French shrug.

We have already mortgaged our own action as respects the Paris exposition, and once toan an onward course, no matter what our feeling might be, is next to impracticable. As a question of noblesse oblige it is important to recall that all our own expositions France has been our most varied, interesting and prolific contributor. Those artistic products which lend most attractive brilliancy to a world show of industry are peculiarly the offspring of French genius and taste, and they have been lavishly given us. We can do little less than return good for present evil, even if we regard the French people as a whole responsible and think only of the courtesies and comities of the past. Frenchmen, who are sensitive on the score of vanity, will probably feel the sting of chivalrous good nature more acutely than pouting and ill humor, and the next mood of the somewhat capricious and irresponsible Gaul is as likely as not to be one of cordial friendliness.

Much has already been done to insure a proper representation of American art and industry. Much remains to be done. Amid all the absorption of the government in war interests congress should take prompt action to give our would be exhibitors the amplest facilities. To put action off to the last moment will greatly hamper its efficiency. Whatever is done should be put on a plane beyond the suspicion of a misgardly purpose. It is mainly, too, for our own benefit that we shall participate in this as in other world fairs of the past. No finer test of the greatness of a nation can be found than in its alert and comprehensive attention to all the interests of peace in the very thick and turmoil of active war.

Colored Militia.

The Afro-Americans of New York city have been protesting against the conditions which have prevented their proper representation in the volunteer army now fighting the battles of the country. It is to be presumed that this sentiment is common in other states among the colored citizens, and such patriotism is alike natural and gratifying. Splendid volumes of courage and self devotion are bound in black leather, and our colored friends have shown it too often to have the imprint mistaken. But as Governor Black said, in answer to the complaint of the committee on organization, he was compelled to draw conclusions on the national guard in answer to the president's call. The fact is that there are but few colored regiments in the national guard throughout the whole country. According to the general logic of facts, this element in our population is entitled to a certain representation in the militia. There is no good reason why it should not have it. White men certainly would not oppose it to any considerable extent. As citizens they are entitled to bear arms, to participate in the national defense, to endure the toils of campaigning and to lay down their lives if need be. It is but common sense to give them the chance to stop bullets as generously as it is given to white men. With the third call for volunteers their chance should come. But as far as the militia problem is concerned the deficiency is mainly the result of the failure of the colored people to agitate the question with resolute hand in the past. Whatever the prejudice or objection, which may have existed, it has been allayed. Enthusiasm on the part of the would be soldiers would finally work out to a favorable end, even if it failed to be in time to shoot Spaniards.

The noted dramatist, Victorien Sardou, in a recent interview said he owed his first dramatic success to the beauty of penmanship, which attracted the eye of the manager and got his piece read, when otherwise it would have been sent back in all its virginal innocence. Poe's celebrated short story, "The Gold Bug," it has been stated, was accepted as a prize story by The Southern Literary Messenger on much the same ground, caligraphy having been the determining factor. This shows on what minor things fortune sometimes depends.

"The difference between you and me," said a philosopher, "is that you say to masked hypocrites 'I know you,' while I leave with them the idea that they have deceived me."

Memory records services with a pencil; injuries with a graver.

Fact Difficult to Decide.

In all the history of the New Jersey courts it is not likely that a harder time to decide a matter of fact has been brought up than in a case developing out of the disaster to the Bourgogne steamship.

Among the passengers who lost their lives were Captain William V. Clark and wife, of Hackensack. The couple were on their wedding tour, but before leaving home the Captain bequeathed his property, worth $30,000, to his wife in the event of his death.

Their unexpected fate, however, puts the will in a new light before the Chancery Court. If Mr. Clark died first all his property goes to the heirs of Mrs. Clark, but if the wife died first then Mr. Clark's heirs take the property. The Clarks were first-class passengers, and not one in that cabin was saved, according to common report, but there is a remote possibility that they were picked up, and may appear alive at any time.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence, of Plainfield, two of the survivors of the collision, have been subpœnaed, but as they were second-class passengers it is not likely that they knew Mr. and Mrs. Clark.

What Assessments Show.

In nearly every town and city of Union county the assessors show increased valuation this year, the aggregate amount of all being $1,047,700. Plainfield leads every other place in the increased valuation, the exact amount being $303,000—almost one-third of the total sum. In a list of sixteen municipalities this shows convincingly the important factor Plainfield is in one of the principal counties of New Jersey. In Plainfield there are 3,315 voters. Elizabeth has 10,574. The County Board of Assessors has fixed the county tax rate at .61 1 4, and the State school rate was .27 1 3 Plainfield apportionment under these rates will be: County, $41,601.11; school, $21,844.81.

Saved a Boy From Being Killed.

Last Sunday evening at the Netherwood railroad station, Brakeman John VanMiddlesworth, of the local Dunellen train, which was on its way home, saved the life of a small boy. VanMiddlesworth caught the lad just in time to prevent him from going under the wheels. The train was pulling out from the station when the boy tried to jump. He refused to tell his name or anything about himself.

To Enter a New Business.

John P. Emmons, the well-known mason and contractor, of the borough, is preparing to close up his business in the fall. It is his intention then to enter the real estate and insurance business.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 96 Pine street, New York, giving post-office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

MET A HORRIBLE DEATH

CHARRED REMAINS OF FARM HAND FOUND IN RUINS OF BARN.

It is Supposed That he Had Tried to Light a Pipe While Lying in the Hay in a Drunken Stupor.

Nels Jessen, a Swede, in the employ of John Fenner at Piuckamin, met with a horrible death early Sunday morning, when Mr. Fenner's barn and wagon house were burned.

The fire broke out about 5 o'clock in the morning. Mr. Fenner and his neighbors succeeded in getting out all the cattle and many of the farm utensils, but the building and most of the contents were destroyed.

Jessen had left the Fenner place on Saturday night, and was still missing when the fire occurred. Suspicions seemed to implicate him, as there was no other way to account for the fire at that time. When the ruins were examined later in the day his charred remains were found.

County Physician Wagoner was summoned and upon making an investigation found that Jessen had been at the house at Peter Moore, at Far Hills, on the previous evening, and the two men were drinking together, Jessen left there at 2 o'clock in the morning, taking a bottle of whiskey with him.

It is supposed that he arrived at the Fenner place and struck matches in the wagon house, causing the fire, and afterward climbed into the hay mow, as he was accustomed to do when he came home drunk. Jessen was a married man and hailed from Amboy, where he had a family. Mr. Fenner's loss will amount to about $1,200, partially insured.

The flames also extended to the barn and undertaker shop of B. C. Ammerman, and consumed them with several other outbuildings. Mr. Fenner's house was on fire several times, but was saved by hard work.

A Bicycle Party.

Mr. and Mrs. George Rogers gave a bicycle party to a number of their Seventh-Day Baptist friends last evening. There were twenty five present. After an enjoyable spin, they returned to Mr. and Mrs. Rogers' apartments in the Jackson building where refreshments were served.

FIREBUG WAS BUSY IN EARLY MORNING HOURS

Three Incendiary Blazes in a Brief Time in Westfield.

THE TOWN IS STARTLED.

TOWNSHIP OFFICIALS OFFER $200 REWARD FOR GUILTY ONES.

The Fires Followed One Another in Quick Succession — First One Discovered in I. H. Lambert's Feed Storage Warehouse, Then Two Barns, but Only One of Them Was Destroyed

Three fires, following one another in quick succession, startled in Westfield early Monday morning. All are supposed to be of incendiary origin, and that morning the Township Committee held a hurried meeting and offered a reward of $200 for evidence that would lead to the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties.

The first fire was discovered in I. H. Lambert's feed storage warehouse on North avenue at 12:15 o'clock. The firemen responded quickly and after a half hour's work succeeded in extinguishing the flames, after they had done about $300 worth of damage.

An hour and a half after that, while the firemen were cleaning up their apparatus in the hose house, another alarm came in. The fire was found to be in R. M. French's barn on North avenue, not far from the feed storage warehouse. The fire was started under a corner of the building by digging away a pile of manure and lighting a pile of paper and waste saturated with oil. The flames spread rapidly and soon gutted the building, entailing a loss of $1,000.

While the firemen were fighting this last fire flames were discovered coming from Welch Brothers' barn on Central avenue, in the rear of the business section of Broad street. The flames had not succeeded in gaining sufficient headway but what three men, who were passing along at that time, succeeded in extinguishing them. The origin was plainly incendiary. The loss was about $200.

Narrow Escape From Drowning.

Little five-year-old Freddie VanDeveer, colored, fell in the race back of French's mill Tuesday morning and narrowly escaped drowning. The little fellow lives with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus VanDeveer, in Fairchild's alley, and was playing near the water when he slipped and fell. Some one pulled him out and he is no worse for the experience.

FLYNN CAUGHT HIS MAN

A DEFIANT CYCLIST CAPTURED BY BICYCLE COP SUNDAY NIGHT.

"Catch Me If Your Can," Shouted the Wheelman—His Light Was Out and He Was Ordered to Stop—Fell Into a Rut.

"Your light's out" rang out the sharp challenge of Roundsman Flynn. "Get off and light up." The rider could see the two officers standing by the curb but the wheel of the Roundsman was not noticed.

An uncomplimentary remark and then the wheelman muttered "Catch me if you can. I'll give you a good time." And away he went. In an instant Roundsman Flynn was on his wheel. The next, Patrolman Myers saw them disappearing in the darkness out Richmond street. It all happened Sunday at 11 o'clock on Richmond street, near East Front street.

Pursuer and pursued sped up Richmond street. As they neared the railroad bridge the officer of the law was close behind. Now, if the wheelman thought Flynn could not ride fast, he made the mistake of his life. As they reached Fifth street Flynn ranged alongside the rider. The pace was tremendous and the road so rough that Flynn waited before laying hands on the wheelman.

At LaGrande avenue there was a deep rut. Into it the fleeing wheelman rode. There was a grunt, a crash and the vision of a body projected through the air. The Roundsman cleared the wreck and stopped his wheel. When he reached the scene of the accident he found the man stretched out on the roadway with his knee badly cut. He proved to be Allan Shipley, coachman for Daniel Ginna, of Kensington avenue.

For attempting to escape when ordered to halt, Flynn took his prisoner to the lockup and allowed him the privilege of spending the night there.

Monday morning Shipley explained that the remark he made was intended for a fellow wheelman with whom he had been riding, and that he had not seen or heard the officer at all. The Judge heard the story and fined the prisoner $3. The fine was paid.

COMFORTS FOR BADGER BOYS.

Two Large Boxes Shipped to the Brave Fellows This Afternoon.

Smalley Brothers' meat market on North avenue was the scene of bustle and activity Tuesday when the boxes of delicacies, etc., were packed and sent to the Plainfield boys who are on board the Badger off Havana harbor. The quantity of provisions and reading matter, delicacies and comforts sent to the market during the last few days prove conclusively that the friends and relatives at home are anxious for the welfare of the brave boys at the front.

It was supposed that one box would hold all that would be sent, but when it came time to pack the goods, it was found that there was enough to fill three good sized boxes. The stores comprise canned meats, canned fruit, boxes of chocolate, tobacco, cigars, crackers, soap, etc., besides reading matter, in the shape of religious tracts, magazines, papers and books. A fancy pillow sent to Frank Smalley by Mrs. S. Robinson, is for use when any of the boys are ill. There is no doubt but that it will be appreciated.

The boxes will be sent to Dr. M. S. Simpson, who will see that they are distributed to the boys according to directions.

Borough School Bonds Sold.

A special meeting of the Borough Board of Education was held last Monday to open the bids for the issuance of $20,000 worth of 4 per cent. bonds for the erection of a new school-house in the borough. There were only three or four bids and Ralinger & Co. were the successful bidders. They gave a premium of $200 to secure the bonds, which were awarded them. In a few weeks the bids for the construction of the new building will be received and opened.

Dispute About a Bill.

An interesting case will be tried in Justice Nash's court next Monday. The parties are A. B. Thorn, of Somerset street, and Dave Miodovnik, of West Front street. The demand is for about $70 which Thorn claims for putting up a heating apparatus and boiler in Dave's barber shop. The case promises to be a lively one because of the intention of both parties to fight the matter out to the end.

Survivor of the Burgogne.

Mr. Miller, of New York, a passenger on the ill-fated ship, the Burgogne, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. Ulrich, of East Fifth street. Mr. Miller was rescued after three hours of drifting, and owed his life to a floating timber. He is a buyer for a New York firm and sails for Europe this week.

Lightning Struck.

During the storm Tuesday afternoon lightning struck the flagstaff on the Thorn building on Somerset street and shattered it to pieces. There was no other serious damage. Allen Laing, who was lying on a couch in the building, was slightly stunned by the bolt striking.

ONCE A DANCE HALL; NOW A CHURCH HOME.

The Olympia Dedicated By Fillmore Baptist Society.

SERVICES HELD SUNDAY

A LARGE NUMBER OF PEOPLE ATTENDED THE EXERCISES.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, the Pastor, Was in Charge of the Services — Dedicatory Sermon Preached by Rev. Mr. Jackson — Collection Amounted to Mid-Corner-Stone Laid by the Masons.

The dedicatory exercises of the recently acquired edifice of the Fillmore Baptist church, formerly known as the Olympia building, on Sycamore street, were held Sunday.

In the morning the pastor, Rev. Mr. Johnson, preached a strong sermon, in which he reviewed the work of the church since its inception a few years ago.

In the afternoon the church was thronged with people and at this time the dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Jackson, pastor of the Mount Olive Baptist church. The choir from the latter church was also present and assisted in the musical part of the services under the direction of Prof. Richard Randolph as leader and Mrs. Mitchell as organist.

The sermon preached by Mr. Jackson was an especially interesting one, and his text was "The stone which the builders have rejected has become the chief stone of the corner." From these words the preacher made many practical illustrations which were attentively listened to.

Following this sermon the collection was taken, when about $40 was realized. After this part of the service the corner-stone was laid in front of the church by the members of Stone Square Lodge, F. and A. M., who were present in a body. While the stone was being laid there were prayers and several hymns were sung. The stone is a handsome one and was the gift of L. L. Manning, West Front street, dealer in granite and marble. The inscription "Fillmore Baptist church, 1898" is carved on the face of the stone, and inside is the history of the church. After a while it is the intention of the members to raise the building and place a foundation under it. When that is done the corner-stone will be relaid.

In the evening another service was held, when Rev. Wm. Perry, of Montclair, preached a powerful sermon. There was also special music. The services throughout the day were in charge of Rev. Mr. Johnson, pastor of the church. All of the local colored churches were represented by members and pastors, and the latter took some part in the services.

During this week, services will be held at the church every night, and on Sunday next another attempt will be made to raise a large amount of money to help pay off the indebtedness on the church building.

The present church home was formerly the Olympia Hall, a place used for receptions, dances, etc., and is particularly well adapted to the needs of the people who have taken it from the owner, Asa Collier. It is 150 feet deep and will hold a large crowd of people.

The Debele Creamery.

William Debele, of 113 Somerset street, owing to the large increase in his business has leased the store, 127 E. West Front street, in the new Voebl building, and has opened there under the name of "Debele's Creamery." He has spared no expense in fitting up the interior of the store, Mr. Debele is ready to supply the public with fresh milk and cream, both wholesale and retail. He will continue his place of business on Somerset street and use the Front street store as a branch.

A Bicycle Party.

Mrs. James E. Kimball, of Park avenue, gave a bicycle party Saturday evening to a number of her friends. There were thirty in the party. After a spin out Mountain avenue the guests spent the remainder of the evening at Mrs. Kimball's home playing games. Refreshments were served.

ECHO OF A BIG BURGLARY

DETECTIVE BLACKFORD WANTS $200 FROM MRS. H. W. MARSHALL.

Claims That He Was Employed at $10 a Day for Twenty Days to Trace Out the Robber Who Got Her Jewelry

Five months have now elapsed since James Duncan Smedberg, the man who stole Mrs. Harry W. Marshall's jewels, was released from the Elizabeth County Jail, having served a sentence of six months, lacking one day for the offense, and Plainfield people have begun to forget the crime and its consequent and dramatic finish.

The famous case is about to be brought again to mind by a suit started by Central Railroad Detective John L. Blackford, who was retained in the case to hunt down the thief, and who sues for $200, the sum claimed by him for his services between July 6th and 26th.

This burglary occurred the latter part of June, 1897. While Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, who reside on East Fifth street, were out wheeling, some one entered their house and rifled it of jewelry to the value of $ 60.

Blackford claims that he was retained in the case at $10 a day. A reward was offered by Mrs. Marshall for the return of the jewels. Blackford does not sue for the reward, but for services rendered for 20 days at $10 a day, which amounts to $200.

It is understood that $27 was paid Blackford for his expenses, etc., and Mrs. Marshall has agreed to pay him a balance of $50. This Blackford refuses and brings suit for the full amount.

In the search for the jewels Mrs. Marshall joined, and it was through her efforts that the charm was found in a sewer trap in a Newark apartment house. Blackford, while not claiming all the credit for the detection of the thief and the recovery of the jewels, says that he first put the Marshalls on track of the man, and it was through his skill that the thief and jewels were recovered.

Blackford is represented by Counselor W. S. Angleman. Friday, July 29th, is the day set for the trial, and the case will be heard before Justice Nash at 10 o'clock.

OLD GLORY UNFURLED.

Enthusiastic Flag Raising at Pine Grove Farm.

Despite the oppressive weather last Monday there was about one hundred people who gathered on the spacious lawn at Pine Grove Farm, the summer home of Miss Carrie Debele and Mrs. Bailey, of Philadelphia, and watched with interest the exercises attendant to the raising of a handsome American flag, a present to Miss Debele and Mrs. Bailey by William Debele, of Somerset street.

The exercises took place at 7:30 and were of a very interesting character. Rev. Mr. McKane on behalf of Mr. Debele, presented the flag, and Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church, accepted the flag on behalf of Miss Debele and Mrs. Bailey. William Debele, the donor, raised the flag on the pole provided for the occasion.

As the flag was raised, Miss Nel is Winkler presiding at the piano started the hymn, "The Star Spangled Banner," and the guests joined in the singing. Then there was the burning of colored fires and the explosion of large firecrackers, all of which gave the event a decided tone of patriotism. Inside of the large flag there were a number of smaller ones and as the large emblem was unfurled there was a scramble for the small flags.

During the serving of refreshments the hostess was ably assisted by Miss May Hall, Miss Margaret Heritage, Miss Ella Senn, Miss Laura Cook, Miss Minnie Cook, Miss Emma Steel and Miss Nellie Hall, all of Philadelphia, who are guests at the farm.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

MARRIED TO A MINISTER.

Miss Bertha Rockefellow Becomes the Wife of Rev. W. C. Thomas.

Tuesday a.m. at 10 o'clock Rev. H. W. McKane, pastor of the First Church of Christ, united in matrimony the former pastor of the Christian church, Rev. W. C. Thomas, who is now pastor of a church in Danesville, Ohio, and Miss Bertha Rockfellow, of 195 North avenue.

The wedding was a very quiet one, the ceremony being witnessed by only a few friends and relatives of the couple. The bride was dressed in white, trimmed with long point lace. The couple left soon after the ceremony had been performed for Danesville, where they will reside.

Rev. Mr. Thomas was pastor of the Christian church in this city for about a year, leaving the last of August, '97. While here he made Miss Rockfellow's acquaintance, and become infatuated with her at once. After a year's absence he returned and made her his wife.

Burglars at Peapack.

Burglars have again visited the village, this time entering the Gladstone Railroad station and Benbrook's store at Peapack. At the station they got nothing, the agent having removed the valuables to his home. At Benbrook's store they succeeded in securing a large lot of merchandise and a small sum of money. Constable Todd and a posse of citizens scoured the country, but did not succeed in capturing the thieves.

NEW ENGINE HOUSE FOR THE WEST END.

Review of Plans for the Contemplated Structure.

NEAT, SUBSTANTIAL HOUSE.

WILL ADVERTISE FOR BIDS FOR ITS CONSTRUCTION MONDAY.

To Be Erected on West Fourth Street, Opposite Darrow Avenue—Will Accommodate a Truck and Hose Cart—The Building is to Be of Brick and it Will Be Two Stories High.

The West End is soon to have its much-wanted protection against fire The Common Council has approved of it and Monday bids for the erection of the West End engine house were advertised for and the work laid out. It is now only a question of a few weeks when work will be started on the new structure to be established out West Fourth street.

To be exact, the West End engine house is to be erected on the north side of West Fourth street opposite Darrow avenue. It will be a substantial brick building, 52 feet, 4 inches long and 34 feet, 8 inches broad. It will be placed in a lot, 50 feet broad by 120 feet deep. It will be two stories high at the front while a hose tower 42 feet high will stand on one side.

The building, which was designed by Mr. S. French, the Plainfield architect, is a simple, plain structure, with no ornament, but neat and regular design. It is prepared for a truck and a hose wagon so that the name "Engine House" is really a misnomer. There are four stalls and a well arranged stable with cement floor. The whole ground plan is so arranged that not an inch of available space is wasted but is utilized in some manner. The building is to be heated with hot water, from boilers established in the cellar which extends under the front part.

The second story consists of one large room for the men and the various necessary adjuncts, bath room, toilet and others. It does not extend back but half way. A good flight of stairs and two sliding poles connect it with the first story.

There is an outside entrance to the hose tower so that it is possible to take the wet and muddy hose there without dragging it through the rest of the building.

The house is to be situated where it will be possible to reach any part of the West End in short order. It is to be built on a lot purchased from Elston M. French who realized the need of more fire-protection there and gave the lot at a very moderate price.

MRS. M'LLIKEN'S SUIT.

She Wants the City to Pay $10,000 for Damages Sewer Beds Caused.

Papers have been issued in the $10,000 damage suit which was brought against the city by Mrs. Sarah Milliken, of West Front street, some time ago, and the trial of the case has been set down for the next term of court. Codington & Swackhamer are Mrs. Milliken's lawyers.

Mrs. Milliken sued the city for alleged damages done to her business of keeping boarders by the sewer beds, which were placed very near her house in the western end of the city. Craig A. Marsh, the corporation counsel, who will represent the city in the case, has sailed for Europe, but will probably return before October, the date when court opens. The lawyers for the plaintiff have been assured that this case is among the first on the docket, and will come up early for trial.

New Jersey Dentists to Meet.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the New Jersey State Dental Society will be held at the Asbury Park Auditorium July 20, 21 and 22. At the opening session on the first day the president's address will be read. The reading and consideration of papers will be taken up in the afternoon. On the afternoon of the second day the clinics will commence under the direction of Dr. Oscar Adelbery, chairman, and Drs. O. W. F. Holbrook, F. G. Gregory, C. W. Robillard and G. Carleton Brown. The general business of the association and election of officers will be attended to at the final session July 22d.

A Horse Knocked Out This Soldier.

William Case, of East Second street, who joined the Fifth Cavalry several months ago, is now probably at the front or on the way there. Case went to Tampa a month ago with his regiment. Soon after he arrived there, he was kicked on the shin by a horse and laid up for several weeks. A letter written by him on July 4th, said that his regiment had received orders to be ready to go to the front at once and that they expected to start in a few days.

WEATHER MAN SMILED ON THE EXCURSIONISTS.

PLEASANT DAY AT THE SEASHORE.

Twelve Cars of Pleasure Seekers Sought the Breezes at Asbury Park Thursday.

Whether it was due to the removal of Farmer Dunn or not, it is a fact that the weather smiled favorably upon the excursionists who went to Asbury Park Thursday with the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church. And the result—pleasure for everybody. The excursionists were twelve cars strong. When they arrived at the Park there was a hurried scattering, and soon the Plainfielders were sprinkled out over the domain of Founder Bradley, fully enjoying all the things that that eminent citizen has congregated together to attract visitors to that particular spot along the shore.

The excursion train was in charge of Conductor Joe Rose, and he and the other members of the crew exercised every attention possible to make the journey to and from the Park a pleasant one. The return homes was made in good time, one hour and thirty six minutes elapsing from the time of departure at the Park to the arrival in Plainfield, including two stops, aggregating eight minutes.

CHILD FOUND DEAD IN BED.

Mother Gave Him a Bath Last Night Before Putting Him to Bed.

Arthur Spencer is the name of a four-month-old baby that was found dead in bed Saturday at 7 o'clock at the home of its parents on Race street. The people are colored and have not been residents of the borough very long. Mrs. Spencer gave her young son a bath early last evening and placed him to bed. She gave him no further thought until this morning when she went to see how he was getting on. She then found him dead in the bed. The child has not been ill and the parents cannot account for the sudden death. Chief Marshal Wilson was notified of the death and sent for County Physician Dr. Wagoner. The doctor came to the borough Saturday morning and gave a permit for burial.

ENRAGED WOMAN'S ACT.

She Wanted a Bottle Filled With Whiskey But it was Cracked.

There was a sound of breaking glass heard on East Front street Thursday. The crash came from in front of a saloon, and drew a crowd at once. Roundsman Flynn rushed up to the spot to see what had happened, and saw that an Italian woman had thrown a pint whiskey flask into the middle of the street, which had broken in fragments.

The woman had gone into the side room of the saloon to get the flask filled and there discovered that it was cracked. In her rage she threw the bottle into the street. Flynn made her go out and pick up the pieces and carry them off, so that wheelmen, riding along would not puncture their tires.

A Big Tax Case.

The Singer Sewing Machine Company of Elizabeth has again brought before the Supreme Court, on a writ of certiorari, the proceedings of the State Board of Assessors, which has imposed a tax of $4,269.30 on the company. The papers filed show that the capital stock issued is $10,000,000, which, less a reduction for assessed value of real and personal property and personal estate of $814,000, leaves $9,186,000 assessable property. The writ in question was obtained to protect the company from loss of any rights under litigation entered on previously and still in progress. The company alleges certain franchise exemptions which the State Board of Assessors has ignored.

Juniors Don't Like Criticism.

The members of the local councils of the Jr. O. U. A. M., express the opinion that an injustice has been done them regarding the motive that prompted them to offer their services to the Government if needed in the present war. They say that the resolution offering their services was passed in all sincerity and that they will respond to the call made so far as possible. The councils received a public notice from the Adjutant-General in which he said that volunteers would be accepted individually upon the usual conditions that others have been accepted.

S. L. Toney Out Again.

Robert L. Toney, of Madison avenue, who collided with a carriage while scorching through Fanwood two weeks ago, and broke his collar bone, besides spraining his ankle and cutting a deep gash in his face, is able to be out again. Toney has spent the time since his accident in the hospital, and when released was very glad. It will be several weeks now before he can do much riding.

Helping to Build Torpedo Boats.

B. F. Ball, son of F. H. Ball, of Washington Park, who is now engaged by the Government at Washington, is meeting with great success. He is assisting in the construction of torpedo boats, and being an engineer his services are quite valuable.

COSTLY END TO A LUNCH

They Scattered Crumbs on a Church Porch, and When Remonstrated With by the Sexton, Langdon Assaulted Him.

Two of the city's street repairing gang, John Langdon and Thomas Brandon, have very poor ideas as to what occurred on East Fifth street one day last week. Their memories were refreshed considerably Saturday in the city court with the help of small fines.

One day the latter part of last week these two men were at work on East Fifth street repairing that thoroughfare. At noon they went on the steps of the Bethel chapel to eat their lunch. After they were through the janitor, Torton Langford, discovered a quantity of coffee grounds, egg shells and pieces of fat meat strewn around. He suspected that Langdon and Brandon had thrown them there and he accused them of it.

Some words followed, and next thing Langford knew Langdon had struck him in the face. Brandon stepped up to separate the two, but Langford did not attempt to strike back.

Langford had the two arrested, and the trial came off Saturday morning Langford's story was corroborated by two reputable witnesses, J. B. Smith, who lives next door to the chapel, and J. Hervey Doane.

Brandon, it was shown, took no part in the scrap except to separate Langdon and Langford, but he did such a large amount of "lying" on the stand, as City Judge DeMeza said, that he was fined $5. Langdon was fined $10. Both men will pay tonight when they receive their week's wages.

BOROUGH DELINQUENTS, BEWARE.

If You Don't Pay Up Your Names Will be Published in Plainfield Papers.

The borough officials have decided on a scheme which will increase the efficiency of their methods in collecting delinquent taxes. Heretofore the tax list has been published in the Somerville papers and only a very few people residing in the borough see the paper. This year the list is to be published in the Plainfield papers and the unpleasant facts and figures will be brought home to every delinquent. The 1896 list will be published soon after July 25th, and all persons who desire to have their names kept out of the papers had better interview Collector George F. Brown, on Somerset street, prior to that date.

CLERKS HAD A GOOD TIME.

Woodhull & Martin Employes Visited Oak Tree People.

The clerks and employes of Woodhull & Martin, to the number of 25, might have been seen piling into a large stage of Captain Wm. Hand's Friday about 7 o'clock. They were en route for Oak Tree, where they had a cordial invitation from Mr. and Mrs. Knight, of that place, to spend the evening with them.

The ride was a delightful one, and the party reached their destination soon after 8 o'clock. Lunch was spread on the grass and the evening was spent in sociability. Mr. Woodhull accompanied the party, and Mr. Martin would also have gone had he been home.

Break the Chain.

The following notice will be of interest to all Plainfielders who have received letters belonging to this chain: "Miss Leverich wishes to make an appeal in behalf of Matthew Morgan, the grandfather, and Mrs. Schenck, the mother of Miss Natalie Schenck, of Babylon, Long Island, to have broken the letter chain that was started by that young woman for the purpose of raising a fund for buying ice. The work has assumed such proportions that it is wholly unmanageable. The mail has to be collected each day in a big clothes basket, so that two or three persons are required to attend to it all the time. Over $2,000 collected by this means has been turned over to the auxiliary."

Couldn't Let Go the Wire.

One of the young sons of James B. Martin, of Manson place, climbed up into a tree Thursday, and while up there took hold of an electric light wire. The outside covering was worn off, and the little fellow was shocked. He could not let go, and stood there and cried until a painter working near came to his rescue and helped him down. The little fellow was not hurt, but had a bad scare.

Bad Fire Prevented.

A bad fire was narrowly averted Thursday in the office of Elston M. French & Co., on North avenue. One of the clerks dropped a lighted match in a basket full of papers, and immediately the whole mass was ablaze. The basket and its blazing contents were kicked out of doors and left to burn without molestation.

House-to-House Inspection.

Herbert C. McVoy, of Sandford avenue, has been employed by the Plainfield Water Supply Company to make a house-to-house inspection where water is used to see if there is any waste of the supply being furnished.

TRAP SHOOTING LEAGUE.

MEN OF SURE AIM AND STEADY NERVE ORGANIZE.

Result of the Meeting Held at George Thatcher's Home Last Night—Events are Arranged for Months of July and August.

"The Maples," George Thatcher's popular road house at Fanwood, was thronged Saturday by a crowd of sporting men from all over the State. The occasion was the opening shoot of the Climax Gun Club, and the organization of a league composed of trap shooting clubs in the central part of the State.

The sporting men first had a lunch served at the hotel by Miss Hoet Thatcher, after which the time until 6 o'clock was spent at the traps. Sweepstake shooting, doubles, a club shoot and a team race for twenty targets between seven men representing the Climax Club and the Dunellen Club took up all the time.

Some good records were made, but as most of the men were out of practice a few very poor scores were shown. Captain Money, from South Jersey, who has a reputation for trap shooting all over the State, put up some good scores, getting 17 out of 20 targets in the team race, and 22 out of 25 in the club shoot.

In the contest for doubles, when two birds were released at once, Captain Money twice in succession pulled down eight birds out of a possible ten. Tom Keller and "Dutchy" Smith were in pretty good trim. Lindsey and Neaf Apgar, the former from Dunellen, made good records.

The meeting for the organization of a shooting league was an impromptu affair. It was unanimously agreed to organize and the name of the Central New Jersey Trap Shooting League was adopted, with J J. Lindsey, of Dunellen, president; Thomas Keller, of this city, vice-president; and Eugene Tingley, of Bound Brook, secretary and treasurer.

So far the only clubs in the league are the Dunellen, Bound Brook and Climax, but more are expected to join, and in this way the interest in trap shooting, which has been gradually dying out, will be revived again A schedule of shoots are arranged as follows: July 30 there will be a shoot at Dunellen; August 13 at Bound Brook, and August 27 at Thatcher's. There will be a shoot every other Saturday through the warm weather, and a new schedule will probably be drawn later in the season. There will be trophies put up, and an effort made to bring the sport up to its former high standard.

Team race, 20 targets, between the Climax Gun Club and Dunellen Club.

CLIMAX.		DUNELLEN.
Money	17	Barron	14

SAD SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY.

John H. King Stricken With Apoplexy, But is Recovering.

After having just reached the age of 70 years, and having been an active worker ever since his early youth, John H. King, of West Second street, was Thursday stricken with an apoplectic fit—a rather sad event for his birthday.

Mrs. King found her husband prostrated in a chair on the front porch about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. She called a number of men from Rogers' seafood market, who carried Mr. King into the house. A physician was immediately summoned, and he stated the malady had taken effect on the brain. The attack was quite severe, but Mr. King is now recovering from its effects and is able to sit up today. It had been planned by Mrs. King to celebrate the day in honor of her husband's 70th birthday, but the affair was given up a few days previous.

Mr. King is the oldest employe of the Prudential Insurance Company in this city, having been connected with it for twenty years.

Killed a Large Snake.

Lewis Bird, of Summit avenue, killed a large snake Saturday night of the kind known as land pilots. He found it in the bushes on Mountain avenue, hidden in an old shoe. The snake measured two feet in length.

HERO FAR FROM BATTLES

DEVOTION TO GOVERNMENT DUTIES CAUSES SERIOUS ILLNESS.

G. W. F. Randolph Stricken With Illness From Over Exertion in the Quartermaster's Office—Now at His Home.

That the brunt of upholding the country's honor in these times of war does not always fall with telling effect upon the soldiers at the front, is evidenced in the serious illness of G. W. F. Randolph, of West Front street, brought about by over exertion in trying to keep pace with the great volume of business accumulating in the quartermaster's office in the Department of the East, U. S. A., in New York, where he is employed.

After the death of Rufus King Case, chief clerk of the quartermaster's office, due to sickness from overwork, a large amount of Col. Case's work has devolved upon Mr. Randolph by reason of his intimate knowledge of the chief clerk's duties. Like Col. Case, Mr. Randolph has been working long hours.

Last Friday while crossing the ferry from Jersey City to New York, Mr. Randolph fainted away, but after a time recovered sufficiently to walk to the Army building. But as soon as he went to his office he was overcome and became unconscious. He was removed to quarters upstairs and put to bed. A physician was called and for some time his life was despaired of. Mrs. Randolph was summoned and remained with her husband in New York till yesterday afternoon, when he was removed to this city in a special car on the Central New Jersey Railroad. The trip home weakened him considerably, and today his condition was not improved.

Mr. Randolph is a former freeholder of Somerset county and a prominent member of the G. A. R. Col. Kimball, the quartermaster, is very anxious about Mr. Randolph's condition.

WORK IN MISSION FIELDS.

Interesting Meeting at the Congregational Church Sunday Night.

The monthly missionary meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church was held last Sunday at the church. The meeting was led by John V. Beekman, Jr. It consisted of a survey of the mission fields in which the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Society are specially interested. There were five papers read, the subjects and authors of which were as follows: "City Missions in New York," by Miss Emma V. Fish; "Work Among the Indians in the West," by Miss Mary E. Robinson; "Japan," by Miss M. G. Morse; "Turkey," by Miss Elsie DeR. Suffern; and "Mimichroneeda," by Miss Katharine A. Dwight. Prayers were offered for the different missionary fields.

Trolley Struck the Buggy.

Sunday afternoon about 6 o'clock John Stevens, of Watchung avenue, was coming around the corner of Watchung avenue and Third street, when a trolley car of the Somerset street line also appeared. The horse cleared the fender, but the buggy could not escape. The wagon was partially wrecked and that was all the damage. The car was stopped suddenly or else the damage might have been worse.

Catholic Club Clam Bake.

Twenty-one members of the Catholic Club went by one of Captain William Hand's stages to "Linke's Rest" back of the mountains Sunday and spent the day in pleasant manner. Dinner was served by Frank Linke at noon, and about 5 o'clock all sat down to a clam bake. The members fished in the river and boated to their heart's content.

Fell From His Wheel.

Harry Allen, the eight-year-old son of George Allen, of Linden avenue and Steiner place, fell from his wheel last Sunday and hurt his head quite badly. The little fellow was riding around near the house, when his wheel slipped and threw him. Harry struck on his head and as a result has a big bump and several bruises.

Vigilant Policeman Found Side Door Open.

Sunday evening Patrolman Meyers found the side door to Sharkey's grocery on Richmond street left open. He notified the proprietor. This is the second time in the last two weeks that Meyers has found the door unlocked. Last time he found the key in the door.

Short Runaway.

Sunday morning a horse belonging to Mr. Sheldon, of Rahway, ran away on West Third street, and upset the buggy. Mr. Sheldon's son was in the vehicle and was thrown out but was not hurt. The horse stopped after running a block.

Fell Out of an Apple Tree.

Arthur Passon, aged 13 years, of Greenbrook road, fell out of an apple tree last Saturday afternoon and fractured one of the bones in the forearm. He was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital where he is now receiving treatment.

Short Crop of Peaches.

It is estimated that only about a quarter of a crop of peaches will be gathered in Hunterdon county this year.

THIEF HID IN THE CELLAR, CHANCE TO STEAL SPOILED

He Was Detected Just in Time.

Probably Was About to Notify a Pal —Mrs. Lawrence's House the Selected Place.

A thief secreted himself in the cellar of Mrs. P. Lawrence's house on Stelle avenue Thursday, and remained concealed until after the family had retired, when he felt it safe to begin operations.

Fortunately, one of the gentlemen was detained in New York until the train leaving at 10:30, and he reached home just in time to frustrate the thief's plans.

Passing through Field avenue he saw some one leaving his grounds, and on investigation found the back cellar door left open.

This door having been closed and fastened by one of the family several hours before, it is a matter of certainty that it was opened from the inside by some one hidden there.

Presumably the thief had gone for an accomplice to assist in the work he contemplated; but owing to Mr. Lawrence's opportune return, the house was secured against robbery.

The matter has been reported to Chief Grant.

HOT PACE FOR 5 MILES.

AN EXCITING ROAD RACE WON BY PLAINFIELDERS.

It was a Scratch Race With Seven Starters, Most of Whom Were From This City—Chas. Westerfield was First.

An exciting road race, gotten up by the P. A. B. Society, of South Plainfield, attracted quite a number of spectators to the Lehigh Valley crossing out Park avenue Saturday afternoon. The start was made at the crossing and the riders went around the block by Holly's Corners, Oak Tree, Pumptown and Woodbrook Farm, a distance of about five miles. They finished at the crossing.

It was a scratch race with seven starters, most of whom were from Plainfield. The start was a hot one. Turning the corner at Holly's Corners, Victor Christofferson was going so fast that he could not turn and ran up on the bank. He caught the bunch at the bridge. Then Sorensen and Christofferson paced the riders for the remainder of the distance. As a result, when the finish came, they could not hold the lead and Charles Westerfield, of Plainfield, and "Abe" Connett, the Plainfield colored rider, finished first and second, with Christofferson third and Sorensen fourth. The other three riders came straggling in afterwards. No time was taken.

The first prize was a diamond pin and the second a pair of gold cuff-buttons. They were presented to the winners after the race.

The T. A. B. Society, of South Plainfield, is preparing for another race in the future.

SET OIL STOVE ON A HOT RANGE.

Result, Explosion and a Lively Time in the Kitchen.

Monday an oil stove exploded at the home of Mrs. Cousan, on West Second street, and before the fire could be extinguished considerable wood-work was burned.

Alex. Manning, employed by Boice, Runyon & Co., was passing at the time, and he assisted in putting out the fire. At first the stove was picked up and thrown into the kitchen sink, but this did not help matters any, throwing a pail of water on it. The explosion was caused by setting the oil stove on another stove in which there was a fire.

Did Not Ill Treat His Wife.

Mr. and Mrs. James Nolan, of 907 West Third street, desire to contradict a rumor that Mr. Nolan was ill-treating his wife last Saturday afternoon. The facts are that Mrs. Nolan has and is very ill, and Saturday afternoon she was taken with hysteria and she screamed considerable. This attracted the attention of people in the vicinity, and a report was circulated that Mr. Nolan was abusing his wife. As a result Mr. Nolan has been laid off the street railway pending an investigation. Dr. Zeglio is attending Mrs. Nolan.

McCann Wins His Suit.

Justice Mosher this morning decided the case of Edward McCann against D. J. Galbraith, which was tried Thursday, in favor of the plaintiff. McCann sued for $7.02, which he claimed as wages due him, but the defendant filed a set-off, which more than covered the original amount. The plaintiff consented to take $3.54, which left a balance of $3.48, for which amount the Justice rendered judgment.

Won't Stay With Uncle Sam.

Frank Bailey, of 86 Duer street, has resigned his position as substitute letter-carrier, for the reason that the chances for his becoming a regular carrier are too small to warrent his running the risk of waiting. Mr. Bailey only carried the mail one day. He has returned to his old position at the Walter Scott Printing Machine Works.

PLAINFIELD HORSES CARRIED OFF HONORS

Closing Day of New Brunswick Race Meet Saturday.

A LARGE ATTENDANCE.

"HIGHLAND BOY" WON THE 2:17. CLASS IN STRAIGHT HEATS.

"Myrtle Twig" Was Second—"Linole" Won in the 2:30 Class—Darby's "Sunday" and Edwards' "Mollie Prince" Secured Part of the Purse in 2:40 Class — A Large Crowd Present.

Saturday afternoon without doubt was Plainfield's day at the race meet in the New Brunswick Driving Association, held at the Highland Park track. The meet, the last in the circuit of the Central New Jersey Driving Association, began Friday afternoon and was concluded Saturday afternoon with three more events in which the Plainfield horses carried off a majority of the honors.

As on Friday afternoon, the meet was well attended, several thousand people being present. Although it is too soon to speak definitely yet, the members of the New Brunswick Association are confident that they came out even at least and expect that they netted a small amount anyway.

The event of the meet to bring out the fastest horses was the 2:17 class. In it, Charles Brower, of Plainfield, drove J. W. Arkell's "Highland Boy" to victory in three straight heats, "Myrtle Twig," with Brantingham up, carried off second money.

The first heat furnished plenty of excitement. "Highland Boy" was well up with the pack as they turned the stretch, while "Fannie Blair," from a Trenton stable, was in the lead. Arkell's big gelding came down the stretch in great form. They were almost to the line when "Fannie Blair" seemed to slacken her speed and "Highland Boy" shot ahead and passed under the wire first. After that, the chestnut gelding had no more trouble in taking the next two heats, and "Fannie Blair" played an unimportant part in the race. "Myrtle Twig" came up and took second in the following heats.

In the 2:30 class, trotting and pacing, "Linole," from Woodbrook Farm, Osborne up, had everything her own way. She was pushed close enough in the second heat, however, to lower her mark. "Ned Davis" was her greatest rival in the race.

"Ajax," a brown gelding from Wright's stable at Hightstown, finally won the race, but put his mark 15 seconds lower than before he started. Douglas Darby's "Sunday" and S. H. Edwards' "Mollie Prince" were the Plainfield entries. Darby drove his own horse and Mr. Edwards' young son, Frank Edwards, drove the mare. The first heat went to "Charming," a Cranbury mare. "Mollie" was pocketed but managed to pull third. Her driver never hurried her and she seemed to have plenty of speed. "Ajax," who bid for first and failed in the first heat, took the second, with "Mollie" took "Charming" off her feet.

In the other two heats Darby drove his chestnut mare second, while Edwards was pocketed in each heat and finished third each time. Darby took third money and Edwards fourth. The last heat was trotted in 2:25. Wright claims to have sold his gelding for $1,000, as a result of the speed he showed in the last heat.

The summaries were as follows:

SUMMER'S END WILL SEE BETTER STREETS.

Street Commissioner Gavett is Hard at Work.

IMPROVEMENTS PLANNED.

NOT ONLY GO D ROADBEDS BUT SIDEWALKS AS WELL.

Much Macadamizing Has Been Accomplished by the Private Enterprise of Citizens—Seventy-five Cross Walks Have Been Laid—New Sewer Pipe Laid —Names of Streets to be Repaired.

Although the streets of this city are not up to their former standard, Street Commissioner Gavett by hard work and close attention to business is slowly getting them into good shape. The damage done the streets by the sewers, sewer connections and the street railway is being eliminated, and if the citizens continue to display the same public spirit as they have shown during this past summer and do much of their own macadamizing, by another year Plainfield can boast again of her fine streets and avenues.

Street Commissioner Gavett was seen Saturday morning by a reporter busy surveying Richmond street, near Putnam avenue, for the sidewalks which the Council has ordered laid. He consented to tell something of the work done in the last few months by the city, and a little of what is planned to do before fall.

Men are busy or have been busy repairing or macadamizing Madison avenue in two places, from Fourth to Seventh streets, and from Ninth street to Stelle avenue. The first part of this was done by the city, the other by the property owners. Stelle avenue from Plainfield to Madison avenues is being macadamized by the owners; Woodland avenue by the owners, from South to LaGrande avenues; and Central avenue, from Randolph road to ex-Councilman Stockton's house.

Beside this, about seventy-five crosswalks have been laid in various parts of the city. The other streets which are to be attended to as soon as possible are Sandford avenue, Westervelt avenue, Belvidere avenue, by Ravine road, East Fifth street, Watchung avenue, from North avenue to Ninth street, and Putnam avenue.

A number of streets also remain to be scraped and the gutters cleaned. Some of them are LaGrande avenue from Richmond street east, East and West Second, East and West Third, West Fourth, Berkman avenue, College place, Arlington avenue, West Sixth street and Randolph road.

The scraper is now at work at Netherwood. Netherwood avenue, from North avenue to Front street, will be scraped, and so will Leland avenue from North avenue to the city limits. Several culverts are to be built and others repaired.

The new sidewalks on Richmond street will be laid some 15 feet out from the old line. When the trolley poles were planted, they were set on the true line of the curb.

The systematic inspection of the sewers in the vicinity of Richmond street and Putnam avenue showed that about 100 feet of sewer pipe were shattered by a gas explosion a year ago. New pipe has been laid in its place. Another inspection showed that some more of the pipe in that locality needed new cementing, but that they were not broken. This work has now been suspended until the two storm sewers on East Second street and Plainfield avenue are finished.

FOR A STORAGE RESERVOIR.

A Site Selected Back of the Orange Mountain Range by Newark Engineers.

Newark engineers have selected a site for a 700,000,000-gallon storage reservoir half a mile south of Great Notch, back of the Orange Mountain range and in a natural basin quite near the big conduits which supply the city from the Passaic and Pequannock watersheds. A storage reservoir has been greatly needed, and last week the pumps at Belleville ran for four days taking water from the lower Passaic river through natural filtering beds near the river bank, into which a number of wells were driven some years ago.

Hurt by Jumping From a Wagon

The horse owned by Fred Hand, of this city, ran away Friday afternoon on East Front street and was caught at the corner of Front and Elm streets by James DeGraw. Mrs. Hand, who was in the wagon, received a severe shaking up and a few slight bruises The horse and wagon was not damaged. Mrs. Hand's injuries were received while she was jumping from the wagon before the horse got under full speed.

Looking After Sixth Street.

Street Commissioner Gavett is using the macadam and soil which is taken from Madison avenue between Fifth and Seventh streets to spread on West Sixth street from Madison to Park avenues. This is pleasing the property holders very much, as the street has long been in need of repair.

FIRE STARTED IN HAY.

Destroyed a Number of Buildings and Their Contents—Somerville Fire Department's Efforts Were of no Account.

Fire broke out in one of the buildings on Bernard Meyers' stock farm, at Finderne, Thursday, and destroyed all the barns and outbuildings. The origin of the fire is unknown, but as it started in the large hay barn, which was filled with newly cut hay, it is supposed it is due to spontaneous combustion.

Mr. Meyers conducts a creamery in the Rink building, on Watchung avenue, this city, which is in charge of his son, Benjamin Meyers. When Mr. Myers was seen this morning in regard to the fire, he said that it started about 5 o'clock. It spread rapidly and soon destroyed all the outbuildings, which joined one another, and a large creamery that stood some distance away, but did not injure the house.

All the stock was saved, but 200 tons of hay, bins of grain, farming utensils, etc., were burned. A large engine house and the windmill were destroyed.

Mr. Myers said that the fire would not make any difference in their milk supply.

The fire department from Somerville was sent for, but could not save any of the buildings. The loss is placed at $12,000, fully covered by insurance.

EXTENSION OF THE TROLLEY.

Brunswick Company Want to Erect a Temporary Bridge.

The New York and Philadelphia Traction Company are making efforts to get their cars running through Somerville and Bound Brook so as to have a continuous route to New Brunswick. They are at present laboring with the committee of the Board of Freeholders, having in charge the construction of the bridge over Peter's brook, to let them erect a temporary bridge. Engineer Herbert says this can be done so that the cars could be running through Somerville by Sunday or Monday. It is thought that the Freeholders will consent. The tracks have now been laid through Bound Brook as far as the Central station and connections will be made with the New Brunswick line in about ten days, so that the cars can run through.

There is a hitch at the Somerset street crossing of the Central Railroad on the way to Raritan. Some of the property-owners object to the depression of the street under the railroad, because it will injure them. The contractors are ready to proceed with the work, but the company cannot go ahead until the objections are overcome.

Hurt in a Runaway.

An Elizabeth man and his wife had a thrilling experience with a runaway horse on the Dugway road near Washingtonville, Thursday afternoon The horse became frightened and ran up the embankment and wrecked the buggy. The couple were thrown out and the woman quite badly hurt. They stopped at R. M. Clark's house in Washingtonville where the woman's injuries were temporarily attended to. Then they were brought to the North avenue station where they took the train for home.

Ballington Booth to Speak.

Commander Ballington Booth will be in this city to address the Volunteers July 25th. He will speak in the Y. M. C. A. hall.

When Ague Shakes You

you can shake the Ague by using AYER'S AGUE CURE. It is the one certain and infallible cure for that depleting disease. It has been tried in many countries and under various conditions, and has never been known to fail. An old veteran writes:—

"You may be interested to know my experience many years ago with Ayer's Ague Cure. The year before the war I was in Kansas. Some twenty of us were engaged in farming, and suddenly all were taken with fever and ague. We tried almost everything without getting any help, till at last I sent to the city and procured a bottle of Ayer's Ague Cure. I recovered at once. The others followed my example, and they, too, recovered. Every one in camp took the remedy and was cured by it. I used all through the war, have lived in thirteen different states of the Union, and have never had the ague since."

O. B. SMITH, St. Augustine, Fla.

Get AYER'S Ague Cure.

JOSH LUTKIN'S VISIT TO JUSTICE MOSHER.

Came Down From Smalleytown to Get Married.

DISAPPOINTMENT WAS HIS.

HIS PROSPECTIVE WIFE WAS TOO YOUNG, THE JUDGE SAID.

Josh Said That He Was Sixty-one Years Old and Susan Rudge, His Fiance, Was Only Seventeen—Josh Wanted to Pay the Fee With Chickens —The Judge Declined to Tie the Knot.

"We want ter git married, Yer Honor." Justice Mosher, who was lazily gazing out of the window of his office Thursday, looked up at this brief exclamation, and beheld a strange-looking pair standing before him. The man was old and gray, raw-boned, lanky, with a tuft of white hare hanging down over his bosom, keen bluey eyes that sparkled and shone in his excitement, and twinkled with humor as he proceeded to explain to the Judge what brought him to the city.

He was dressed in rusty black, and wore a straw hat pushed on the back of his head, while the bottoms of his trousers were poked in the tops of cowhide boots.

His companion was a shy little damsel, who didn't seem to be over sixteen. She wore a white dress trimmed with green ribbons, and kept tight hold of the elder's hand.

"Jedge, yer see its this way," said Mr. Wayback, after a moment's silence, shifting a gunny sack which he held under his arm to another position, accompanied by a faint "cluck" from its depths.

"Yer see its this way, My name is Josiah Larkin, and I live over by Smalleytown. Susie and me want to git married, and as her folks keep makin' such a tarnal fuss about it, we thought we would just slip over to Plainfield and let you tie the knot unbeknown to 'em."

Josh shifted the gunny sack again, and then apparently remembering something else, continued, "These here pullets; if they'd be any good to ye, you're welcome to them," and pushing down his long arm hauled out two white Leghorn pullets which he stroked affectionately. "These we brought along for your fee, the old Susie, and I bet you'll find them tender, too."

Justice Mosher was nonplussed for a moment. Just what to make of the strange looking couple he did not know. The man was 60 years old at the least, and the Judge suspected that something was not right Then the pullets too; that kind of a fee the Judge was not used to.

"Jedge, we don't like to keep yer waitin'," continued Josh, looking uneasily at his companion. Give me your hand, Sue," "Now say the words Jedge and we'll be gittin' out of here."

Judge Mosher could see no reason for delay, so getting down "Honey man" he opened the book and began to look for the formula on marriages.

"What is your name?" asked the Judge.

"Josiah Lutkin," was the reply.

"Your age?"

"Sixty-one."

"Your name?" turning to the girl.

"Susan Rudge."

"How old?"

"Seventeen years, eight months and twenty eight days."

"But," said the Judge, looking up in dismay, "She is not of age and I dare not marry her without her parents' permission."

Here was a dilemma, indeed. What to do the couple did not know. They looked at each other for a few moments, then slowly clasping hands they walked sadly out of the room as quietly as they had come.

The Judge, as he sat in the gathering darkness, could hear their feet pattering down the stairway, accompanied now and then by a disgusted cluck from the depths of the gunny-sack. It was some time before the Judge went home, then it was to dream of the fine fee he had lost.

Knocked Down by a Horse.

Thursday Mrs. H. E. Needham of Jackson avenue, received a severe injury while she was delivering a message to Thomas Newman, driver of the Scotch Plains stage. She stopped Mr. Newman on Somerset street opposite Powers' drug store, and, while she was talking to the driver, one of the team of horses became frightened and kicked Mrs. Needham in the side. The blow knocked her down and at first it was thought that Mrs. Needham was seriously hurt. She was assisted to her feet by Chief Marshal Wilson, who happened to be near, and she was then able to walk home. Today she feels the effect of the blow very much.

Composed an Episcopal Prayer.

Rev T. Logan Murphy, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, has composed a new prayer which has received the sanction of the bishop of this diocese. It is being quite generally used.

REVOLUTIONARY RELICS.

ARTICLES THAT HAVE BEEN ESTABLISHED IN THE WALLACE HOUSE.

A Cradle Which Rocked the Late Vice-Chancellor VanFleet to Sleep in His Infant Days—An Old Time Clock.

The historical old Wallace house at Somerville is looking at the best at this time of year, with a wealth of foliage about it, and the large flag presented by the Junior Order of American Mechanics last year is waving above the treetops. A number of valuable Revolutionary relics have recently been added to the collection within the old house, and the rooms are now pretty well furnished. The Nova Caesarea Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Newark, have just completed the furnishing of its room on the second floor. It is carpeted with the old-time rag carpet, and upon this stands an ancient bedstead, with high posts and a canopy stretched over a frame resting on the posts and covering the whole bed. This was the gift of Mrs. A. VanFleet, wife of the late Vice-Chancellor. She has also presented a mahogany cradle, in which her distinguished husband was rocked in his infant days. A walnut bureau and a mahogany dressing case of ancient patterns are gifts of other members of the chapter. Mrs. Bedle is in charge of two ancient brass candlesticks and some handsome blue ware plates, that adorn the walls.

The Jersey Blues have just placed in the upper hall an ancient cherry wardrobe from the Yard family. The most important contribution came from the late James Y. Elmendorf, of Millstone, whose collection of relics numbers fifty articles of rare Colonial and Revolutionary history. The famous red coat taken by his grandfather, General Frederick Frelinghuysen, from Colonel Rahl, after the battle of Trenton, is in a glass case, recently provided by the General Frelinghuysen Chapter, and is in the latter's room. There are old deeds and curious wills on parchment, valuable biographs and books, manuscript copy of the address of General Frelinghuysen on the death of Washington, handsome mahogany chairs, china wash bowl over 150 years old, unique centre and side brass lamps and numerous other curios.

The one on the stair landing is a tall clock which has the following remarkable history: The clock was procured from Peter Sutphen, of Hillsborough Township, Somerset county. When the British were approaching Millstone, in order to preserve the works of the clock, they were encased in a waterproof box and sunk in the Millstone river till all danger was over, when they were carried back to the old case to resume their duty of time keeping. The clock was presented by Mrs. Spencer Weart, aided by other women of Jersey City.

THE NEW HOSEHOUSE.

Councilmanic Committee Consider the New Plans.

The Councilmanic fire and building committee met Wednesday and examined the new plans for the hosehouse to be erected in the West End. The committee seemed to be very well satisfied with the plans and feel assured that according to the changes made there will be a material decrease in the cost of construction. The bids for construction will now be advertised for and by the August meeting of the Council it is hoped that the contract will be given out and the work of construction be started.

THE BERGEN SCHEME IS FINALLY ADOPTED.

County Boulevard Finds Favor with Freeholders.

ESTIMATED COST $300,000.

BIDS FOR THE FRANCHISE WILL BE ADVERTISED SOON.

The Report of the County Road Committee Was Adopted by the Board of Freeholders Thursday Afternoon—Three Members Voted Against It—Route Selected—Some of the Changes.

The much agitated movement toward the proposed county boulevard and trolley line from this city to Plainfield took a big step forward Thursday afternoon. The Union County Board of Freeholders expressed themselves in favor of it by a vote of 11 to 3.

A meeting of the Board was held Thursday afternoon when the report of the county road committee was received, putting the cost of the widening of the thoroughfare at not over $300,000. The report was adopted by a vote of 11 to 3, Messrs. Adams, of Cranford, Higgins, of Linden, and Robinson, of Fanwood, voting against it. Mr. Scudder, of Westfield, did not vote. Mr. Hulskamper, a member of the county roads committee, was not present.

The report of the committee was presented by Chairman Martin Roll. It was largely formulated from the report of the county engineers, Frank J. Hubbard, and J. F. Bauer, of Elizabeth, both of whom were present at the meeting. The report reviewed the situation, describing the present condition of the thoroughfare in question, the movement started by Frank Bergen last fall and the work of his committee. The committee reported that they had endeavored to estimate the cost of widening Westfield and and North avenues, from Orchard street, in Elizabeth, to Richmond street, in Plainfield. The cost according to these estimates, was $351,838, which the committee thought excessive.

Reductions amounting to $102,481, they counted on as coming from benefits to vacant properties that were opened up by the construction of the trolley line and by omitting to open up the line for a short distance in Westfield and in Cranford. In any event, they considered that $300,000 would cover the cost of the improvement.

They closed by submitting maps of the proposed improvement and recommended that they be adopted and that bids for the franchise be solicited by advertisements as required by law. Then followed a lengthy discussion after which the report was adopted, together with the maps. Bids will be advertised for at once

The voluminous report of County Engineers Hubbard and Bauer was received by the county road committee but was not presented to the board. The maps, however, were given and the plans laid out by the engineers will be followed.

The Engineers' report gives the start in Plainfield from Richmond street. The fronts of the oil cloth works and the shops of the Aluminum Plate and Press Company will be moved. To Fanwood the widening will be done on the north side and then it will be shifted from one side to the other so as to straighten the roadway.

Through from Fanwood to Westfield as far as Westfield avenue, the widening will continue on the north side. There it will be necessary to require the property of John M. Clark and Mary Cox and to move the building of Sonn Brothers. For five hundred feet on either side of the Westfield station, the road will remain at its present width, sixty-six feet, so as not to necessitate the moving of the Standard building or the Park Hotel.

From Westfield the widening will continue on the north side, taking out the bend in the road near Garwood and changing to the south side on entering Cranford. The road will run around the big block in Cranford as at present, for the space of two hundred feet where the road is eighty feet wide.

It will be necessary to completely macadamize North avenue from Westfield to Plainfield for a width of sixteen feet. It will be necessary to move a hundred buildings.

A new bridge will have to be built over the Cranford river and all the existing culverts and drains widened or rebuilt. There will also be necessary123,500 cubic feet of excavation.

Being Turned Out of Homes.

Agents of Baron Hirsh's colony at Woodbine are turning families from their homes for non-payment of rent. The colonists claim that they are paying all they can now and will ultimately settle in full. Twelve families are homeless. Their furniture is piled in the roadway, and hungry children are dependent upon charity.

TO BUILD A PARSONAGE.

OFFICIAL BOARD OF GRACE M. E. CHURCH DECIDES TO HAVE ONE.

The Action Will Have to Be Approved by the Board of Trustees When the Work Will Be Started.

It seems very probable that the Grace M. E. church will soon have a home which it can offer for the accommodation of its pastor. There has been a movement on foot in the church for sometime looking toward the erection of a parsonage. While it was merely talk among the members of the congregation, and no action was attempted, it found general favor with those who considered it. July 13th the first active move in that direction was taken.

At the regular meeting of the official board of the church, it was decided to build a parsonage. While the movement needed to be started by the official board, it will have to be approved by the Board of Trustees before anything can be done. There seems little doubt, however, but that the trustees will support the plan and vote in favor of it when work will be started without delay.

The site selected is in the rear of the lot now occupied by the church. Its convenience to the church itself and nearness to the neighborhood in which the majority of the congregation resides makes it a satisfactory site.

IN THE METHODIST PULPIT.

Pastors Who Will Officiate During Vacation of Dr. Snodgrass.

Rev. W. C. Snodrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, makes the following announcements giving the names of the divines who will occupy the pulpit at his church while he is away on his vacation. It is as follows: July 24th, Rev. A. E. Main, Seventh-day Baptist church; July 31st, Rev. E S. Jamison, Dunellen M. E. church; evening, Rev. G. W. Smith, presiding elder; August 7th, Rev. H. K. Carroll, editor of The Independent; August 14th, Rev. S. J. Herben, assistant editor of The Christian Advocate; August 21st, Rev. George Adams, Central M. E. church, Brooklyn; August 28th, Rev. George C. Wilding, D D., Hedding M. E. church, Jersey City; September 4th, Rev. W. C. Nelson, Newark Conference; September 11th, Rev. W. C. Snodgrass is expected to preach. The mid week services will be continued, and while the pastor is away Rev. W. C. Nelson, 74 Duer street, North Plainfield, will respond to calls for service at funerals, weddings, or in the visitation of the sick.

PARK CLUBHOUSE COMMITTEE.

Those Who Will Continue to Make the Club a Popular One.

The following persons have been selected as members of the house committee of the Park Golf Club: B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Meredith Dryden, Mrs. W. L. Saunders and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Jr. The fifth member of the commitee is yet to be selected. It is the intention of the committee to immediately proceed to furnish the new clubhouse and make it as attractive as possible.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company, at the solicitation of the club, has consented to extend its water mains to Johnston's drive on Somerset street, so that a pipe line can be run to the new clubhouse. By the extension of the main people living in the upper part of the borough will have increased fire protection. The work of laying the main will be started at once.

A Convenient Route to Coney Island.

Residents of this city who delight in an occasional day's outing to popular Coney Island, should know that the very quickest, most direct and comfortable way of reaching there is via Central Railroad of New Jersey. It requires no walking or any discomfort whatever, and you can travel by the company's regular trains. At Jersey City the ferry for foot of Whitehall street lands passengers right at the terminal of the Thirty-ninth Street ferry to South Brooklyn, where it connects in same station with Long Island Railroad with trains for either Coney Island or Manhattan Beach. This most direct and comfortable route enables the public to avoid crossing to New York and then hurrying for a steamboat that may have just departed and whose place of landing may be a great distance from a railroad terminal. The above route, now that the public knows of it, is growing into popularity by residents along the line of the Central, to a much greater extent even than the company anticipated. Through tickets obtainable at all the company's offices.

Don't Cross the Tracks.

Justice Mosher, who was tried severely Thursday by the crowd that thronged his court room during the progress of the trial of McCann against Galbraith, has issued new orders and appointed Constable Boekafellow to enforce them. The Judge says that the inside railing is for the use of lawyers, principals and reporters, and that the general public must not cross the line which separates the outer court from the inner upon pain of being "fined" from their room.

RIVALS OF THE ROAD SHOW LOTS OF SPEED.

An Exciting Road Race Was Held Thursday Night.

ANGERBAUER THE VICTOR.

RAY POOLE DEFEATED PETER SIMMONDS FOR TIME PRIZE.

The Race Was Arranged By Harry K. Lister—Five Prizes and a Time Prize Were Awarded — Simmonds Thinks He Won Time Prize — How They Finished — The Times Made.

There exists a mighty rivalry at present between two of Plainfield's wheelmen as to which is the speediest. Thursday, with twenty-four other riders, they met but the result was far from satisfying to the friends of one of the riders, at least. Ray Poole, tall and fair, and Peter Simmonds, the heavily-built colored racer, were the rivals, and Thursday night the honors went to Poole.

It all happened in the ten-mile handicap road race that Harry K. Lister arranged for last evening. The race was started at the corner of Park avenue and Randolph road and followed Park avenue to Holly's Corners and thence to Pumptown by the way of Oak Tree and back over the same course. The distance is about eight miles although it was called ten for convenience. The racers went by the way of Oak Tree so as not to have to cross the Lehigh Valley tracks at grade.

The race was started at 7:16 o'clock. It was witnessed by nearly five hundred people who crowded Park avenue so that passing vehicles found difficulty in making their way through them. There was not a great deal to see; only the start, as each bunch of riders was sent off at the pistol shot, and the finish, when they came through like young cyclones with the crowd went into ecstacies of joy or disgust depending on the position of their favorite rider.

One of the riders in the very first bunch was Henry Angerbauer. He kept the lead, and there he remained winning out by a good distance. Embleton, Westerfield, Sorensen, Maguire and Stout held together after the first few miles. Christofferson came up and made a good showing on the first half, but the punishment he put him out of the race. Stout would not wait and paced the bunch so that he finished in the rear of the bunch at the tape.

Poole crept up in company with Abbott, from Rahway, and they brought with them two other riders. They kept well away from the scratch men. The four scratch men stayed together for a time, then McDowell, of New Brunswick, quit. Sorensen fell behind. Simmonds and Letson, of Stelton, finished within a wheel of each other, the colored rider in the lead.

Competitor.	Handicap.	Actual Time.
Henry Angerbauer.	3 min.	22:24
Wm. Embleton.	3	22:26
Charles Westerfield.	1½	22:30
Chris. Sorensen.	1½	22:30 3-5
John Maguire.	2	23:06
Chauncey Stout.	2½	23:09 1-5
Ed. Bell.	2	23:17 1-5
Burt Townley.	2	23:18
Wm. Poole.		23:24 1-5
Fred Abbott.	1	23:25
Ray Poole.	1½	23:26 4-5
Edgar Haskard.	1½	23:36
Ed Dunn.	2	26:08
C. Simmonds.	sc.	22:10 3-5
Fred Letson.	sc.	22:30 1-5

The times of the other riders were not taken but they finished in the following order:—C. Apgar, Plainfield, 1 4 minute; Yep Sorensen, Plainfield, scratch; Joe Burke, Plainfield, 1-4 minute; James Slorah, Plainfield, 2 minute; C. Embleton, Westfield, 1½ minutes; Lewis Peterson, Plainfield, 2 minutes; Fred Kroner, Plainfield, 2 minutes.

The time-keepers were J. W. Van Sickle and Charles E. Vail. The judges were Nathan Titsworth and Charles B. Monroe.

The first time prize was awarded to Ray Poole, with William Embleton second and P. Simmonds third. Simmonds and his friends were very indignant as they were sure that Simmonds had finished less than fifteen seconds after Poole but the watches said otherwise.

DENNY KANE AGAIN ON DECK.

Stopped Another Runaway Horse This Noon.

A delivery horse belonging to George Schlereth, an upholsterer, of West Second street, ran away Thursday while its driver was in the house, and got as far as Front and Somerset streets before being caught.

The horse turned the corner of Second street and Park avenue at a slow gait, but before he reached the middle of the block broke into a run. The wagon collided with the South Plainfield stage which stood in front of Shaw's drug store, and was upset. Dennis Kane, who stood near the corner, ran out and caught the animal before any more damage was done. The wheels were broken, and one of the axles snapped off short. Mr. Schlereth knew nothing about the runaway until told about it by some one after the horse had been caught.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

EASTON WAS RELEASED.

JUSTICE MOSHER DECIDED THAT THE COMPLAINT WAS DEFCTIVE.

Theodore Glaser Had No Right to Become the Plaintiff—Prosecution Must Remain With Crane & Mundy.

Two dollars and a yard and a half of bologna sausage were too much for William Easton Saturday night, July 9th. He went into Crane & Mundy's butcher shop on West Front street, and drew $2 which was charged to Theodore Glaser, a fat and hide dealer. Easton worked for Glaser, and Mr. Mundy, from whom Easton got the money, thought it was for Glaser, who had an account there and often sent his man there on a similar errand.

It seems that Easton was drunk that night, according to the evidence Monday when he was arraigned before Justice Mosher charged by Glaser with obtaining money under false pretenses, and did not fully understand the nature of his action.

After obtaining the $2 he purchased a long piece of bologna sausage, ate that, and spent the rest of the money for rum.

A few days afterwards Glaser went into the butcher shop, and seeing $2 charged up against him, wanted to know what it was for. He said he knew nothing about the matter.

The case came up for a hearing Monday. Glaser was present with his witness, and testified to the fact that Easton had falsely represented things when he drew the $2. Easton had retained Counsellor William K. McClue, who was obliged to be present, so William Sweeny, his clerk appeared in behalf of the prisoner, and handled the case so well that the Justice dismissed the complaint against Easton without the defendant's producing any witnesses for himself.

The defendant's counsel demanded the release of his client on the grounds that Glaser was not the proper person to bring the charge, as Crane & Mundy were the party who were out by the transaction, and so the Justice ruled. Easton was released, but it is said that another complaint will be drawn up against the man today, this time by the proper persons.

Easton, on the other hand, threatens to bring an action against Glaser for false imprisonment, and the trouble between these two, employer and employee, seems far from being settled.

BELABORED WITH A BED SLAT.

Colored Relatives Air Their Troubles in City Court.

A bed slat, William Ashby and his brother's wife were the principal characters in a little drama that is to be rehashed at the city court Saturday morning. Monday afternoon Ashby was arraigned before Judge DeMeza on the charge of beating his sister-in-law with a bed slat. He is accused of having thrown her on the bed and belabored her with the slat. They are colored residents of 152 East Front street. He was arrested by Roundsman Frederickson. He was held for trial Saturday morning.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

Manager Maze Edwards is on deck again in an amusement sense and next week will see the opening of Music Hall for the season of 1898 and 1899. For the opening of the theatre, he has engaged the "Sullivan's Troubadours," a new idea in repertoire, with the following named list of all-star artists:

The California Comedy Couple, Charles B. Nelson and Mamie Milledge, producers of comedies, farces and dramas. Also the well known romantic actor, E. P. Sullivan, and a carefully selected company, presenting scenes from standard and classic plays; Emily Lascelles, the pretty and talented leading lady; "Flora," the queen of all transformation dancers, in a bewildering vision of light and motion; Leah Starr, the fascinating dancing and singing soubrette; Joe A. Hardman, the eccentric comedian; Master C. Whitely, New York's phenomenal boy singer; The Glees, America's most wonderfully talented musical artists, in their musical melange, consisting of operatic and popular gems and refined comedy; C. E. MacKenzie, introducing Edison's waragraph, showing all of the latest war pictures, up to date and true to life; C. L. Hamer, the talented composer of music. This clever organization is under the management of H. Brooks Hopper.

WRECK OF A WOMAN ASKED TO GO TO JAIL.

White Haired and Past Three Score Sne is Homeless.

ARRESTED WHILE DRUNK.

REQUESTED JUDGE DEMEZA TO SEND HER TO JAIL FOR A MONTH.

Judge Pitied Her and was Going to Let Her Go When She Made the Strange Request—Her Life Has Been One of Dissipation—The Officer Has Been in Jail Many Times Before.

All sorts of coarse oaths issued from between her toothless gums. Her scanty white locks flowed about her head in unkempt fashion, and she looked what she was, a helpless wreck on the tide of humanity. It was Monday noon. Twice she had been put out of J. A. Blatz's saloon and told not to return. Then she sat out on the curb and cursed.

It was there that Patrolman McCue found her, and dispersing the crowd that had congregated, attracted by her cries and screams, took her to the lock-up where she spent the night in the damp white washed cell.

Tuesday she was the only prisoner to be haled before City Judge DeMeza. The Judge pitied the wreck of womanhood and was inclined to be lenient. Apparently, she was sixty or sixty-five years of age. A hard life, filled with dissipation, showed its traces in the wrinkled face and the sunken eyes. An old shabby calico gown, whose original colored had long since faded into a dingy brown, was half hidden by an old black shawl that she wrapped tightly about her.

She hadn't any excuse, she said. Didn't have any home, just lived out. Had been living in Skillman lately. Yes, she had been in Somerville jail several times, she did not remember how many.

The Judge's questioning elicited the fact that her name was Mrs. Mary Fleming, a widow, and that she had one son living in the west somewhere.

"Don't you think he'd be proud of you?" asked the Judge. She heard the question but made no answer. Apparently, she did not care but gazed about the stuffy little court room.

The Judge did not want to commit such an old grey-haired woman to jail. So he asked "What will you do if I let you go?"

"Judge," began the prisoner, drawing her shawl closer about her withered form, "I've got the rheumatism bad. If you'll send me up for 30 days, your honor, I won't object. I have got the rheumatism so bad." And she reiterated the statement again and again.

"Well, I'll accommodate you," remarked the Judge. "Make it thirty days." And the prisoner hobble l back to her cell.

Tuesday p. m she was escorted to the Elizabeth jail by Chief Grant.

WOKE UP TO SEE A BURGLAR.

A. E. Bushnell Saw a Man's Face Peering Through a Transom.

A. E Bushnell, who lives in one of the flats over Rockfellow's grocery store on Park avenue, was awakened Monday about midnight by the turning of the handle to the door to his bedroom. Looking up, his eyes caught sight of a rough face peering in at him through the transom over the door. It was a burglar, and Mr. Bushnell didn't stop to get a better view of him, but running to the window gave the alarm, and in a short time had three policemen rummaging through the rooms in a vain search for the intruder.

Officer Lunger answered the alarm. He was called by John Randolph, who works for A. M. Runyon & Son, across the street. John was sitting on the piazza of the undertaking establishment at the time and heard Mr. Bushnell's shouts. Lunger whistled for help, and Warden Tom Martin answered the call. Soon after Sergeant Kiely came up, and all three made a thorough search of the house and the grounds in the rear without success.

Randolph said that he had heard some one scramble off the rear piazzas of the flat just before Mr. Bushnell called for an officer.

This morning nothing was found missing in the house.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Whenever the Alert hose carriage attends a fire, "Spot," the big coach dog, always accompanies her. There are two of the dogs that live at the quarters on West Second street, "Spot" and "Toots." Monday night there was great rejoicing among the many frequenters of the Alert house, for "Toots" was the mother of seven little puppies. Everybody is anxious to have one, so there will be no trouble in disposing of them all.

The family of George T. Rogers, of Myrtle avenue, has returned from Belmar.

INCREASED VALUATION.

PLAINFIELD'S TAXABLE PROPERTY IS $8,000,000.

Increase Over Last Year is $325,000—Total Valuation in the County is $39,023,000, an Increase of $1,047,500.

The assessors of the county met in the court room in Elizabeth, Monday, to fix the valuations and tax assessments in the wards and townships.

All the districts were represented, and there were also in attendance Captain J. Frank Hubbard, of Plainfield, director of the board of Chosen Freeholders; County Collector Wood, Sheriff Kirk, Comptroller Carlton and other officials.

The total valuation in the county is $39,023,000, an increase over last year of $1,047,500. The increased valuation in Elizabeth is about $200,000; in Westfield, $198,000, and in Plainfield, $350,000. The increase in the other cities and towns is slight, some smaller than was anticipated.

VICTIMS OF HARD TIMES.

SIX STRANGERS TOLD WIERD STORIES IN THE CITY COURT.

They Were Found Asleep in a Box Car Where They Had Gone to Escape the Rain—Sentences Suspended.

An empty box car stood on the siding last Tuesday down beyond the Scott Press Works. As the rain fell unceasingly, a weary wanderer approached. The door stood temptingly open and in he crawled. Others came until there were six of them, water-soaked and weary.

Then came an interruption. The stentorian voice of Sergeant Kiely ordered them to come out. Patrolman Myers was with him.

Six bedraggled men huddled close to the car and were marched down to the lockup. There they were locked up for the night. Wednesday they were all arraigned before City Judge DeMeza

They were all above the usual tramp in appearance. Several, in fact, looked quite respectable. Their little tales, as related in court, reminded one of a modern Arabian Nights, for the stories were all filled with adventure and told of long wanderings.

John H. Phillips, the first man in the line, explained that he was a newspaper man. He had worked under Editor Hearst on the San Francisco Examiner and also had been employed by the Associated Press. Afterwards he went on a Denver paper and then had become press agent for a theatrical company. Stranded at Detroit, he had made his way east with the intention of trying to get a position with Hearst on the Journal. He was now endeavoring to earn a little money to purchase suitable clothes in which he could present himself when Hearst returns from Cuba.

He thought one night in "a cell literally alive with vermin" was sufficient punishment for the offence he had committed, and the Judge thought so, too.

Fred E. Coleman, a friend from the Pacific coast, was a coffee man. He, too, was out of a position. Frank Crawford was a weaver looking for a position. Charles Reed was a worker in metals and looking for work. Frank O'Brien had seen all of America he cared for. He was hurrying to Philadelphia to work his way back to the British Isles. James Torence was a union moulder in good standing.

In excellent language Coleman expressed his great regret that anything of the kind had happened. The Judge was equally sorry and suspended sentence on them all, whereat there was general rejoicing. Coleman extended a cordial invitation to the Judge to break bread with him when he was in better circumstances than at present.

ACTED AS JUDGE AND AGENT AT SAME TIME.

Justice Storms Pleaded Guilty to Complaint Against Him.

LIABLE TO PAY FINE OF $25.

SEVERAL LEGAL COMPLICATIONS OUT OF SMALL MATTER.

The Justice Went Contrary to the Advice of His Counsel, W. S Angleman, Who Was Prepared to Fight the Complaint—Understood Plaintiff Will Not Demand Payment of Fine.

Claims, cross claims, suits and counter suits have made the life of Justice Storms, of New Market, miserable lately, and Monday the Justice partially settled his difficulties by pleading guilty in New Brunswick to a charge of trying a case in his court while at the same time he was acting as agent in the case for the plaintiff in the action, and thereby made himself liable to a fine of $25. The Justice did this contrary to the advice of his counsel, Lawyer Angleman, who was prepared to defend his client, and was thunderstruck at the action of the Justice.

Justice Storms' troubles began six weeks ago. R G. Chase & Co., of Philadelphia, nurserymen, sold Colonel William B. Hayes, of Dunellen, a quantity of fruit trees amounting to about $15.75. The sale was made in April, and in June suit was brought against Hayes by Chase & Company for the payment of the money. June 18th the case was tried before Justice Storms, who rendered judgment for the plaintiff, who was represented by Counsellor Angleman. Harry Cook, of New Brunswick, represented the defendant.

Hayes appealed the case to the Common Pleas, at New Brunswick, and the case will come up again for trial during the next term of court.

This was only the beginning of the legal squabbble. Hayes then sued Luther Mundy and L. Pierce, constables, for $50, in tort, for trespassing on his land. This case was tried before Justice Charles W. Sedan, of New Brunswick, June 25th. The suit was dismissed against Perce, and Mundy was ordered to pay Hayes one dollar damages. Lawyer Angleman represented the two defendants, and straightway appealed this case to the Common Pleas, and this, too, will be tried this fall.

Lastly Hayes brought suit against Justice Storms for trying the first case at Chase & Co. against Hayes, while he (Storms) was the company's agent. According to a recent statute a justice is liable to qui damages of $25 for trying a case under those circumstances, the penalty going to the plaintiff.

Justice Storms prepared to fight this case, and retained Lawyer Angleman to defend him. The Justice and his counsel were present in Justice Sedam's court June 27th, when Mr. Angleman made some objections and succeeded in having the case adjourned for two weeks. July 11th it was adjourned to Monday.

Monday Mr. Angleman met Justice Storms outside of the courtroom, found out that his client was ready to proceed, entered the courtroom, and then listened to the Justice plead guilty to the allegation.

It is understood that the Justice and Col. Hayes got together Sunday and decided to patch up the difficulties, the Judge agreeing to plead guilty to the charge if the other would not insist upon the penalty being paid.

The matter is not at rest yet because, after the settlement of the matter just referred to, Col. Hayes made known his intention of suing Mr. Miller, of Newburg, the salesman for Chase & Co., for rent of his ground where the trees, which are the root of the litigation, are planted. He wants $50 a month rent. Thus three cases have been tried already for the paltry sum of $15, and the end is not yet.

Justice Storms' action in the matter, where he is charged with being the agent for Chase & Co., is said to amount to very little. The Justice sent Col. Hayes a note in which he told him that the claim of $15.75 had been put in his hands for collection.

Mr. Randolph Improved.

The many friends of former Freeholder George W. F. Randolph, of West Front street, will be pleased to learn that he is holding his own, and the attending physician, Dr. Endicott, gives hope of his recovery.

—The Maine has been remembered and our "Uncle Sam" is in a better mood—don't forget to come to Peck's.

—Michael Meaney, of Elm place, left his wheel near the North Avenue station Monday while he went to the telegraph office on business. When he returned for his wheel it was missing, and he was just about to inform Chief Grant of his loss when a small boy appeared and informed Mr. Meaney concerning the bike. Someone had hidden the wheel for a joke.

CARRYING THE PORT GRAPES TO THE WINERY, ON THE HEADS OF MEN AND WOMEN, NEAR THE VALLE DE MENETIZ WHERE THEY ARE DUMPED IN THE MASHING VATS TO BE TRODDEN FOR PORT WINE.

The rugged hills with projecting rocks of brown stone and shale containing a large quantity of iron, make it impossible to use wagons here hence the grapes have to be carried to the treading vat or larger as they are called, and some are large enough for twenty persons to tread, which they do danoing to music furnished by the proprietor.

ALFRED SPEER,

the Pioneer wine grower of New Jersey whose Port Grape wine and Burgandy rivals the world, imported the Port Grape vines many years ago, and planted vineyards in the Passaic Valley N. J. The soil in Passaic county, New Jersey, is identical to that of de Menetiz.

Speer's New Jersey Vineyards

are situated in the Passaic valley below the mountain range and the grapes are carted to the winery in the town of Passaic where they are mashed between rollers made of rubber, which do not break the seeds, and made into wine.

These grand wines of Speer's that have mellowed in flavor in the course of years of ripening, are the choicest wines in this country and can only be obtained by paying a price that is higher than new wines from western vineyards. Mr. Speer deems it necessary for a healthy wine that it be allowed years to mature in wood to get rid of its coarse parts; with this object he keeps his wines several years in fumigated cellars and frequently racks before bottling or offering for sale. The reputation of Speer's wines as a valuable medicinal and family wine extends around the world.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time another cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor." I was not feeling well there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?" He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said: "The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles." results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial in this way, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

JERSEY WILL HAVE A NATIONAL CAMP.

Such is Now the Belief in the War Department.

VOORHEES AT WASHINGTON.

THE GOVERNOR HAS BEEN WORKING TO SECURE THE CAMP.

It Is Believed That His Visit in Washington Monday Has Decided the Authorities in Favor of Sea Girt—He Wore a Broad Smile When He Departed After the Interview.

Camp Alger, Va., July 27.—Governor Foster M. Voorhees of New Jersey paid a flying visit to the War Department at Washington Monday, to consult with the military authorities relative to the proposition to make Sea Girt, N. J., a military post. The Governor has been urging this plan since the outbreak of the war, and the State camp ground had been inspected and reported on favorably several times.

No effort has been spared by the New Jersey Executive in the furtherance of this plan, but the people at the War Department did not agree with him. The conference lasted several hours, and when Mr. Voorhees left the Department in time to catch the Congressional train for his home he wore a smile several sizes larger than usual. It was stated yesterday that the Governor had at last succeeded in bringing the Secretary of War and Adjutant-General Corbin over to his way of thinking.

The Secretary of War told the Governor that there must be sufficient room provided to insure the health and comfort of the soldiers. The Governor then detailed what had been done in the way of arranging for the post, and the facilities offered by the site. It was understood late yesterday that the question was not fully decided, but that Governor Voorhees obtained a full hearing of his case and made a good impression.

HOUSE BOATING.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Ball Entertain on Their Summer Craft, "Sommerheim."

Miss Laura Long and Willis West spent last week on F. H. Ball's house boat, "Sommerheim," at West Hampton. This week Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Ball, of the borough, and Miss Mueller, of Buffalo, will be Mr. Ball's guests. The "Sommerheim" is now lying off Fire Island, where the blue fishing is good, but will return to West Hampton this week.

The New York Herald, in its notes on Fire Island Monday, says the following: "The house boat "Sommerheim" dropped anchor here last night and presented quite a gay appearance."

BABYS' CAMP OPEN.

King's Daughters' Charity in Progress and Needs Aid.

The City Union of King's Daughters wishes to announce that the Babys' Camp on the mountain is now open and is being made use of by the city. Visitors are always welcome, and it is hoped that the people of the city will interest themselves in this branch of charitable work. Financial help is greatly needed and will be very gratefully received. All contributions should be sent to Mrs. W. A. Coddington, 409 East Second street.

CAMP BY THE RARITAN.

Plainfielders Spending the Summer in Their Indian Tepee.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Bunyon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Randolph and Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Wickoff are camping at Pine Grove, opposite Raritan, on the canal. The camp is a delightful one, pleasantly situated and easy of access. Two members of the party are "Red Men" and their friends are having great sport alluding to the camp as the "Indian tepee."

CRANFORD'S RIVER FETE.

It Will Take the Place This Year of the Carnival.

Cranford,—July 27—Instead of the midsummer carnival on the Cranford river, a lawn and river fete will be held on the lawn of Joseph Purcell on the afternoon and evening of August 10th. It will be for the benefit of the Red Cross Society. Those who have in past years taken part in the carnival are preparing to assist at this event.

In Hard Luck.

An unknown wheelman ran into E. B. Randolph's mineral water wagon on Park avenue Tuesday and damaged the rear wheel of his machine so that he couldn't ride it.

Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Butler have taken possession of their new home on West Fifth street.

HOBSON IN NEW JERSEY.

HERO OF THE MERRIMAC VISITS AT MORRISTOWN.

He Was Received With a Grand Demonstration and Carried to His Carriage—White There was the Guest of his Cousin

Morristown, July 27.—Lieutenant Richmond P. Hobson arrived in Morristown last evening at 9:15 o'clock. The station was crowded with persons anxious to catch a glance of the hero of the Merrimac. Red fire made the station almost as light as day, and amid the tooting of whistles and the playing of a band Lieutenant Hobson popped off the train. That is, he tried to do so, but the hero was fairly carried to the carriage.

Hundreds shook his hand as he was carried by and many calls were made for a speech, but the cheering made it impossible for a word to be heard.

As soon as possible the police cleared a way for the carriage, and he was driven to the home of his cousin, Miss Betton, in South street. He stayed here until this morning, when he left for New York. The lieutenant came direct from Boston, where he went Monday evening to arrange for lighters to be used in raising the Colon and the Maria Teresa at Santiago.

REUNION OF GRADUATES

CLASS OF '90 OF THE PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL ENTERTAINED.

Mrs. F. E. Woodruff Entertained Her Old Classmates—Letters Read from Those Unable to be Present Then.

An enjoyable affair was held Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Woodruff, of Duer street, when Mrs. Woodruff entertained seven members of the Plainfield High School class of '90. The event was purely an informal social one, and those present had a delightful time in talking over past incidents of happy school days. Mrs. Woodruff proved to be a charming hostess and her classmates were pleasantly entertained. A portion of the evening was passed in reading letters of congratulation and regrets from members of the class who could not be present.

During the past eight years the class has only lost one member by death, Miss Minnie French. Each one of the members have in some way or other distinguished themselves. Some are connected with banking houses, some have been admitted to the bar and are practicing law, while others are to be found in the high walks of life. The following members were present Tuesday evening: Miss May Stelle, Miss Ernestine Smith, Miss Mary Buxton, Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, Alfred White, E. J. Patterson and Asa F. Randolph. There were eighteen members in the original class.

The following members are living in various parts of the country and could not be present: Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph, Miss Eleanor Davis, Mrs. George Morton, Miss Clara Woltman, Miss Margaret Case, Miss Bessie Blair, William Coriell, Edmund Nitschwitz, Edward Petrie and Walter Darby.

Prof. Edward Lewis, now of Lewis University, Chicago, was the teacher of the class and a letter of regret at being unable to be present was received from him. During the evening the hostess served refreshments to her guests.

When the happy affair terminated all carried away with them pleasant thoughts of an evening profitably spent.

American Day for Juniors.

Asbury Park, July 27—The State officers of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics have completed arrangements for the annual observance of American Day, at Asbury Park Thursday, August 18th. It has been decided to issue an address to the thirty thousand members of the order in New Jersey, urging upon them to journey to Asbury Park on that day to participate in the annual reunion and parade of the order. The officials believe that at least ten thousand members will take part in the parade and that ten thousand relatives and friends will accompany them to the shore to celebrate the day.

Miss Mabel Bogardus, of Putnam avenue, is spending her summer at Caldwell, N. J.

Mrs. Gilmore and daughter, of West Second street, are visiting friends in New York State.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Baxter, of Putnam avenue, are spending a few weeks at Warwick, N. Y.

Cecil Hoffman, of Annandale, will be the guest of J. P. Laire, of Park avenue, this week.

Miss Lelia Howard, of LaGrande avenue, is visiting at Hudson, N. Y.

LAND ARMS FOR CUBANS

Wanderer Leaves Supplies On Cuban Coast.

SKIRMISH WITH ENEMY.

THE SPANISH TROOPS FIRED ON LANDING PARTY.

They Drove Americans and Cubans To The Beach and Were in Turn Repulsed—Six Americans Wounded

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, July 27, 12:30 p. m.—Six wounded men were brought in this morning on board the Wanderer from Banes, Cuba, where a sharp engagement between American and Spanish occurred.

The Wanderer left here July 20th with supplies and ammunition for the Cubans. There was also on board an expedition under Captain Heard, composed of ten troopers of the Third Cavalry, Capt. Heard's regiment, and twenty-five Cubans.

When they arrived off Banes, they were joined by several hundred Cuban insurgents from the interior. The work of landing the supplies was immediately commenced with the aid of the Cubans on shore.

While all were busy transferring the supplies to the boats that carried them to the shore and carrying the supplies inland, they were attacked by a large force of Spaniards who drove them back to the beach.

There the Americans and Cubans made a stand and forced the Spanish to retire. Six Americans were wounded in the skirmish. A number of the Cubans were also wounded. The Spanish loss is unknown, but it was undoubtedly heavy.

TYPHOID FEVER CAUSED DEATH.

Roswell Percy Fish, Well-Known Here, Died at His Home in Chicago.

Roswell Percy Fish, son of R. P. Fish, of Chicago, and nephew of Andrew W. Fish and Frederick K. Fish, of this city, died at the home of his father Monday night, July 25th, in the twenty-ninth year of his age. The 10th of last August Mr. Fish was married to Miss Anne Winslow Crane, of Brooklyn, formerly a resident of this city. After less than a year of wedded happiness Mr. Fish was stricken with typhoid fever and died after an illness of a little more than two weeks. Mr. Fish was of an unusually attractive personality, and thoroughly noble and upright in character. He had a large circle of friends in Plainfield, who will deeply mourn his loss.

GASOLINE STOVE EXPLODED.

Mrs. VanPelt, of Somerset Street, Escaped Injury and Extinguished Flames.

The explosion of a gasoline stove at the home of Mrs. VanPelt, 90 Somerset street, Tuesday, resulted in the burning of a quantity of clothing and the woodwork in the kitchen where the explosion occurred. Mrs. VanPelt, fortunately, was able to reach the stove and throw it out of the window before the house was set on fire. Mrs. VanPelt was not burned. The insurance policy is held by E. M. French & Co., of North avenue, and they will speedily adjust the loss.

Nurses on a Vacation.

Miss Anderson and Miss Delaney, nurses at the hospital, who have been enjoying their annual vacation, will return to their duties today. Miss Messler will leave Friday to spend her vacation at Somerville and Whitehouse. She will spend a portion of her time in wheeling through the country.

Dividend Declared.

The board of directors of the City National Bank announce that they have declared a semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent., payable on and after Tuesday, August 2d.

THEY WILL BID FOR COUNTY TROLLEY.

Bids to be Opened at Elizabeth Next Week.

LIKELY TIME EXPECTED.

THE OFFERS MUST COVER THE ESTIMATED COST $300,000.

If Not, the Valuable Franchise Will Not be Given Out and the Whole Scheme May Fall Through—Westfield and Elizabeth Company Withdraws Application—Cranford People Object.

Bids for the trolley franchise over Westfield avenue, from Elizabeth to this city will be opened by the Union County Board of Freeholders at Elizabeth next week.

The Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, which is the pioneer in seeking the right to construct such a trolley line by the route passing through Cranford, has withdrawn its application for right of way through that town, in order to change the route. Cranford is ready to grant this company a franchise, but is opposed to the Bergen plan, which contemplates the widening of North avenue and Westfield avenue the entire distance of twelve miles at an estimated cost of $300,000.

The bids will be received at 2:30 o'clock at the Court House in Elizabeth, Aug. 4th. John Kean, as a starter, offered $100,000 last fall for the franchise, and it is expected a lively competition will be witnessed in the bidding.

The estimated cost is $300,000, and if that amount is not offered it is not thought that the franchise will be given out.

CUPID WINS EVANGELIST

APPROPRIATELY, THE MARRIAGE TOOK PLACE IN A PARSONAGE.

Miss Nancy Jordon and Willis Franklin Matthews, a Colored Evangelist, United in Marriage—Many Present.

There was a gathering of friends, many congratulations and a delightful time generally Tuesday in honor of the marriage of Miss Nancy Jordon and Willis Franklin Matthews, the colored evangelist, which took place at 214 West Seventh street.

The bride was an estimable young colored woman, who has served in the employ of Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, at the Congregational church parsonage, where the ceremony took place.

The maid of honor was Miss Mary Lenner, the bridesmaids were Miss Lelia Bolden and Miss Harey Jackson. The best man was William Burden, and the usher was Edward Wilson.

The bride was very becomingly attired in white organdie over silk, with silk trimmings and a gracefully arranged veil. Her bouquet was of red and white roses. The maid of honor wore pink silk and carried sweet peas. The bridesmaids wore white gowns with silk linings and pink ribbons, and carried white and pink roses.

After the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the guests to the number of thirty or more, were hospitably entertained by the bride and a delightful evening was spent.

A New Mayor.

It is now Mayor VanHerwerden. He, as chairman of the finance committee, acts in that capacity when the Mayor and president of the Council are away. Such is the case now, and the duties of the office are left to Mr. VanHerwerden to perform.

Exhibition of Home Industries.

The entertainment for tonight in the A. M. E. Mt. Zion church on West Fourth street bids fair to be a good one. It will consist of an exhibition of home industries, and will be under the auspices of the Helping Hand Society.

LANDED ON PORTO RICO.

Report of Capt. Higginson Concerning the Action.

COMMENDS AMERICANS.

TROOPS LANDED ON THE ISLAND WITHOUT TROUBLE.

Sailors Cleared Away a Small Body of Spanish Troops and Then All Was Easy—Boats Of Massachusetts Assisted.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, July 27, 12:49 p. m.—The following despatch was received at the War Department this morning from Captain Higginson of the battleship Massachusetts at St. Thomas:

"Arrived here with Gen. Miles and the troops today at 9:15 o'clock. Landed them safely.

"There were no batteries outside of the harbor. The Gloucester then entered the harbor and landed a company of sailors under Lieutenants Huse and Woods, who dispersed a small company of Spaniards.

"They hoisted the American flag. I wish to commend Wainwright and his officers for their gallantry in capturing Guanica.

"The transports discharged the men on board without opposition. They were assisted in landing them by the boats from the Massachusetts.

"Have telegraphed Sampson.

SPAIN'S KING ILL.

He is Suffering from Measles—Fact Has Been Suppressed, Fearing Trouble.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

London, July 27, 10:20 a. m.—A despatch from Madrid says the little Spanish king, Alphonzo, is suffering from a slight attack of measles. The news has been suppressed in Spain, it being feared it might cause trouble at the Spanish capital.

The physicians in attendance are worried because of the fact that the king is naturally delicate and they fear that the present disease may be supplanted by something more serious.

SHIPS AT HAWAII.

Are Now Coaling Preparatory to Going to San Juan to Bombard.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Cape Haytien, Hayti, July 27, 10:55 a. m.—A part of the American fleet that is to bombard San Juan has arrived here en route to its destination.

The monitors Puritan and Amphitrite, the cruiser Montgomery and the collier Southery are taking on coal but expect to reach the rest of the fleet off San Juan Friday.

ONE WHEELMAN OBEYED

THE OTHERS FAILED TO APPEAR BEFORE THE CITY JUDGE.

It Was the Opening of the Campaign Against Riders Without Lights—Six Were Ordered to Appear—Two Were Women.

The police started in on their campaign against wheelmen Tuesday night, and captured five or six during the evening. The night was a poor one for the work, as there were few riders out, and these were nearly all law abiding citizens who carried their lamps properly lighted or else left the streets before 8:21 o'clock after which lamps had to be lighted.

Of the half-dozen caught without lights, two were women, and none of the six, with one exception, appeared at court yesterday in accordance with the officer's request. John Oistrum, who did appear, was allowed to go with a suspension of sentence, as it was very evident that his light had just gone out when he was stopped.

Warrants will be issued for the arrest of the others and they will be haled before the City Judge at once and probably fined as heavily as the law allows.

TEMPERANCE FOLK HERE

GATHERED FROM ALL OVER THE STATE IN QUARTERLY SESSION.

Most Worthy Patriarch Rev. A. G. Lawson, from Camden, Speaks—Hall Trimmed with American and British flags.

The quarterly session of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance, of New Jersey was held yesterday in Red Men's Hall, in the Elkwood Building. They were the guests of Howell Division at dinner.

The session was called to order at 10:30 o'clock by Grand Worthy Patriarch Bodine, of Camden, who presided and read his quarterly report. The report showed that the order stood in about the same condition as it did in April, without much increase in membership.

At 11 o'clock Most Worthy Patriarch Rev. A. G. Lawson, of Camden, was introduced by Past Grand Worthy Patriarch E. K. Drake, of Elizabeth, and Right Grand Scribe Henry B. Howell, of Trenton, for whom Howell Division, of this city, was named. This was Rev. Mr. Lawson's first official visit, and he made a short address.

Right Grand Scribe Henry B. Howell read a letter from President McKinley's private secretary acknowledging the receipt of patriotic resolutions passed by the session at their April meeting.

Grand Scribe VanAken, of New Brunswick and Grand Treasurer Hoagland, of New Brunswick, read satisfactory reports. There are about 60 delegates present from New Brunswick, Dunellen, Newark, Elizabeth, Roselle, Camden and Trenton. At 12:45 they sat down to dinner provided by the ladies of Howell Division. The hall is prettily decorated with British and American flags.

DOEN'T KNOW HIM.

Haverly Says Douglass is Not His Advance Agent—Suggests Fraud.

A young man calling himself George Douglass arrived in this city Monday announcing himself to be the advance agent for J. H. Haverly's Minstrels, who are to appear at Music Hall, August 4. Maze Edwards, manager of Music Hall, has now received a telegram from Haverly, stating that Douglass had sent him a dispatch asking for money, but that he has no acquaintance with any such person. He adds that Douglass is undoubtedly a fraud, and one who should be looked out for, and suggest that Mr. Edwards have the police investigate the case. Mr. Haverly's own agent, he says, will arrive tomorrow.

A Fatal Fire.

Charles Conover, of Elmwood place, received word Tuesday telling him of the death of his uncle, Peter Hoffman, of High Bridge. Mr. Hoffman suffered from the recent disastrous fire at that place and owing to exposure and hard work, was taken ill and his advanced age would not permit of his recovery. The funeral services will be held today.

To Become a City's Charge.

Mrs. Kelly, of West Fourth street, an aged and poor woman, who has been helped by the local G. A. R. Post and Woman's Relief Corps, will, very soon, be transferred to the City Industrial Home, where she can be more comfortable. Her present residence is not pleasant nor suitable.

A Sensible Move.

The trees along the line of the Brunswick Traction Company on the property of G. W. Metlar, near New Brunswick, have been cut down. John G. Wilson, a conductor of the company, was killed by coming in contact with one of the trees about six weeks ago.

WAS ON THE VERGE OF THE CONFLICT.

Charles Dencklau Returns from Port Antonio, Jamaica.

HAS MANY CURIOS WITH HIM

MADE FRIENDS WITH NEWSPAPER MEN AT THE FRONT.

Port Antonio was the Headquarters for the Correspondents—They Gave Dencklau Trophies from the Battlefield—He was In Charge of a Gang of Plumbers—His Experiences There

Charles Dencklau, of Boston, has just returned from Port Antonio, off the island of Jamaica, and is visiting his mother, Mrs. Charles Dencklau, of 323 East Second street. Having been directly in the midst of the Spanish-American conflict, he has witnessed all the horrors of war without having been engaged in it, and returned with a number of curious things from the West Indies, among the most interesting being implements of Spanish warfare taken from the scenes of several battles.

Mr. Dencklau is a plumber by trade, and last January was sent in charge of a number of men to Port Antonio, which is a little island belonging to Great Britain, near Jamaica. The men were engaged in putting the plumbing in a large hotel on the island, owned by the Boston Fruit Company, and intended for a winter resort.

Cable communications were established at this hotel with all the world, and during some of the engagements the hotel was a stopping place for the various newspaper men reporting the progress of the war for the New York papers.

The Journal despatch boat, the "Three Friends," ran into Port Antonio every three hours for awhile and soon Mr. Dencklau was well acquainted with the Journal men who were braving the thickest of the fight in their determination to get the news. Being so close to the scenes of battles, these newspaper men had begun collecting arms, cartridges and other relics, some of which they gave to their friends. Mr. Dencklau received part of a shell from a machine shop in Baracoa, which was destroyed by the American troops, also a rusty sword taken from the deck of the Infanta Maria Theresa, a Mauser cartridge taken from the belt of a wounded Spanish soldier at Guantanamo Bay and a Mauser rifle barrel and lock taken from the deck of the Infanta Maria Theresa.

Both sword and gun are rusty and blackened, and look as if they had been in fire. The gun stock is gone, probably burnt away.

Besides these things Mr. Dencklau brought home other curious articles from the islands, none of which, however, are of so much interest to his friends as the Spanish arms. Mrs. Dencklau spent the last three months with her husband, and they both expect to return this winter.

EUCHRE AT THE HUNTERSTON.

A Successful Progressive Euchre Party Held There Saturday Evening.

A progressive euchre party took place Saturday evening at the Hotel Hunterston, which was very largely attended.

Mrs. William Farmer officiated in a very efficient manner during the evening.

The first prize for ladies was drawn by Mrs. Ogden; Mrs. Balsh, second, and Mrs. Meeker, third.

Clarence Smith won first prize for gentlemen; Mr. Broadbent, second, and W. Y. H. Smith came in also for the honors by being third.

A vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Gregory, Mrs. Farmer and Mrs. Balsh for arranging the party so successfully. Supper was provided in the dining room by Mr. Webb, where they all adjourned, thus terminating a very enjoyable evening.

The Young Women of the W. C. T. U. Take a Strong Stand.

Asbury Park, July 27—In the W. C. T. U. meeting in Ocean Grove yesterday, Mrs. Kate Raphael made a report and gave an idea of the compact into which the members of the Union have entered, binding themselves not under any circumstances to marry a man who is not a total abstainer and who has not given up smoking.

They also have pledged themselves to accept no invitations to go out walking with a man who smokes cigarettes, cigars or pipes, or who drinks anything stronger than soft drinks.

Charles Wittke, of Westfield, visited friends in town yesterday.

THE POPULAR LOAN.

The American Widow's Mite Plays a Very Important Part.

The widow's mite plays an important part in the placing of the popular loan. As in the Scriptural instance, it is a case of choice, not necessity. All over the country, and particularly among all women, the desire to do what the opportunity offers in the way of helping the country is overpowering. No matter how limited may be the means, the enthusiasm is the same. Those who have never before inclined towards investment are inspired to have their little share in the popular loan. The fact that the loan is so absolutely without risk has, of course, much to do with the favor in which it is held, but there is also considerable sentiment about it, and to women sentiment is even more appealing than security. Men are by no means lacking in the response to Uncle Sam's appeal for aid, but in every part of the land it has been a matter for comment how many women of all ages and conditions have come forward and shown their patriotism in this way.

Jots From All Sources.

Several clubs are shortly to be started in Berlin for women only.

On an average every woman carries forty to sixty miles of hair upon her head.

Out of the enormous number of women in Constantinople not more than 5,000 can read or write.

It is said that there is one medical lady practicing in the west end of London who earns something like £4,000 a year.

In nearly every street in Japanese cities is a public oven, where for a small fee housewives may have their dinners and suppers cooked for them.

In Shanghai, Burmah, women perform some of the severest forms of labor. They mix the mortar and carry it, as well as the bricks, to the topmost stories of buildings in course of construction.

In the Island of Java is a small state which is entirely controlled by women, with the single exception that the sovereign is a man. He is, however, entirely dependent on his state council of three women.

Japanese theaters have their boxes so arranged that the ladies can change their dresses, as it is not considered stylish for a lady to appear an entire evening in one dress and with the same ornaments.

A Pretty Waist.

Fine white organdy. Point de Paris, lace insertion and narrow white satin ribbon combined to make this waist one of the most charming seen this season.

To carry out the all white idea now so popular, the full waist is arranged over a pure white satin lining, which has a soft and rather subdued finish. The fronts are gathered at the waist and neck lines, where the fashionable pouched effect is given. The closing is in center front, lining and waist closing separately, and invisibly, which is easily done by placing the hooks and eyes just where the trimming comes together.

The seamless back is smooth fitting across the shoulders and drawn by gathers at the center of the waist line. The trimming is extended across the back to give the yoke effect. The neck is finished with a high standing collar, over which a wrinkled stock of the organdy is arranged, closing under gathered frills in the back, this style having again taken the place of the now passe bow of ribbon.

The two seamed sleeves which only have fulness at the top, are disposed over fitted linings, stylish double epaulettes standing out fashionably at the top.

Triple rows of the frilled ribbon form evenly spaced bands above the elbow to correspond to the waist trimming, and the wrists are finished to match the epaulettes and simulated yoke.

For separate waists of silk or fine woollen, as well as cotton fabrics, this model will be found excellent. It being simple in construction and suited to the applied decorations that abound in an almost endless variety of designs.

Tucking can be used in place of the ribbon here shown, if the tucks are made in groups in the material before the pattern is laid on.

To make this waist for a lady of medium size, 1 3-4 yards of material 44 inches wide will be required.

Care of Irons.

Fire irons that have to be laid by during the summer months should be protected from rust by being coated with a mixture of India rubber, dissolved to the consistency of cream in naphtha. This coating can easily be rubbed off the steel when needful.

OLDEST AMERICAN FORT.

Built as a Protection Against the French and Also Hostile Indians.

Standing, sentinel-like, where the Susquehanna splits itself into the north and south branches, is old Fort Augusta, the veteran fighting stronghold of the United States. Beside a wooden post it would look, in size, like a dog alongside of an elephant. It is now the property of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Gross of Sunbury, Pa., and is located in a field about 165 feet from the river bank, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It was built in 1756, after plans by Col. Gordon, as a protection against the French and hostile Indians, and was named after the mother of George III. In shape it closely resembles a bakeoven, and its interior is curious and interesting. A small mound of earth marks the spot, with an opening in the ground two and one-half feet wide. Twelve four-inch stone steps lead below. On descending the ground space inside is found to be 10 by 12 feet, and eight feet from the floor to the apex of the arched ceiling. The arch is brick, and commences in an offset purposely made in the wall five feet above the ground floor. The bricks are said to be of English manufacture.

Its location at the forks of the Susquehanna was a strong strategic advantage, as it held the chief passage by waterway from the north of the state. When completed it was regarded as one of the largest, strongest and most important of all the fortifications erected on the frontiers of the provinces. Its original armament consisted of at least twelve cannon and two swivels, and one of these cannon is still in existence in Sunbury. It is of English make, of about three and one-half inch bore, and weighs nearly 1,000 pounds.

Fort Augusta ranks next in importance to Valley Forge as a factor in the achievement of our liberties, and it is to be hoped that some day public spirit will see that steps are taken for its preservation, and a suitable tablet placed upon it to mark its exact assistance in the early career of this great country.

Italy's Towers.

Travelers all know how celebrated the bell towers of Italy are. Each important church is made more beautiful architecturally by the campanile, or bell tower, which can be seen for miles away, because the church is always built on the highest point of land.

Italy has church towers and civil towers, the first being the handsomest. They are always attached to a house of worship and in the earliest days were used as watch towers and for forts. In the sixth century bells were introduced in the towers to call the people to prayers. Civil towers arose in the eleventh century, when palaces, with battlemented towers, were built in great numbers. Nearly all the towers in Italy are square; some, however, have six or eight sides and a few are round. The oldest are undecorated and built of massive stone or brick, lighted by mere loopholes of windows. Gradually many changes were made and ornamentation, pillars and large windows were put in the towers.

The leaning tower of Pisa is well known. It was built in the twelfth century and is thirteen feet out of perpendicular. It is hollow, brick tube are built eight stories of open galleries, supported by slender columns. It is 179 feet high and at its summit is a room where Galileo experimented. There are also six bells, the largest of which weighs 12,000 pounds. One of them, which was tolled when criminals were led to execution, is ornamented with figures of the Virgin and the arms of the city.

The bell tower of Florence is perhaps more beautiful than that of Pisa. Giotto was the architect and no expense was spared. Figures by the greatest sculptors adorn the base and the upper three stories are ornamented with spiral shafts and carved moldings. Black and white marble was the material used and the architect of that time has only added to the beauty of the whole.

Golf Jewelry.

Golf has invaded the realm of jewelry. Some of the presents that would be most acceptable to men and women who play golf have designs of golf clubs upon them. Gold and silver clubs are used as stick-pins, miniature bundles of clubs crossed somewhat after the fashion of rifles on a soldier's cap as brooches, and a small putter clasp pin is just the thing for the white puff tie. Match safes, cigarette cases, gold cuff buttons, hat bands and loving cups, silver-backed brushes and silver-topped tobacco jars, all with golf designs upon them in relief, are coming more and more to be a part of the gentlemen's outfit. For the women there are dainty silver score-card frames, chain belts, purses, scent cups, silk bags with silver buckles ornamented with golfing paraphernalia. As prizes in local and inter-club matches these convenient articles are finding much favor.

Great Men, When Annoyed.

Prevents the Kettle Boiling Dry.

To prevent kettles from boiling dry a water tank is placed in the cover with a float extending into a tube in the kettle below and attached to a pivoted bar which lifts a plug in the cover to allow the water to flow into the kettle when the latter becomes dry.

WHAT A WAR MEANS.

What has actually been lost to the wealth of the world in the blood and ashes of the war since authentic history began is beyond all estimate. It has been computed that the loss of human life alone in that time from war amounts to fourteen thousand million souls—a number equivalent to the entire population of the globe for the last 330 years, says a writer in Leslie's Weekly. It should be noted, however, that the class of men who are drafted or accepted for military service are invariably the very class who, by reason of age, health and strength, are the most valuable to the world from the purely economic and material standpoint. They are the stalwart, intelligent, capable men. In this country economists have set the definite value of $5,000 upon the average man, considered as a wealth producer. Taking this figure as the general standard of the value of man, it can be seen what an incentive it is sufficient to show the absurdity of the supposition that either now or at any other time we may reap financial gain by the sickles of battle. The annual expenditure of the United States during the war of the revolution was $20,000,000, but even the totals here money was raised by public loans in the form of paper currency. The diminishing value of this slender security inevitably brought about the hoarding of gold. The consequent scarcity of real money, as a matter of course, was followed by suffering widespread and intense.

Our second war with England lasted only two years, but it cost us $72,000,000 to vindicate our cause, just and righteous as it was. And this did not include the losses to our merchant marine from English privateering, a loss beyond computation, even in those times of our comparative commercial poverty.

For the folly of the Mexican war we had to pay dearly in men and treasure, a loss for which our acquisition of territory by no means compensated. The list of more than 5,000 American citizens were a part of the price we paid for that display of power, and something more than $25,000,000 for military disbursements was another part.

The civil war with its figures of loss all around mount up to stupendous totals. The immediate financial losses were $4,500,000,000 to the north and $2,-300,000,000 to the south, with such after results as a national debt of $3,000,000,-000, crippled merchant marine, a ruined agricultural community, besides the losses occasioned in other parts of the world, including those consequent upon the cotton famine of Lancashire, and the loss of employment to more than 100,000 European laborers. Such, at least, are the views computed by Leroy-Beaulieu in his "Les Guerres Contemporains," causing him thus to close his chapter on our civil war: "Such is war. Its torture is so bombicidal that it slays thousands of victims even at a distance of thousands of miles from the battlefield."

No Free Press in Japan.

There is practically no such thing as freedom of the press in Japan. Whenever a newspaper publishes something unfriendly to the government it is suppressed and the editor is sent to prison. The real editor is never imprisoned, though. Every newspaper has what the Japanese call a "dummy editor," and his sole duty is to go to jail every time the paper is suppressed for offending the mikado. Then the real editor changes the name of the paper and keeps on publishing it. Dummy editors spend most of their time in prison.

Fire-Worshippers and Kerosene.

Knowledge of the existence of petroleum at Baku is so ancient that if we find there the ruins of a temple to Zoroaster. The worship of fire—so easy to obtain that it was only necessary to prod the soil with a stick and set fire to the vapor that issued out of it—was continued until so recent a time as twenty years ago, when several Parsee priests were in Baku for the purpose of worshiping that which we of this iconoclastic time buy in the corner groceries to fill our lamps.

Largest Crater in the World.

The largest crater in the world is that of Haleakala, in the Sandwich Islands. The circumference of the crater is about twenty miles, its depth in places being 2,000 feet. If the interior were cleared of its debris New York city could be placed on the black lava floor, and from three to five other big buildings put on top before their spires would protrude at the top.

Liberality of the Sultan.

The Sultan of Turkey is more than liberal to his daughters, as the recent marriage of Princess Naime reveals. In addition to about $90,000 a year the princess has a palace decorated in the most luxurious style, a retinue of servants, who are all paid by the father.

Cost of Bull-Fighting.

Spain's bull-fighters made money last year. Mazzantini in 66 fights killed 168 bulls and made 396,000 pesetas; Reverte's score was 71 fights, 160 bulls and 276,000 pesetas; while Guerrita, with 78 fights and 147 bulls slaughtered, earned 456,000 pesetas, or $91,200.

To Riddle a Pane of Glass.

A musket ball may be fired through a pane of glass, making a hole the size of the ball without cracking the glass, if the glass be suspended by a thread; it will make no difference and the thread will not even vibrate.

THE FOG DISPELLER.

AN INVENTION WHICH IT IS CLAIMED WILL DISPEL FOGS.

A Stream of Air is Forced Out of a Tube in Such a Way as to Leave a Hole Through the Fog—By the Use of It Pilots Can Pick Up Buoys in Foggy Weather.

The latest invention is a fog dispeller. The apparatus consists of a horizontal cast-iron pipe eight feet in length and eight inches in diameter. At the mouth of the tube is a wide flange; the rear end is covered with a thick disc of glass. About two feet from the rear end a pipe enters the tube from below, at an obtuse angle with the forward section.

This connection is made through a sort of turntable, which permits the outlook tube to be pointed in any direction desired, up or down, from one side to the other. The pipe below connects with a blower down in the vessel.

When the dispeller is in use, the blower sends a powerful stream of air up through the pipe into the tube, and the current hurtles into the fog, boring a hole through it, as it were.

The action of the suspended moisture is twofold. The fog is pulled back in every direction, and the high pressure of the blast produces a cooling influence, the moisture in suspension condenses and falls in rain. A great cone of clear atmosphere, with its apex at the mouth of the tube, results.

The eye of the pilot is at the glass at the rear of the tube, and he gazes into the bowels of the fog. With its aid a pilot can readily pick up his buoys in a fog, and keep an eye out for vessels ahead.

With a powerful blower, the inventor hopes to make the fog-dispeller useful at 1,000 feet.

No claims is made that the dispeller would be practical except when the vessel is going at a slow rate of speed, which is customary when there is foggy weather.

How a Peasant Washed the Tiger.

A story is told, in La France du Nord, about a Cossack, ignorant of the French language and equally ignorant of fear, who was hired, at Moscow, by the lion-tamer, Pezon, to clean the cages of his wild beasts, says Emily Mayer Higgins, in Lippincott's Magazine. Their understanding, or misunderstanding, was arranged by means of gestures and dumb show, as that unfortunate Tower of Babel hindered intelligible speech, and Pezon thought that the man thoroughly understood what he had to do. The next morning the Tartar began his new duties by entering, with bucket, sponge and broom, not the cage of a tame beast, as his master had done, but of a splendid, untamed tiger. The fierce animal fixed his eyes upon the man, who calmly proceeded to wet his large sponge, and to approach the tiger.

At this moment Pezon appeared upon the scene, and was struck with horror. Any sound or motion upon his part would intensify the danger by arousing the beast to fury; so he quietly waited till the need should arise to rush to the man's assistance.

The moujik, sponge in hand, approached the animal, and, perfectly fearless, proceeded to rub him down, as if he had been a horse or dog; while the tiger, apparently delighted by the application of cold water, rolled over on his back, stretched out its paws, and, purring, offered every part of his body to the Cossack, who washed him as complacently as a mother bathes her infant. Then he left the cage, and would have repeated the hazardous experiment upon another savage from the desert had not Pezon drawn him off, with difficulty.

The Hudson's Smokestack.

This is how the smokestack of the Hudson looked when that battered gunboat returned to Key West after the fight at Cardenas. This was the engagement during which the Wilmington was crippled and Ensign Bagley killed. During its progress Lieut. Scott, who was directing the fire from the Hudson, sat calmly smoking a cigarette while superintending the manipulation of the guns.

THE RIDDLED SMOKESTACK.

A Typographical Error.

Through the addition of a single letter to a word by a typographical error a Missouri paper was led to make the following grave announcement the other day: "Sedalia's mayor, having plenty of time on his hands, has decided to begin a war against immortality."

A Military Swimming School.

The German army has a swimming school for troops, where every one must learn to swim. The best swimmers are able to cross a stream of several hundred yards' width, even when carrying their clothing, rifle and ammunition.

WAY OF WASHING THE HAIR.

Doing It Too Frequently a Mistake Not Easily Remedied.

It is an great a mistake to wash the hair too frequently as to wash it too seldom. In the former case, the constant use of water is apt to wash away the natural oil of the skin, without which the hair not only loses its glossy look of health, but is apt to turn prematurely gray and grow thin and scanty. In the latter case the mouths of the oil vessels at the roots of the hair become clogged, dandruff forms, and the growth of the hair is impeded, and the hairs themselves become matted and dusty-looking.

To keep the hair in perfect health it should be washed at regular stated intervals. If you are strong and well, and free from a cold of any kind, once in the head or from influenza, as serious trouble may be the result. And in winter time it is best to have the hair shampooed at home, instead of going to the hairdresser's, and it should also always be done in a room with a fire. It is a bad plan to wash the hair just before going to bed, as the hair has not time to dry properly, and is apt to remain damp till morning, which is very injurious to its growth. The best times to wash the hair are the morning, the afternoon, or between 6 and 7 p. m.

In the latter case the hair will have plenty of time to dry before you have to go to bed. In the former case, if you have it washed in the daytime, be careful not to go out of doors till it is quite dry, or you will run a very great risk of taking cold.

Getting Rid of Ants.

In ridding the house of ants, the first step, if possible, is to locate the nest by following the workers back to their point of entrance and there destroying the colony. This may be done if the nest is in the wall by injecting bisulphide of carbon or a little kerosene. If the species has its colonies under the flagging in the yard, the nests may be drenched with boiling water, or treated with kerosene and thus easily destroyed; but if it is the kind that builds a system of underground galleries, bisulphide of carbon must then be poured into each of a number of holes made in the nest with a stick, and the holes then closed by stamping on the foot. In this case the bisulphide will penetrate the tunnels underground and kill the ants in enormous quantities. If it is impossible to locate the nests, there is no resource but to destroy the ants wherever found in the house. The best plan for this, according to the testimony of Government experts, is to attract the ants to small bits of sponge moistened with sweetened water and placed in the situations where they are most numerous. The sponges may be dipped out several times daily and scalded. It is also reported that a syrup made by dissolving borax and sugar in boiling water will effect their destruction.

Household Hints.

Milk which is turned or changed may be sweetened and rendered fit for use again by stirring in a little soda.

A tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with white clothes will aid in the whitening process.

Ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth, also from the hands.

Fresh meat, after beginning to sour, will sweeten if placed out of doors in the cool of night.

Salt will curdle new milk; hence in preparing milk porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is nearly prepared.

To soften hard water for toilet purposes take of orange-flower water half a pint, of best spirits of wine a pint and of soap three-quarters of a pound. Shave the soap into the orange water, heat over a fire until the soap dissolves, and then, the vessel being removed from the fire, add the spirits of wine. A large tablespoonful of this preparation added to a basin of washing water will render it soft as rain water will do.

A Perfect Food.

Milk is a perfect food, but in no sense a beverage, and should never be used as such. For the invalid it supplies all that is necessary for sustenance, and in this respect differs from beef tea, which does not nourish, but only stimulates (although many people still foster the delusion that it affords both nutriment and strength). A very little milk, if it agrees with the individual, is of more real value than a large quantity of beef tea. Again, cocoa and chocolate, made with milk, form a rich, heavy food, but certainly not a drink.

HOW FELT HATS ARE MADE.

Thousands of Men, Women and Boys Employed in the Industry.

One of the leading industries of this country is the manufacture of hats. At the present time fur-felt hats are made in eleven states—namely, Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Maine, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, says the New York Commercial. In all there are more than 200 manufacturing plants producing hats for men's, boys', women's and children's wear, composed of the fur of the rabbit, beaver, nutria and other animals. The industry employs upward of 25,000 men, women and boys, and the approximate value of the output is said to be $20,000,000 annually. Speaking of men's hats and their manufacture, a representative of one of the largest firms in this city said:

"Felt hats include the popular derby and the various other styles of soft hats, all of which are made from animal coats, the natural coats of the coney, hare, nutria, muskrat and beaver. To manipulate the skins of these animals so as to properly prepare the fur for felting purposes is an expert chemical operation; in fact, a trade in itself. The proportioning of the different furs requires the utmost exactness. The quality of product having been decided upon, the fur is then cleaned and separated from stray hairs and all unfeltable substances. This initial process is accomplished by a wicked looking machine called a 'devil.'

"The next process, 'forming,' consists of distributing by means of air currents a light coating of fur upon the outer surface of a revolving perpendicular cone, perforated with small holes. When fur covers the cone sufficient for one hat, it is wrapped in wet cloths and given a brief hot bath, then stripped from the cone, and, after the 'stopping' process of adding a little fur to weak spots, is wrapped with other cloths inside a woolen cloth to 'harden' it for handling. By a process called 'bigging,' which consists of repeated immersions in hot water, together with rolling and unrolling, folding and unfolding, the cone-shaped mass is reduced to one-third its original size. It is wonderful how each fiber will twist and interweave in basket-fashion, with the other, until the product is a closely woven mass.

"The 'body' is then 'shaved' to remove stray hairs in the fur, and then it is stiffened with a coating of shellac, thoroughly dried and then subjected to steam, which softens the shellac and draws it into the fabric. When dried it is immersed in a hot alkaline solution to free the surface from shellac, and then in cold water to remove the alkali.

"'Blocking' succeeds stiffening. The fabric is dipped in boiling water and placed on a block and pressed for the final shape of the hat. After the dyeing process comes that of finishing, which consists of steaming, blocking to shape the crown, drying, coating with a stiffening solution, drying again, ironing out wrinkles, after which it is pounced and rotated on a machine to remove the long nap, and oil applied to smooth the surface. The 'curling' department cuts the brim to the desired width, rolls up the sides and pitches the front and rear as the style demands. The last process is that of trimming, consisting of sewing on the binding and band and cementing the lining, the derby is finished. If a soft hat is desired the stiffening process is omitted."

A Horse That Snores.

Snoring men are as plentiful as whiskey in Kentucky; they are nearly as numerous as women with cold feet. However, while these two evils are predominant with the human race, yet it is indeed seldom that a member of the animal kingdom becomes afflicted with the snoring habit. There is just one case of the kind known to exist, in Kansas City, Kan., and while there is no question about the existence of this one case the afflicted animal contracted the habit from man.

Prince, the oldest horse on the Kansas City, Kan., Fire Department, has the snoring habit, and he's got it bad. All of the "liddies" at Fire Headquarters have good records as snorers, but Prince can allow them all a bad cold and then beat them out, pulled up. Snoring Prince, or the prince snorer, is the horse driven by Assistant Chief William McConnell. He generally rinces away at his food until after 12 o'clock each night, providing there are no alarms.

At about this hour he lies down in his stall and in a few minutes his eyes close and soon thereafter the snoring begins. The noise made by the sleeping horse is similar to that of a snoring man. Before it became known that Prince actually snored several of the firemen, who take turn about watching at night, were accused of going to sleep on duty. The only foundation for the accusation was the snoring. In order to prove their innocence it became necessary for them to peach on Prince.

How Ibsen Looks.

Ibsen, the Norwegian dramatist, is an extraordinary looking man. Almost a dwarf in height, the upper part of the body is immense, compared with his lower limbs. He has a huge head, covered with bushy white hair, and his keen blue eyes glare at his interlocutor with a piercing glance.

It is impossible to run at an altitude of 17,000 feet above the sea.

THE SHORT LIFE OF A GUN.

Number of Times it May be Fired and the Enormous Cost of It.

"The life of a gun is one of the most unsatisfactory things about it," remarked an ordnance officer in discussing the war question with a Washington Star reporter, "and though a number of experiments have been made in connection therewith, there is no absolute certainty as to results. A general rule has been arrived at which is thought to be on the safe side of the matter, and that is that the modern steel gun should not be fired more than 100 times. After that, it matters not what the emergency may be, it is safer to dismantle the gun and send it back to the shop than to risk firing it, for the explosion of a gun is a decidedly and extensively dangerous occurrence to all in the immediate locality. The firing of a gun causes the steel to crystalize and thereby become as brittle as a file. So far as has yet been discovered, there is no remedy for it. It is not exactly a total loss after the gun has become dead, for the steel can be used for thousands of things in the way of bolts, braces and the like for new work and for repairs. As is generally known, a modern gun is an expensive affair, running from $75,000 up. It is equally expensive to keep it in operation, the cost for each cartridge sent from it being over $1,000, which does not include the putting of the gun on its emplacement or taking it down, nor the thousands of dollars necessarily expended in paying salaries and subsistence of the officers and men who operate it. This crystalization of the metal is one of the mysteries of the science of ordnance. The gun could be rectified to some extent by heating it to a white heat and allowing it to cool off slowly, but the treatment is not exactly satisfactory or even approximately certain as to results. It has been said of us, as of other nations, that the failure of a gun is own to actual firing operation for even twenty-four hours the powder and shell bill would bankrupt us, and there is some truth in it. This crystalization of the metal is not confined to guns, however. The same thing occurs in the journals or axles used on the railroad cars. It is for that reason that careful railroads put on new axles every five or six years. In Europe there are laws upon the subject, thought it is curious that in Germany it is usual to use an axle on passenger cars more than four years, though the limitation on freight cars is not so rigid. As with the oft-fired gun, the steel in the journal becomes so brittle that crystallization in consequence of its use that it is liable to snap into a dozen pieces any time after its life is ended."

Oldest Observatory.

The oldest observatory in the world is in China. Centuries and centuries before Europeans constructed astronomical instruments the Chinese had this observatory had metal instruments of the highest value, and they were known to be hundreds of years old in 1279.

The instruments in the Chinese observatory are marvelous works of art and their beauty and boldness of design could not be duplicated today. The observatory itself stands higher than the city wall, and is square in shape, the beautiful astronomical instruments standing on platforms with no shelter, true to the Chinese idea of doing things by contraries. Entrance to the observatory from the front gate leads to a hall of rare proportions. Then comes a yard surrounded on three sides by one-storied buildings and shaded by ancient trees. Here are two massive and valuable bronze instruments, exposed for centuries, but without a flaw or sign of wear.

In the Chinese observatory is a huge celestial globe, seven feet six inches in diameter, having the planets and principal constellations shown by raised stars in yellow bronze and fixed in their proper places on the chocolate-brown body of the globe. There are eight instruments in all in the observatory, each worthy of special study.

Effect of Music on Hair.

An English statistician has recently been engaged in an original task, that of studying the influence of music on the hair. The investigator establishes, in the first place, that the proportion of bald persons is 11 per cent. for the liberal professions and in general, with the exception of physicians, who appear to hold the record for baldness, which is 30 per cent. Musical composers do not form an exception to the rule and baldness is as frequent among them as in the other professions. The correct-sized comb, if used in a brisk and with surprising surety and rapidity; but the trombone is the depilatory instrument par excellence. It will clear the hair from one's head in five years. This is what the author calls "baldness of the fanfares," which rages with special violence among regimental bands.

CASTLES OF SPAIN.

THEY HAVE BEEN RUTHLESSLY APPROPRIATED BY THE CHURCH.

She Has No Such Historic Family Residences as are in England, or as Can be Seen Along the German Banks of the Rhine.

As very few Americans will travel in Spain this summer it is possible that one great benefit the country will derive from the present war is that the average American will read more about Spain than ever he cared to know before. And some of these interesting things which we may have to learn in case it is necessary to proceed for a war indemnity, will be all about the famous castles of Spain.

We have all heard some time or other about the castles of Spain, not those fortified strongholds which belong to the Moors, but castles which the poets have raised in song and story. Even our own Longfellow has made them the subject of his charming rhapsody:

How much of my young heart O Spain
Went out to thee in days of yore!
What dreams romantic filled my brain
And summoned back to life again
The Paladins of Charlemagne
The Cid Campeador!

But softer Andalusian skies
Dispelled the darkness and the gloom
There Cadiz by the seaside lies
And Seville's orange orchards rise
Making the land a paradise
Of beauty and of bloom.

And there the Alhambra still recalls
Aladdins palace of delight;
Allah Il Allah through its halls
Whispers the fountain as it falls
The nightingale beneath the walls
The hills with snow are white.

Castles of Spain not built of stone
But of white summer clouds and blown
Into this little mist of rhyme.

Such palaces of luxury every mind at some time or other has built in imagination beside bright lakes and pleasant places—

A fantastic Alhambra-like villa
With terrace and fountain and lawn;
A balcony where one's Manilla
May be smoked when the dinner cloth's drawn.

Light wines on one's table to sparkle—
New books every day by the train
Which we'll read under trees patriarchal
That are grouped round our castle in Spain.

"I am the owner of great estates," wrote the late George W. Curtis, expressing in prose the same pardonable admiration of these castles "not built of stone"—"Many of them lie in the West, but the greater part are in Spain. It is a country famously romantic, and my castles are all of perfect proportions and appropriately set in the most picturesque situations." Spanish castles, with few exceptions, are the cruel jokes of the poets and of fiction writers.

The truth is that while Spain has some real castles, she has no such historic family residences as are in England, or as can be seen along the German banks of the Rhine. Spain's castles have been appropriated by the church, with about the same ruthless disregard as the Abbeys were after the confiscations in England by Henry VIII converted into palatial dwellings by the British nobility. The most majestic of these genuine castles is the Chateau De Billegorde where according to Froissart's Chronicles the Counts of Foix used to live in great splendor, getting up at noon and supping at midnight. When the Count left his chamber to go to table before him were borne through its gloomy halls twelve lighted torches by twelve attendants, each attendant holding his lighted torch with the Count's coat of arms, and squires sitting admiringly around. It is situated on the edge of a steep ravine surrounded by a triple wall, and approached by a narrow driveway. It used to be a place of immense strength but is now a monastery for the monks of Navarre.

The Giralde has also been converted into a cathedral, the tower of which provided the architectural model of Madison Square Garden tower, of New York. It ranks with Giotto's famous campanile in Florence, and is the most perfect example of a true tower of Islam in Europe.

It rises in square form to a height of 250 feet and was built in 1196, but was renovated by the Christians and crowned with a graceful figure called "La Fe" (The Faith), which looks with the wind and which looks over the fertile valley of the Guadalquiver, and over scenes made famous by the memories of Pedro the Cruel.

The next is the famous castle of Burgos. It was in the castle of Burgos that the Cid Campeador, whose exploits in peace and war make up so much of the legendary history of Spain. It is now the Puerta di Santa Maria, or Church of St. Mary. From the center of a quadrangular court thanked on each side with stately minarets there rise two immense spires which eloquently tell that this once powerful stronghold has ceased to be of military importance, though it still continues to be an object of deep veneration to the Spaniards. The strong works of a formidable fortress, of which trenches and the ruined and blackened walls remain intact, tell that the home of the Cid and of Don Sancho was no ordinary place. It is stated as a miraculous instance of divine interposition, that when the castle of Burgos was blown up by the French, on the occasion of the evacuation of Spain, these spires, with their seemingly fragile towers remained uninjured to greet the eyes of the superstitious Spaniards in all integrity as the shock passed by, while two hundred Frenchmen were buried under the ruins. As a combination of castle and of Cathedral it is one of the most . markable structures in the world; and it shows more completely than would a volume of writing, how thoroughly the Church has reared its influence upon the ruins of the once proud Empire of Philip II and of Charles V. There are other great castles like the Puerta del Sol at Toledo, the Alhambra and the Castle of Simancas, in which latter was preserved for centuries the archives of Castile. The palatial residence which the Duke de Montpensier's grand and soaring wonder of utilitarian architecture, with something of a fancy that it was never made, and that it has stood there since the morning of the world. It has the lightness and the strength, the absence of ornament, and essential beauty, the vastness and the perfection of a world of nature. As family still retain, also overlooks the slopes of the city of Seville, in which place was born the bull fight. Then there is the castle of La Gramps, situated in a wrinkle of the Gandarrama Mountains, which Philip V erected upon a crag as a hunting box in his exile in France to the Spanish throne. This is literally the castle in the air and is more inaccessible than even the Chateau de Bellegorde. It has been the Spanish eminence house of all the Bourbon Kings. When the sun is calcining the plains of Castile, and the streets of Madrid are white with a hot light of midsummer this castle in the clouds is as cool and shadowy as a northwestern breeze after passing over a valley of drifted snow. Viewed from the little pyramidal Belvedere it lies below, the castle high above looks like a gull's nest on the edge of a soaring cliff. "You raise your eyes," writes Ambassador John Hay in his "Castilian Days," "from the market place, with its striking, swarthy crowd to the tradition has eaten into the very life of Spain, and tainted the judgment of its people, the peasantry of the hamlet would hoot anyone who attributed any mortal paternity to this castle in the air or the aqueduct by which it is approached. Yet both belong to the gigantic works of the Emperor Trajan. The people call the aqueduct the Devil's bridge and the castle itself the "Devil's Nest," and from it has arisen the saying, "Build castles in the air," which is only another form of the folly ascribed to those who look for "Castles in Spain."

Spain had castles, but she now has churches. Hence the bon mot.

In A Sulphur Mine.

"There are but few who admire the collection of beautiful sulphur crystals in the National Museum," remarked the gentleman who collected them from the famed sulphur mines in Sicily. "You have a fine collection in the same except their beauty. I don't think," he said, "there is another spot on earth where such abominable treatment, such fiendish cruelty, is inflicted on the laborer as in the sulphur mines of Sicily. They are paid barely enough to get a miserable existence with a scant supply of the coarsest, cheapest food, and a good portion of the time they are in a state of chronic starvation. The work is of the hardest and most exhausting character. Very few of the miners die of suffering or starving, and the sulphur ore (sulphur and limestone combined) is brought up from the depths below on the backs of men and boys. Long, sloping, narrow tunnels lead from the surface down to the sulphur beds 300 to 600 feet or more below. Miners dig the stuff out and it is carried up in stout sacks or flat baskets. Many of the laborers, especially the boys, work naked. On their backs they wear a piece of matting, or something of the sort, held by a string around the neck. This is to protect the flesh from being torn from their bones by the jaggid corners of the ore they carry. No one can imagine a more heartrending sight than to see the wretched creatures toiling up the long, steep slopes in the mine with their enormous loads. Every step they take wrings a groan from their tortured frames. Most pitiful to me was the sight of the poor, bent, broken and emaciated old men, mere battered wrecks; and the young lads of 10 and 13 years, who have just begun this life of cruel toil.

The Emperor of Japan.

Mutsu Hito, Emperor of Japan, came to the throne when he was a boy under sixteen. He was the first Mikado to appear in person at a State Council, and presented himself in national costume before the nobles and daimios to take the oath to become actual ruler of his people, said to be learning and art in his empire. He wore his hair brushed up on the top and hidden in a head-dress fastened with bands, with two black top-knots protruding outwards from it; white and red garments, long enough to trail on the floor, completed the dress. After the ceremoney he journeyed from Kioto to Tokio, the new capital, in a gold-lacquered norimon, or closed litter, borne by relays of coolies on their uplifted palms—a method of travelling reserved exclusively for Royalty, as ordinary people had to be carried in litters on the shoulders of the bearers.

Problems of Law.

"He sent me a million pesos," asserted the plaintiff in the branch of promise case.

"Did you count them?" asked the counsel for the defendant.

"Count them!" exclaimed the plaintiff. "Of course not."

"Your lordship," cried the counsel for the defendant, earnestly, "I object to the admission of this testimony as being indefinite and unreliable. In these days of automatic counting machines it is preposterous for any girl to come into a court of law—"

But it is needless to say. The humiliation of the thoughtless girl who had failed to keep pace with the times was, of course, complete.

A GAME FOR LIFE.

It was night in the camp of Maximilian's army, and sounds of merriment were heard upon all sides.

In a tent in the inner circle of the camp sat two officers at a rude table, upon which was marked with lead pencil a draughtboard, while black and white buttons served for the "men."

They were prisoners—soldiers in the service of Juarez, captured the day before—but their appearance indicated that they were not Mexicans.

Capoul Monteith, the light haired officer, was a young man of wealth and good family.

Garnet Weston, the brown haired, was a young lawyer of good though poor parentage. He was fast winning a name when he crossed the path of Mabel Monteith, the sister of Capoul.

One day a pretended friend told him that Mabel was his promised wife, but that their engagement had not yet been made public.

Three months later found him a cavalry captain in the army of Benito Juarez, where in a few weeks he was surprised to be joined by Capoul Monteith, who had also offered his services to the Mexican president.

Suddenly a heavy tread resounded without the tent, the sentinel challenged, there was a response, and three of Maximilian's officers entered, one of whom was an American, another a Frenchman, and a third a Mexican.

"Gentlemen," said the American, "I am sorry to disturb you, but news has come to-night that Benito Juarez has executed a captain of our army, and I have orders to select one of you, and march you forth to die in retaliation."

"You cannot, shall not, do it, as one must die for an offence against Maximilian by Juarez?" said Capoul and Monteith, rising.

"Such are my orders, but I know not which of you to select."

"Then we will decide by a game for the chance, the loser to die," suggested the young Frenchman.

The two friends sat down. Ten minutes passed, twenty, and the game was won by Capoul.

The second game, too, was won by him.

"Great heaven! Garnet! old fellow, I feel for you from my heart!" cried the winner, the tears starting to his eyes.

Garnet pressed his friend's hand as he said quietly,—

"I was ever a poor, unlucky dog, Capoul; but, my friend, when I am dead, look in my saddle roll, hanging there, and the papers you find please deliver to the proper address, and—and—Carlie—my love—kiss Miss Mabel I left a farewell for her. Gentlemen, I am ready."

An hour passed, and the American officer stood before him.

"Well?" said Capoul.

"I die bravely."

"Heaven have mercy upon him!" groaned the sorrowing friend.

"Yes, Captain Monteith, he is dead, and, though I have seen many men die, I never saw one face death with such perfect calmness and inference as did your friend. He gave the order to the platoon to fire and fell instantly, but ere he died he wrote this note to you."

In Garnet's bold hand was written:—

"I could have won those two games, but I gave my life away to save you, for Mabel told me too clearly ever to let her brother die where I could be sacrificed instead. I dare tell you this now, for I stand on the brink of my open grave. Farewell!"

Three years passed, and one pleasant evening a horseman was riding slowly along a highway traversing a fertile English valley.

Three years had added more dignity to the face and perhaps saddened it, but still the stalwart figure and pleasant features.

Upon his right hand, setting back from the road, was a pretty farmhouse, surrounded by fertile fields, and, the night promising well for a night's "lodging for man and beast," Capoul turned in at the white gateway, rode up to the front door and dismounted.

The owner of the house descended he steps to greet him, and Capoul Monteith stood face to face with Garnet Weston!

"Great heaven, has the grave given up its dead?" cried Capoul in dismay.

"No, old fellow! You find me flesh and blood, ready and willing to give you a hearty welcome to this my home, left me by and old bachelor uncle in whose name I reside. But come in. I will tell you all.

Around a well spread table that evening he heard how Garnet had been carried forth to be most bunglingly executed, how a squadron of Juarez's cavalry had appeared and frightened off his executioners, how the latter soon had retired and how a watchful anchero had seized him and borne him to his ranch, where, after months of suffering, he recovered.

"But, old fellow, why did you not write to me?" asked Capoul.

"I did write to my old law partner, and he said you had moved away, none knew whither."

True. Poor Mabel failed in health, and I took her to the continent, but we soon returned. Mabel is contented if not happy."

"She married——"

"She married? Fiddlesticks! No; she never had any idea of marrying any man excepting yourself, and you went off to Mexico and nearly broke her heart."

Teacher (of juvenile class)—"Johnnie, what was the first thing the Puritans did when they landed at Plymouth rock?" Johnnie—"They fell on their knees." Teacher—"That's right. Now Tommy, what was the next thing they did?" Tommy—"Fell on the aborigines."—Chicago News.

A GUST OF WIND.

BY JACK ROBINSON.

"If you have one scrap of sympathy for miserable mortals, dear Eva, please bestow it upon me, as I am the most unhappy creature in existence. The explanation is contained in five words: Jack and I have quarrelled. It happened last night at Madame Vale's party. I flirted a little, just to make him jealous. He censured me for my behavior, and I laughed in his face, denying his right to interfere. We are not engaged, you know, but I like Jack better than any one else, and I am sure—at least, I think he is—in love with me, but he has not told me so, and I can't very well propose to him. Now he will never come near me again, and I am miserable. I wish——"

Daisy sprang up to answer the summons. She was a warm day in spring and she had moved her desk near the open window. During her absence the wind took unwarranted liberties with the papers thereon. First, it blew them together in a promiscuous heap, then scattered them, and finally lifted one sheet up and bore it out of the window.

Daisy re-entered the room in time to see the paper float beyond her reach.

"Oh, there goes my letter!" she cried in dismay, and fairly flew out of the room and down the stairs.

The watcher knew she was in the garden, and had rushed almost into the arms of a man who was coming up the path. Upon raising her eyes, she beheld Jack Alexander holding a sheet of paper in his hand.

"Jack—Mr. Alexander—give that to me. It is my letter."

Jack's eyes twinkled.

"Your letter?" he said, holding it beyond her reach. "Well, the wind wafted it to me, so I suppose I am at liberty to read it."

"Oh, no, no! You must not! It is to Eva, and not a word of it is true."

Mr. Alexander looked his gyebrows.

"Indeed! I am surprised that you should commit yourself to falsehoods on paper. Is that your usual style?"

"Jack, please, give it to me."

But he held the letter aloft. As he was a giant in stature and Daisy the reverse, there seemed to be no way of her getting it.

"See here," he said presently. "I will give you this—ah—letter, on one condition."

"I agree to it," she said, clutching at the straw.

"Well, you must say you are sorry for the manner in which you treated me last night, and promise not to flirt any more."

Her face flushed scarlet.

"I will do nothing of the sort!" she responded. "You are the one who should apologize. Your conduct was atrocious."

"You have a strange way of turning the tables. I did nothing which required an apology. Why, I scarcely looked at any woman save yourself. But to return to this letter. I tell you truly, Daisy, if you do not agree to my conditions I will read every word of it."

"Jack, if you do, I'll never speak to you again!"

"Well, promise what I ask."

"I will not."

"Then here goes!" bringing the paper down to his face.

"Oh! oh! I—I promise!"

"Very good," said Jack.

"Now give me the letter."

"Not so fast. I must see first if you mean what you say. Kindly answer each question as I ask it. Are you sorry for your behavior last night?"

"No—that—that is——"

"Will you ever flirt any more?"

"I did not flirt. I only amused myself a little."

"Well, you agree to cease all such pastime in the future?"

She looked rebellious. Jack glanced down at his letter.

"Yes—but—I will promise nothing more."

"An assertion will do quite as well. Say 'Jack, I have loved you for a long time'——"

"Oh, you conceited creature! It is not true!"

The man's face all at once became serious. He looked at the girl so fixedly that her eyes fell.

"Is that really the case, Daisy?" he said.

NEXT PAGE 1 Galley 5

Again the color flamed into her cheeks.

"You have no right to ask me such a question."

"Why not?"

"Because—Jack, end this nonsense and give me my letter."

"Is a moment. Daisy, will you marry me?"

"No."

Jack's expression never changed, but he shook the paper threateningly.

"Oh, are tiresome you are! Well, then—yes!"

"My darling!" he raptureously cried, catching her in his arms and kissing her. "Why would you not give me this answer long ago?"

Daisy looked up mischievously.

"How could I, when you never asked me to?" she said.

"Never asked you? By Jove, I believe I never did! But it's all right now. You are my promised wife, and here is your letter."

He handed her the paper. It was a blank sheet.

An Even Thing.

"That coal," said Mr. Tenspot to Mr. Black, who had called for the amount of his bill, "was short in weight."

"Then it is in striking contrast to the wait I have had for my money," replied the coal dealer.—New York World.

A LITTLE EPISODE.

There was a big crush at Mrs. Sinclair's "at home," and people were making slow progress through the rooms, looking cynical or bored or interested, as the case might be.

For vivid, frank enjoyment, there were few faces to compare with one girlish one—a little flushed, with shining blue eyes, and soft curly brown hair clustering about it.

The girl wanted to know who every one was and to discuss them; she thought them charming, and regretted that she did not live in London.

"Father hates it so," she said.

"Your father had a long spell of it," said a gentleman at her side. "But"—and he smiled very pleasantly—"we shall very soon have you among us, I hope, for more than a flying visit."

The girl blushed and grew shy, and then uttered an exclamation.

"Who is that?" she asked eagerly. "Look at her, there! That woman with the beautiful face and dark hair."

"That is Miss St. Quentin. She writes, you know. Writes well, too; her new book is an immense success, being neither cheap nor nasty."

"Oh, I've read it," Hilda Carson said, the pink flush deepening in her cheeks. And Hilda never was much.

"I think she is a woman nobody could help loving, if they knew her," she continued.

He laughed. Her fresh enthusiasm was amusing, and he rather enjoyed it for the moment. Before he could speak again two or three people joined them, and he lost sight of Hilda for a little.

A good many people admired Miss St. Quentin, but very few even dimly guessed that, while writing stories of others, her own life hid one away in an inner and very sacred chamber.

They said she was "not a bit impressionable," and, for all her beauty, very unlikely to break her own heart or any one else.

There were just two or three people —of whom Mr. Sinclair was one—who doubted this dictum, and wondered if the delicate coldness of her manner did not hide at least as much of her nature as it revealed.

But even those who had so much discernment did not know—nobody knew —of that summer, eight years ago, when she and Jack Tremain had met in the old Suffolk mansion. Nobody knew of the long, long mornings in the orchard, talking over everything and anything, or sometimes sitting in the silence that is only possible between friends.

Six months ago Major Tremain had come home, but society had seen very little of him as yet, though it was eager to lionize him and raved over the deed that gained him that coveted V. C.

Miss St. Quentin had not seen him at all, though she knew he was, for the moment, in town, and scanned the faces in the crowded parties, hoping in the hope she was half ashamed of—that of seeing his.

She was always a centre of attraction and had not been many minutes in Mrs. Sinclair's rooms before she was surrounded with a little crowd. She realized how hateful to the inevitable, and was trying to forget her one insistent desire when her hostess came up with a bronzed, dignified man at her side.

"Miss St. Quentin, may I introduce Major Tremain to you?" she said, and then there was a little exclamation of mutual recognition, and ten minutes' ordinary chat, and—that was all.

A man's voice broke in upon her thoughts. He was the same who had been talking to Hilda Carson in the evening, and who, at present, entertained a very kindly feeling for him.

She made room for him beside her, and they began to talk.

Presently Hilda passed by, looking so sunny and animated that Miss St. Quentin paused in her talk to look at her.

"What a dear little girl!" she said. "Who is she, Mr. Cresswell? I saw you talking to her just now."

"Little Miss Carson," he said, following the little white figure with his eyes. "She is Colonel Carson's only daughter, and a very nice girl. A great admirer of yours, by the way, Miss St. Quentin."

"You must introduce us, by-and-by," Miss St. Quentin said smilingly. "She looks so fresh and nice. I don't think I ever saw her before."

"No; but I suppose she will be more in town after her marriage."

"Oh, is she engaged?"

"Why, yes. Didn't you know? She is engaged to Tremain—Major Tremain, I mean. He is to stay with the Carsons, and that it was a case of love at first sight. All the other fellows in his regiment thought him a regular hardened old bachelor, so it has been a good bit talked about."

Miss St. Quentin leaned back and fanned herself slowly.

"You know Tremain, I suppose?" Mr. Cresswell continued, not looking at his companion, as he spoke, but watching Hilda Carson as she stood talking to some one, with her sunny smile.

"Slightly," she said. "I used to know him years ago. He is—or was—very pleasant."

"Oh, yes; he's generally popular. "Why," turning suddenly round. "I'm afraid you're not very well. Can I get you anything?"

*"Nothing, thank you. It is only neu*ralgia," she said quietly. "I am afraid I must go. I am subject to it, and it is very bad to-night."

"I'm awfully sorry!"

He was full of sympathy and eager proffers of assitance, and when he put her into her carriage shook hands with reiterated regrets.

"I hope the pain will be gone in the morning," he said.

But the pain did not pass in the morning.—The Sketch.

THE UNSEEN SINGER.

I was alone in the little seaside town, the solace of work being denied me because of the illness that has brought me there to seek for health. I had been perhaps a fortnight in this place when first I saw the lady of whom I would tell you. It was only for a moment as she drove past in the company of an older woman, but that moment's sight was enough to fill my thoughts until I saw her again upon the morrow. She was beautiful beyond all words; I fancied she could hardly have passed the age of twenty; and speech and bearing had been denied her. She was talking with her fingers to the elderly lady, her companion, in whose eyes as they looked on the girl I saw an infinite pity expressed.

On the next day, at about the same hour, the carriage passed along the length of the promenade. She was still innocently glad to be alive, and content to accept her burden. It was with a gentle smile that she looked into the pitying eyes of her companion, and I could fancy that the messages she was conveying with swiftly moving fingers were humorous appreciations of what she saw around her.

My earlier questions had been addressed to a quaint, elderly waiter at the hotel—a man who had in some sort made it his especial task to see to my well-being, and who was the nearest approach to a friend I possessed within a hundred miles of the place. It happened that I was lunching at the open window one day when the carriage passed, a little earlier than usual.

"That is the lady of whom I was speaking," I said to him.

He looked out of the window with quick interest. A pale little maid, it I may say so, and the girl is deaf and dumb; she's talkin' upon her fingers. Well, I thought from what you told me they must be strangers in these parts, and so they are. I don't even know the horses nor the carriage."

Thus passed a period of several days I had, on divers occasions, set forth on foot and explored the coast and the inland lanes for myself. I went alone, but never felt the absence of companions. For my expeditions always took place before or after the hour at which she might be expected to pass along the promenade, and so my thoughts were always busy, whether with anticipation or remembrance.

Never once did she fail me; never once did her affliction seem to mar the beautiful gaiety of her mood. It appeared that she saw and enjoyed every little thing that could be seen; nor was it altogether a young man's vanity which led me to believe that she had noticed the fact that a certain sallow invalid was always idling on the promenade at the hour when she drove by.

I had come to understand the routine of their daily outing. They were manifestly living somewhere to the West of the town. Every day they went through the inland lanes at the back of it until they were a mile or two to the east, and then, descending seaward, drove by the long promenade and the road that skirts the sea.

Some dozen or so cottages and a little pier stood at the margin of the sea. Inland a few houses were seen among the fruitful orchards. But at the edge of the slope there was a little space of wild woods, and this, as I looked across the flower-grown hedge, tempted me to rest. I climbed the intervening barrier and lay down in the shelter of a little oak tree. The sunlight flooded a wealth of bracken, foxgloves and golden ragwort-weed. I lay at ease, content to watch stray butterflies that went lazily from flower to flower.

It may be I slept. Certainly I was a long time under the oak before I became aware that I was not the only occupant of the wood. Some one was singing softly through the fern. I could tell by the sound that the newcomer was stopping here and there to pick flowers. .

Now, I had enjoyed the solitude, but even the most desirable person who was coming toward me did not strike me as an intruder. Her singing was in absolute concord with my mood; it was as if one had thought of a poem and a moment later found oneself humming the melody that would make of it a perfect song. I lay and waited, and the singer came nearer.

The song ceased when she presently appeared. She was a little startled, but not nearly so much as I.

"Then you are not dumb!" I cried involuntarily, as I started to my feet.

She hesitated, and a little smile played about the corners of her pretty mouth.

"It is my aunt who is dumb," she said. Then, with a sudden recovery of her dignity, "I don't know why you should ask."

But that was a matter of no great difficulty in explaining ere I came back to London the happiest man on God's earth.—Black and White.

A Long Dog.

"Don't be afraid," said the owner of the very attenuated dachshund; "he won't hurt you."

"I can't help being suspicious of him," was the reply. "If he is good natured why doesn't he wag his tail when I go to pat his head?"

"He will pretty soon. You know it takes even thought some little time to travel."—Washington Star.

A Dead Failure.

Wiswell—Charley isn't a bad fellow socially, but he's a dead failure in money matters. Why, I actually believe he owes everybody in town.

Wrightly—And you call that a dead failure? I should say that Charley is a Napoleon of finance.—Boston Transcript.

FINDING THE PATH.

Dusk was beginning to fall, and as I looked round over the long level of marsh land that surrounded us and saw no sign of any of our party I felt the first thrill of a not unpleasant uneasiness. I glanced at my companion. She was walking quite contentedly by my side, apparently secure in the assumption that I knew my way.

Suddenly she turned to me.

"What a queer place this would be to get lost in," she said.

I think the serious possibility of such a thing had not occurred to her at all. She threw out the remark merely as a contribution to a flagging conversation.

"Yes," I said. "But you're not afraid, are you?"

"Oh, no; not at all! Of course you know the way, and that makes all the difference."

"Of course it does," I answered with a glimmering sense of shame.

We walked on silently for another five minutes, and then Miss Pascoe stopped and listened, leaning forward slightly with her hair blowing about her face.

"Don't the sea?" she asked.

"It must be the sea," I said, after a show of hard listening.

"But it shouldn't be there," she said.

"Why not?" I answered rather feebly, in order to gain time. "It always has been there I suppose."

"Don't be foolish," she said. "You know what I mean. We must have got on the wrong path. Mr. Thirimere," she cried, "how could you have been so careless?"

"My dear Miss Pascoe," I said, "If I have made a mistake, I am very sorry."

"And you said all along that you knew the way," she pouted, trying to shoot condemnation from her eyes at me in the darkness.

"You see," I said, "I got my directions from your brother—from Jim—and he's often so very inaccurate, isn't he?"

"Absurdly inaccurate," she admitted. "If I'd known you were relying upon Jim, I wouldn't have come at all."

"And then I should have missed the most delightful walk I ever had."

She turned away from me a little, with a petulant movement of the shoulders that pleased me mightily.

"I wish we had Jim here," she said with pretty fierceness.

"I don't," I said.

"Then perhaps you'll be good enough to find the right path. We can't stay here."

"There don't seem to be any convenience for camping out," I said. "Will you excuse me for a moment while I explore to the right? I may get up to my knees in the marsh. You will be safer here."

"Don't be long, will you?" she said.

"Oh, no!" I said cheerfully. "I shall find the path in no time."

I started off, carefully exploring the ground before me with my stick as I went. There was no sign of a path, and I began to be seriously alarmed for Miss Pascoe's comfort. On consideration, from my vantage position I had made rather an ass of myself. Another hundred yards, and still no path. I paused and looked back. I could see a slight, dark figure moving toward me very carefully and slowly.

"I told you so," I said.

Miss Pascoe answered,—

"Yes. I'd rather come with you if you don't mind. When you left me I felt so lonely that I was almost afraid."

"I am more sorry than I can tell you," I said, "to have got you into such an awkward fix. Pick your way very carefully. Ah!" She had stepped with one foot into a patch of wet moss.

"Take my hand," I said. "It is quite firm land." She took it, and I will you ever forgive me for this?" She took my outstretched hand, and I guided her to safety. But because the danger might be renewed at any moment I still retained my hold of her slim fingers, and we went forward together in that pleasant, companionable way.

"Don't talk to me about forgiveness until you have found the path and made restitution," she said. I saw the gleam of her eyes and the oval shadow of her face, and all at once I realized that there was only one thing I could do at that moment. I stopped in my life, I stooped down and kissed her.

"Forgive me if you can," I said, for I love you. I suppose now I have trespassed beyond all hope!"

For a moment she was quite still, and I cursed myself for such blind precipitation by the circumstance, and the time and place had all forced me to this inevitable result.

"You think," she said, after this pause, "that you may as well pile up all your offenses at once and be forever condemned on all counts at one time!"

"Precisely," I said. "I am entirely in your hands."

"I will forgive you," she said very sweetly, "when you have found the path."

"It's a bargain then," I said.

I took a step forward and brought my foot sharply against something white that stood a few inches above the ground.

"Why," I cried, bending to examine it, "this must be the broken post that Jim told me to look out for. What a close observer your brother is! This is the path that leads straight for home."

"You knew it all the time," she said, reproachfully.

"No," I said. "I assure you that I had no idea of it. We shall be in just as the rescue party is preparing to set out." I turned to her and held out my hands. "I claim your forgiveness," I said.

And she forgave me.—Black and White.

The City Election Prospects.

City election is a long ways off, but already matters are shaping themselves towards making the lines upon which the municipal battle will be fought.

The political barometer indicates that the present Republican regime are going to run up against a stronger movement than even the Citizens' candidates formed themselves into a year ago. The result of last year's city election showed that the voters were with the movement seeking to overthrow the Republican political machine. It was a stunning blow to the G. O. P., when one considers that their opponents were unorganized and unprepared in every particular except that it had a dissatisfied populace arrayed in its interests. Of course, that was the strongest factor in the election, but if the Citizens' movement had been prosecuted with a better organization, the results would undoubtedly have been more disastrous than they were to the regular Republicans.

There is prospect this year of Mayor Fisk and his followers confronting an organized movement that will be composed of not only those who have for several years been their antagonists, but as well many who have heretofore trained in their political school. The opposition will be organized thoroughly and will therefore be able to make a much stronger fight than last year.

Worst of Vandals.

Though there is no malicious act more detested in the public mind than vandalism in cemeteries—and especially that of robbing graves of flowers—the practice is a common one in the cities of the dead in Plainfield.

If possible the offenders ought to be rounded up in court and taught a lesson that will forcibly impress upon their minds the sacredness of the grave. Complaints are frequent about the theft of flowers in cemeteries and the despoilation of work which bereaved relatives and friends have done in final tribute to departed ones.

In the majority of cases it is undoubtedly the work of children, who perhaps do not realize the enormity of their crime and whose parents are too void of moral respect to teach them different. In such instances it is the parents who ought to be made to feel the arm of the law necessary to convince that they owe a duty to the community not to countenance such things on the part of their children.

Sea Girt for a National Camp.

As one of the developments of the war, it is likely Sea Girt, New Jersey will soon be permanently honored by Camp Voorhees at Sea Girt being designated as a military post by the government. The camp is admirably adapted for the purposes of Uncle Sam in quartering his soldiers there.

The present State reservation contains 120 acres. Ten thousand soldiers could be camped on this tract, providing the parade ground was abandoned, or half that number if the parade field was left intact. Just north of the State camp, 30 acres of level land can be had, and west of the railroad 100 acres are available. Just south of the Manasquan river, 60 acres of ideal camping land can be secured. The Governor thus far has secured options on 250 acres outside of the State camp. Much of this property can be leased for about $10 an acre a year.

Special Anniversary Edition.

The Dunellen Call celebrated its sixth anniversary yesterday, and in honor of the event a special anniversary edition of that enterprising weekly was issued. Editor George Dey, assisted by O. A. Douglass, deserves much credit for their efforts in giving the people of Dunellen such an able paper.

A complete history of that borough and New Market appears in the anniversary number from the pen of Mr. Douglass, and is of great local interest. A handsome cover in colors, with a picture of the Lincoln monument at Lincoln, is an admiring feature. The usual amount of local news appears and makes the issue one well worth preserving. The entire paper was printed in Dunellen.

Steady Advance of The Press.

Since the war has progressed to the point where the public does not regard its developments with that intense interest characteristic of its beginning, many papers in the same class as The Daily Press have curtailed expenses and modified their enterprise to a noticeable extent in the treatment of war news.

This has not been the practice of The Daily Press, however, as all of its readers have plenty of opportunity to observe. From day to day this paper has presented the latest and most reliable war news, and it will continue to do so. The enterprise of The Daily Press is not of the spasmodic brand.

New Paper in Westfield.

We do not profess to be thoroughly posted on the newspaper field in Westfield, but it seems as though another paper in that town means an enterprise that will have a struggling time to exist. But W. H. Morse, late editor of the Leader, is about to launch the Republican, and he ought to know whether or not there is field enough for three papers in the town. We have received no prospectus of the new journal but its title is presumed to denote its political principles.

Kodak Fiend's Opportunity.

The Ladies Home Journal offers $500 in prizes for photographs of the prettiest suburban homes. It is an acknowledged fact that Plainfield has the most attractive suburban homes in the metropolitan district—homes that make it a residential elysium for all who seek the salubrious climate that here abounds.

Now here is a chance for the public pride of some of the "push the-button-and-we-do-the-rest" fiends to take form in a practical shape. Let them take a snap shot of the beautiful structures and surroundings in the residential districts and forward them to the Home Journal as competitors for the liberal prizes that are offered.

From what we know of suburban homes in other places than Plainfield we have no fear that the views from the Eldorado of the East will capture some of the prizes. Thus will Plainfield be advertised inestimably and the kodak fiend get his or her reward in the receipt of a substantial check.

Trading Stamp Problem.

The trading stamp question, since Governor Voorhees vetoed the measure seeking to make the business illegal, is an omnipresent one with Plainfield merchants. Those who have thought it policy to offer their customers the advantages of the trading stamp scheme have done so regretting that the plan had ever been devised. A Louisville merchant has written to Charles F. Jones, who conducts a special department in Printers' Ink, asking: "Is there any way that you know of that the trading stamp nuisance could be driven out of a town after it has once started?" Mr. Jones was the man who originated the advertising of Siegel Cooper & Company when they started business in New York and may be considered an expert in successfully grappling with great business problems. What he says about the matter will be interesting to every Plainfield merchant. It is as follows:

> A great many people look at the trading stamp question from a point of view diffeerntly from what I do. I believe to a great extent it is a legitimate business, and I do not at present know of any way that it can be legally driven out of a town, as the trade stamp people have privileges are confined to a few stores. I think it is really a good thing for those few stores, but of course correspondingly a bad thing for the other stores. Where it is confined and not allowed to spread to everybody, it will no doubt to a certain extent help the business of those who have it. The difficulty is that it usually spreads too far, for when it is generally used by everybody or by a large number of people it does not do any of them very much good, but is simply a tax on the merchant which the trading stamp people collect. I think after it spreads a good ways that the merchants who have it themselves will soon catch on to this and be very glad to give it up; but as long as the trading stamp people confine it to a few it will probably be popular with those for a long time. If in Mr. Peterson's city the trading stamp plan is confined to the right number of people, and if the other merchants who are not in it wish to break up the arrangement, I believe the best thing they could do would be to start a trading stamp system of their own in competition with the one already established. A trading stamp system run by the merchants themselves could be organized which would not conflict with the rights of the original trading stamp men, and by getting all the merchants in it, it would very soon cause those who are in the present trading stamp system to cry "enough." The merchants could run their trading stamp system with less expense, because they would themselves share in the profits which the trading stamp people are supposed to make in their system. As soon as everybody was in the system, or as soon as a large percentage of the stores were in the system, it would naturally be unprofitable to all, and make it hard for the trading stamp people to carry on their plan. I understand that a plan somewhat similar to this has been tried in some of the Southern cities, and that it accomplished the results of causing the trading stamp people to very soon leave the town.

The Tax Rate.

Over in Newark they have just fixed the tax rate which there amounts to $2.10. It will not be long before Plainfield will know where she stands this year in regard to taxes. Since the advent of the new members of the Common Council, there is more interest than ever as to what the rate will be. Some of those in authority say that while they cannot tell as yet what it will be, they are able to predict with certainty that the tax rate will be considerably lower than last year. Let us hope that such is the case.

While considerably below Plainfield's tax rate, Newark's rate this year is the highest there since 1882, when it reached $2 41. With that exception it is the highest in Newark for forty-four years.

The heavy increase in the tax rate is occasioned by an addition of $182,071.26 to the city expenditure for the current year and a very small proportionate increase in the valuation of city real and personal property.

The increase in city expenditures is explained by the Newark Common Council as being required to meet the interest and sinking fund charges on new High School, City Hospital and Public Library bonds, mandatory appropriations for street paving and other expenditures of the Board of Works and the increase in salaries of police and firemen.

The Tax Commissioners explain the slight increase in local valuations by saying that much taxable property has been taken away for park purposes, and that in other cases property is left less valuable because of the demolition of buildings to be replaced by new ones.

While the explanation sounds plausible enough, Newark tax-payers will probably be heard from shortly.

Feeding the Soldiers.

From the different military camps, State and National, there come reports of the hardships that the volunteer soldiers are enduring. In some locations the food is said to be of poor quality, in others there is little food of any kind. The water supply is complained of. New Jersey, too, is listening to complaints of the same order. Soldiers are now writing from Fort Hancock that their food supply is limited and of a poor quality. Then again other Jersey boys encamped at the same fort say that they are receiving excellent treatment. It is rather difficult to understand just what the situation is at Fort Hancock. Nobody expected that the life in the army was to be a luxurious one and that the rations would equal those at home. Nevertheless, it is not the intention of either State or National authorities to starve the Nation's sons or give them anything that is not strictly wholesome.

If the situation at Fort Hancock is really as bad as some are inclined to believe, then an investigation should be made without delay and the blame for the trouble located and the evil corrected. It is not encouraging to fight for one's country and be half starved when that is not necessary. It is possible, however, that some of our boys are inclined to exaggerate the situation and make a mountain out of a molehill.

Our Good Name.

It is sad, indeed, when the fair fame of Union county is dragged into the mire by one of her citizens who happens to wield the pen in an editorial sanctum. This time our friend in the fair town of Westfield, the editor of the Union County Standard, has gleaned from the news of the county several affrays that cause his usual good nature to drop dangerously near the zero point and to relieve itself in the following disheartening paragraph:

> Fighting seems to be the "proper thing" just now in some parts of the county. A family fight here Sunday night, a "free for all" at Cranford the same night, and now comes the report that an Italian "mix up" occurred at Scotch Plains Sunday afternoon, in which one of the men was stabbed in the arm. No arrests have been made in either of the three cases.

Never mind, Editor Pearsall, it is said that it is always darkest before dawn. Perhaps even now the county will suddenly develop some traits of wonderland goodness.

At any rate, spare the name and fame of Union county, and if "copy" runs short and you need a paragraph to complete the column, just review the good things that have happened here of late—the fresh air camps, the Red Cross benefits, and all the other worthy happenings.

Cranford Redeems Herself.

Cranford has redeemed herself. Her doughty little editor of the Cranford Chronicle appreciates the fact and heralds it forth in an inspired paragraph in his editorial columns. The carnival, that event of past years, is not to be. Some said that the Cranford folk were slow, but they did not look behind the mask that hid the motives of the promoter of the carnival. Now they have been unmasked. Instead of a carnival Cranford is to have a river fete which, as The Chronicle so aptly says, "Will not only give an evening of pleasure to the townspeople and their guests but will aid the Red Cross Society in its work.

It has been suggested with pertinence by a great New York newspaper as a lesson of the Bourgogne disaster that there should be a compulsory boat drill at least twice on every voyage of an ocean passenger liner. The dexterity and discipline which come of practice might easily increase the humanitarian value. We believe that this was at one time the habit of the Cunard line, if it is not today. It ought to be carried out in every ship which undertakes the responsibility of crowded human life.

The Spanish prisoners at Portsmouth, N. H., are quite happy over their kind treatment and right comfortable, as they had been told before capture that they would all be put to death by the American savages. Perhaps some of the ignorant fellows believe that the unaccustomed amplitude of feeding only means fatter and tenderer "long pig," as the cannibal south sea islanders dub their favorite grill.

A Great Game Park.

One of the most interesting experiments ever made by a rich man in this country is the wonderful Corbin game park at Newport, N. H. The park comprises upward of 40,000 acres, and within the vast inclosure live and breed at the present time about 1,200 moose, 3,000 elk, some 4,000 deer of different varieties, 600 buffaloes, or rather bisons, and several thousand wild swine of the celebrated German Black Forest strain. Mr. Corbin's success in raising wild animals was marvelous. It is interesting to note, too, that, whereas the indigenous animals, such as bears, deer, panthers, etc., had been destroyed out of the country previously, they returned in considerable number to the vicinity after the park was established. Did the captive creatures send out mysterious messages to their wild congeners? From the Corbin park, which has been in existence now about ten years, have been sent out many animals to stock other parks, both private and public. The ease with which the bison, the moose and the elk have been artificially bred, and their great fecundity—for the stock has increased tenfold—gives assurance that what was once feared, the practical extermination of some of our noblest wild animals, can be easily averted. Many others have been inspired to follow the example on a smaller scale. The purpose of the founder seems to have been more in the interests of science than of sport, and the experiment has been followed with keenest interest by scientists all over the world.

The Corbin estate has vastly dwindled since settlement after the elder Corbin's lamentable death three years ago. As it costs about $25,000 a year to pay the current expenses of the park it is to be feared that the family may be forced to give it up and realize on a property which pays no income. Should this be the case, it is to be hoped that the park may be purchased and carried on by an association. Even the great western wilderness has been practically stripped of some of the nobler fera natura, and a great animal nursery of this kind will serve an important use. Conducted on a grand scale, success is far more sure than it ever is in a small way. The pure utilitarian may scoff at the notion of such an industry, but there are enough wealthy men interested in science and sport who would see the facts from a different standpoint.

Electric Railways and Water Power.

The use of electro motive power is extending rapidly from city and suburban tramways to the paralleling of old established steam lines by narrow gauge roads. This is notably the case in those sections of the country where there is abundance of water power. The economy of building and of rolling stock required is accompanied by the further advantage that there is no longer any question of grades, no necessity of devious routes. But the crowning factor of cheapness comes from economy of motive power. This has been most effectually proved in New England, many sections of which and some of the mountainous regions of the west.

The electrical force is produced by power stations along the route, where dynamos transform the water power. In some cases the current is applied through the trolley wire, but in the longer routes the third rail is used, and the result in the latter case is entirely satisfactory. There is no doubt that where the natural conditions are suitable this kind of electro motor railway will prove a most formidable competitor to all other systems and will solve the very important problem of transportation. Reduced expense in building and operating means not only less passenger and freight tariffs, but possibility of railway transportation otherwise impracticable. It is only in long trunk lines, involving complicated schedules of freight service and immensely heavy trains, that steam would hold its own against electric roads run by convenient water power.

The claim so often made that a large percentage of Federal soldiery during the civil war was of foreign birth scarcely agrees with official statistics of the war department. According to these figures, 75 per cent were American born, 9 per cent Germans, 8 per cent Irish, 2¼ per cent British Americans and 5½ per cent all other nationalities. The ratio also holds true of the losses in battle, showing that all fought with equal bravery in the forefront of danger.

While the other nations have been scrambling for slices of China with great success the Union Jack is not behind in flying over important accretions of Celestial soil. In addition to Wei-Hai-Wei, which is likely to become an oriental Gibraltar, England has also secured the fastnesses of Kai-long, just opposite Hongkong, with 200 miles front of the mainland. This will put the whole traffic of southern China under British control.

The sensational stories about the suffering and destitution of our soldiers in the southern camps have proved to be "much beer" from an encroached collar of froth. The main trouble seems to have been that the new men did not know how to cook their rations properly. The regulars were all the time revelling in plenty on the same rations.

There are persons so social that they can't waste their time alone, and these become the scourge of busy people.

ENDEAVOR CYCLISTS GO.

CONDUCTED A MEETING AT CAMP WOLF, WESTFIELD, MONDAY.

They Went Awheel from This City and Found a Unique Scene—The Children Love to Sing Hymns—The Meeting.

The Christian Endeavor bicycle squad of the Park Avenue Baptist church was in active operation last Monday. The society had charge of a spread meeting at Camp Wolf, the headquarters of the Westfield freshair work, and while one or two of the Endeavorers went down by train, and a few others by carriage, by far the greater number were in the party of cyclists that met in front of Crescent Avenue church and enjoyed a half-hour's spin down the county road, arriving just as the song service at the camp was in progress. And such a song service! If there is anything the restless little pieces of humanity brought out from darkest New York for a ten-days' stay in time seem to enjoy, it is shouting the chorus to a rousing gospel hymn.

The visitors were tempted to look about them during the service, for the scene was unique. A large building, sides open to the air, and within, seated in rows of chairs, or standing outside, worn-looking New York mothers, many of them with tiny children, and swarming about everywhere, the children, with alert, wide-wake faces, tangled hair, and eyes that gazed at the strangers with curiosity, pleasure or distrust.

The leader of the meeting was that well-known Endeavor worker, Mrs. Alice Spangenberg Runyon, and her brief, simple talk on the words "Ask, and Ye Shall Receive," was thoroughly helpful and could be understood by all. Miss Adelaide Runyon sang "Alas, and Did My Saviour Bleed," accompanied by Miss Myra Runyon at the organ. Many of the Endeavors, some of the mothers, and even a number of the children repeated verses of Scripture, gave simple testimonies, or offered prayer, then the closing hymn was sung. After spending a short time in making acquaintance with the guests of the camp, the bicycle squad was called to order, and amid a chorus of "good-byes," and the jingling of bicycle bells, started on their return trip.

Attention Needed Here.

The residents of Pearl street, between Watchung avenue and Warren street, are complaining about the condition of the roadway. They say that it is so graded that the water stands there long after every rain, and besides making the road unpleasant for wheelmen and drivers, is a menace to the health of the community.

No Cure—No Pay.

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Malaria, Chills and Fever. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price, 50c. For sale by R. J. Shaw. 12 2 1y

Exchange of Real Estate.

Robert Clark, of Washingtonville, has exchanged his handsome property with Charles Lyman, of the borough, for Mr. Lyman's Jackson avenue house. Possession in both cases will be given August 1st.

A telephone is to be placed in the new clubhouse of the Park Golf Club.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trial of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting, has added one of the grandest results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 96 Pine street, New York, giving post-office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

A TRIPLE AFFAIR.

Three Young People Celebrated Their Birthdays Together Tuesday.

A triple birthday celebration was held Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Denton, of Prospect Hill, when her daughter, Miss Pauline Denton, and her cousin, Miss Nellie Brown, of Dunellen, and Howard Armstrong, of Brooklyn, celebrated the anniversaries of their birthdays together. The young women are sixteen years of age, while the boy is five years old. It happens that the birthdays of the celebrants fall on the same day, and this year it was arranged to unite in the celebration. The affair was one of pleasure to all. A number of young friends of those in whose honor the event was given were present The guests presented many useful and pretty gifts, and Miss Denton received a bicycle.

It was planned to serve refreshments on the spacious lawn surrounding the house, but the weather prevented. Instead a sumptuous repast was served in the house. After an exchange of happy greetings the young folks departed well pleased with the celebration provided.

DEATH OF RANDOLPH DUNHAM.

Passed Away Suddenly After an Illness of Only a Week.

Randolph Dunham died Tuesday from acute bright's desease, after an illness of only a week. He made his home with Daniel Randolph, of Spooner avenue, and the funeral will be held from the house 210 Spooner avenue Friday morning at 10 o'clock. Mr. Dunham was employed as clerk in the office of the Potter Press Works.

He was born in this city, and comes from good old Seventh-Day Baptist stock. Eight years ago he moved to Roselle, and was principal of the public school there until two years ago when he moved to this city. He then secured his position in Potter's. He was unmarried and leaves no near relatives. He was forty-seven years old.

Robert Clark, who has become the owner of Charles H. Lyman's beautiful home, corner of Jackson and Watchung avenues, will not take possession until October 1st, instead of August 1st, as reported.

AIMED AT LIVE BIRDS.

TRAP SHOOTERS CONTESTED AT DUNELLEN SATURDAY.

The Principal Event Was the Team Shoot Between the Bound Brook and Dunellen Teams — The Scores.

There was a gathering of the trap shooters from this section at the grounds of the Dunellen Gun Club Saturday after noon when the club held a shoot at 15 birds, the first since the formal organization of the Central New Jersey Trap Shooting League. Despite the threatening weather, the afternoon's sport was excellent and some fine scores were recorded. There was little wind and no sun to bother the shooters. The birds were a well-chosen lot and flew well despite the fine mist that occasionally fell. Neal Agar pulled the traps.

The event of the afternoon was the match between the teams from the Bound Brook Gun Club and the Dunellen Gun Club. A week before the Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, had defeated the Dunellen team and the latter was anxious to recover their lost laurels by winning a victory. The Bound Brookites were shooting in fine form, however, and won out in the match by just two birds.

Then followed a special match between Lindzey and Cramer, of Dunellen, against Lair and Tingley, of Bound Brook. The Dunellen cracks made a clean score and won. Then there were several sweepstakes of lesser importance. Adam Destman was scorekeeper.

The scores of the matches were as follows:

Team event. Five-men teams. Ten birds.

RECOGNIZED LONG SERVICES.

John S. King Presented With a Diamond Badge by Prudential Insurance Company.

John S. King, of West Second street, has faithfully served the Prudential Insurance Company, as an agent, for twenty years, and the company has been quick to recognize the fact by presenting him with an elegant diamond badge. The badge is solid gold and on one side are the letters "P. O. G.," Prudential Old Guard. On the other side is the insignia of the company, a lion and a large size diamond. It is made in the shape of a locket, and is certainly a thing of beauty. The Prudential Insurance Company treats all its agents in a generous manner and they have suitable presentations for agents who have served from five to twenty years. Mr. King is justly proud of the gift.

A Successful Operation.

A successful operation was performed on Mrs. Biswanger, of Philadelphia, Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of her father, J. H. McVey, of North avenue, by Dr. Endicott, assisted by Drs. Long, Probasco, Boone and Browning. The operation was to remove a tumor weighing about 40 pounds. Mrs. Biswanger stood the operation well and there are fair chances for her recovery if no other complications arise.

RELIGIOUS CANTATA BY A CHURCH CHOIR.

"The Vision of St. John" Heard in First Baptist Church.

A FINISHED RENDITION.

LARGE MUSIC-LOVING AUDIENCE WAS PRESENT.

C. W. McCutchen, Director, and Howard Case, Organist, Deserve Great Credit for the Presentation of the Sacred Music—Solo Work of Miss Harris was a Feature—Choir Will Rest.

A thorough music-loving audience gathered at the First Baptist church last Sunday to listen to the rendition of a cantata, "The Vision of St. John," by C. W. Coombs, which was given by the church choir under the direction of Howard Case, organist. The choir was also assisted by Miss Carroll, alto, and L. H. Biglow, Jr., tenor. The solo parts were taken by Miss Harris, soprano; Mrs. Ward, contralto; G. W. Smith and L. H. Biglow, Jr., tenors.

The presentation of the cantata was perfect. Each part, as well as the chorus, was given with a finish that was delightful. The solo work of Miss Harris was a feature, her rich, sweet voice adding greatly to the rendition. Mrs. Ward's singing was equally enjoyed, as was that also of Mr. Smith and Mr. Biglow. There was a trio by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward and Miss Blair, and a quartette by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward, Miss Blair and Miss Randolph. The parts were well taken and the voices blended in sweetest harmony. Another part by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward and G. W. Smith was a feature.

The cantata is a beautiful composition, highly religious, and it being its first rendition in this city, was a rare musical treat. After the musical service Rev. Dr. Yerkes, pastor, delivered a short discourse, taking for his subject the Book of Revelation. The talk was listened to with interest. In conclusion Miss Harris sang a beautiful solo while the offertory was being taken. This will conclude the work of the choir until next fall and the members will now have their usual vacation.

KEPT THE BOSS'S MONEY

THAT IS THE CHARGE MADE AGAINST FRED WILLIBALD.

Formal Complaint Made by His Sister, Mrs. Steven MacIntyre, of Bayonne, for Whom He Formerly Worked.

Fred Willibald, formerly of this city, was arrested Saturday night by Sergeant Kiely charged by his sister, Mrs. Steven MacIntyre, of Bayonne, with embezzlement. The warrant was endorsed by Justice Nash, and Willibald was turned over to the Bayonne authorities who took him to that place Sunday night.

MacIntyre is a boss plumber doing business in Bayonne. Willibald has been working for him for several months, and has lately been collecting MacIntyre's bills. MacIntyre claims that Willibald has not turned the money over. Just how much the alleged shortage is cannot be ascertained, but it is understood to be about $75. MacIntyre says that he discovered the alleged embezzlement when customers to whom he sent bills came in and showed receipts for payment in full signed by Willibald.

Willibald was discharged, and came here. Last Sunday Mrs. MacIntyre saw Chief Grant and asked him to have her brother arrested which he promised to do, providing she made out a complaint before a Bayonne magistrate in the proper form. This request was complied with, and Saturday the Chief received word from police headquarters in Bayonne to arrest Willibald.

One of the Finest.

It will be news to many Plainfielders to learn that Sydney Gilligan, formerly a resident of this city, is a member of the New York police force doing patrol duty. He is located in the vicinity of 69th street, and is making a record for himself.

Plenty of Fish Here.

The water was let out of the pond in the brick yard at Netherwood Monday afternoon, and it was found that the pond was full of catfish and eels. As soon as it was discovered that the water was going out, people gathered from all around and began to catch the fish in their hands. Many were the suppers of savory fish eaten Monday night.

To Take an Outing.

Saturday the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's superintendents, assistant superintendents, managers, collectors and their families, of Somerville and this city, will go to Boynton Beach and spend the day. The party will go by stage and will number about thirty-five people.

BROTHERS-IN-LAW QUARREL IN COURT.

Lawyers Argued and Then Clients Took a Hand.

CHARGE OF CALLING NAMES

ETTINGER ALLEGED THAT KANE CALLED HIM VILE NAMES.

The Case Was Tried Before City Judge DeMeza—The Evidence Was Not Strong Enough and He Let the Prisoner Go—Bad Blood Now Exists Between the Two as a Result of the Suit.

As a finale to a case in Justice Mosher's court Monday morning, a warrant was issued from the City Judge's office for Charles Kane, of Philadelphia, in the afternoon, charging him with calling Michael Ettinger, of Cottage place, a vile name. The trial was held Monday night, and after listening to a large amount of testimony on both sides, the City Judge finally concluded to allow the defendant to go, there not being sufficient evidence to hold him.

The trouble all started in the first place between two lawyers, S. S. Swackhamer and Councilman Walter L. Hetfield. Kane sued Ettinger for $100 money loaned, and when the case was called Monday morning Mr. Hetfield asked for an adjournment for a month. This Mr. Swackhamer objected to, and a war of words followed. Judge Mosher patiently listened while they argued, and the two principals, Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward, Miss Blair and Miss Randolph. The parts were well taken and the voices blended in sweetest harmony. Another part by Miss Harris, Mrs. Ward and G. W. Smith was a feature.

SEASON IS OPENED WITH GREAT SUCCESS.

Sullivan's Troubadours Give Their Initial Performance.

THEATRE OPEN FOR SEASON

IT LOOKED NEAT AND CLEAN AND REFLECTED CREDIT ON MANAGEMENT.

The New Idea in Repertoire, as Presented by the Troubadours, Was a Success—Well Rendered Drama and Roaring Farce Comedy—A Large Audience Present—Programme Monday Night.

If there is anything that the truly typical American audience does not want to do, it is to wait. No matter what it happens to be, the American wants no delay. He is also quite particular as regards the sameness of his entertainments. He wants variety. It was with these peculiarities of the American audience in view that Sullivan's Troubadours were organized. The aim was to cater to these very tastes and the initial performance of the Troubadours, given in Stillman Music Hall Monday, evidenced that the efforts of the management in that direction had been successful.

Besides marking the opening of the season for the Troubadours, last evening's performance also saw the beginning of the theatrical season in Plainfield for the fall and winter of '98 and '99. It was apparent from the moment of entering that Manager Maze Edwards had kept his word. The house was clean, scrupulously so, in fact. Furthermore, it was neat. The efforts of Maze Edwards had not been in vain, for Music Hall was certainly on its best behavior and its bright and cleanly appearance greatly pleased the hearts of the theatre-goers of the city.

And then for the entertainment itself. "A new idea in repertoire," they advertise it. The performance seemed to fulfill the claim. It was based on the same principle as those at Keith's and Proctor's New York theatres, only it was not a continuous performance. Laughing, roaring comedy and well-acted heavy drama were combined in the evening's programme, together with a number of specialties by talented artists, so that the whole formed a pleasant combination that was bound to find favor somewhere with all kinds of theatre-goers.

"The Glees" departed from the usual run of musical artists. They combined popular songs and operatic selections with a touch of refined comedy. Joe A. Hardman had the stage all to himself. There was no need for anybody else there, however. Hardman is funny, the audience laughed the moment they saw him, and when he opened his mouth —well, they kept it up until he disappeared behind the wings.

The California comedy couple, Charles B. Nelson and Mamie Milledge, gave their little comedy, "Glass Put In." Nelson has the faculty of impersonating the typical stage Irishman to perfection, while his stage companion took her share in the sketch. Leah Starr, the charming little soubrette, had several new songs ready.

"Flora's" Transformation dance was well given and the colored light effects were handled so as to make the dance very pleasing.

Edward P. Sullivan made a decided hit in "Ingomar." He had prepared a condensed version of it so as to combine it in one act of forty minutes. His acting was of the best and he threw his whole soul into the part. Miss Emiley Lesselis, who took the part of "Parthenia," had a difficult character to portray, but she gave it with a skill that was a fitting second to the efforts of Sullivan.

Master James Whitely has a remarkably fine voice for so small a boy and he has the new "darkey" melodies down pat. The "Waragraph" include both moving pictures and interesting views.

The programme ended with the roaring farce, "The Shamrock Hotel," in which knock-about work abounded and all the characters made things lively for everybody.

The Troubadours will continue at Music Hall every evening this week. There will be a complete change of programme at every performance and the same variety will be continued.

The Troubadours are under the management of E. Brook Hopper. His hustling and energetic qualities combined with his devotion to his duties are important factors in the success of the company.

To Parade at Bayonne.

The Queen City Band, of this city, has been engaged by the Mercer Company, of the Princeton fire department, one of the crack companies in the State, to go to Bayonne with them Labor Day to take part in the great firemen's parade there.

To Sing at Boynton Beach.

The Vail Brothers will sing "Havana Shores" at the State field day entertainment of the Daughters of Liberty at Boynton Beach Wednesday, August 3. Lucetta Council, from this city, will attend, going in a large four-horse stage.

ALL QUIET AT HOSPITAL.

Monthly Meeting of the Board of Governors Held Monday Night.

A monthly meeting of the board of governors of Muhlenberg Hospital was held Monday evening at the Public Library. There was a quorum present. The report for the month showed that 34 patients were admitted to the hospital, of which number 16 were discharged cured and six improved. The total number treated was 40 and this is the highest number yet reached in one month. In the dispensary department there were 38 patients and 130 visits made. The board reported all matters to be in excellent condition.

A FATED POSTOFFICE.

Uncle Sam's Agency in Oak Tree Robbed for the Seventh Time.

The postoffice at Oak Tree was broken open Sunday night for the seventh time in the last eighteen months and thoroughly ransacked. The burglars smashed the rear door with a crowbar, pried open the desk and went through the place. Bread, cake, eggs, cigarettes, cigars and tobacco were carried away, but no money was taken. From articles dropped by the burglars in their flight it was seen that they went in the direction of Metuchen.

A Little Daughter Dies.

Matilda V. Snyder, aged one month and two days, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Snyder, of Somerset street, died Sunday afternoon after a short illness with summer complaint. Dr. Buchanan was in attendance and worked faithfully to save the little one's life. The funeral services were held Monday p. m. from the home of the parents and interment was in Plainfield avenue cemetery.

W. H. Hepburn, of 410 East Second street, is spending a week with Percy Weston, of 52d street, New York.

HIS DUTY FOLLOWS THE MAUSER BULLETS

SPANISH FIRE ON RED CROSS

THE WAY THE AMERICANS FOUGHT WAS HEROIC.

The Work of the Hospital Corps is Dangerous—Dr. Main Gives an Interesting and Thrilling Description of His Work Among the Wounded—Helping the Women and Children.

Daniel C. Main, son of Rev. A. H. Main, of this city, a member of the ambulance train with Gen. Shafter's army, has written as follows to his father:

On Board Transport Louisiana,
Monday, June 27.

We pulled out from Port Tampa this morning. There are on board two pack trains of mules, about 100 recruits for the Second Infantry, a lot of ammunition and rations, besides our outfit, which consists of ten ambulances, ten civilian drivers, forty mules, about ten horses and twenty-one hospital corps men. We have two rooms to ourselves, one of twelve, the other of six bunks, in the steerage, and consider ourselves lucky. It is very pleasant and cool. We think we are bound for Santiago.

You ought to have seen us leading unruly mules aboard. I believe now I could step a mule if I had a rope around the smoke stack.

We came a roundabout way to avoid Spanish boats, for we had no convoy.

As we were nearing the Cuban coast a gunboat came in sight and fired a solid shot across our bow. There was great excitement until we learned that it was an American vessel; and then it guided us into a harbor. The men are having great times getting the mules ashore. They are shoved overboard by twos and towed close to shore, and then turned loose to swim by themselves.

Wednesday and Wednesday night it was pretty rough and many were sick. Their sentiment was, "Oh, Mr. Chaplain, stop the ship, I want to get off and walk!"

Cuba must be a beautiful country if what is before us is a sample, with its mountains and green valleys.

We can see our ships engaged in some bombardment, and the noise of battle on land can be heard.

We reached the coast of Cuba June 30th, landing July 1. Probably the fiercest fighting history has ever known raged here July 1st, 2d and 3d. We drove eighteen miles and went right to work between the battlefield and the hospital. You have no doubt read of the fighting done by the Ninth Cavalry, the Thirteenth Infantry, and the Seventy first N. Y. Volunteers. The official report here is 2,200 lost and wounded.

Landing in the forenoon, and before getting anything to eat, I was sent to the front with an ambulance. I went to a dressing station at the foot of a hill on the top of which was a blockhouse which our boys had taken that morning. The bullets came over the hill and struck all around the station, and often a shell would come over, sometimes exploding in the air, sometimes often striking the ground.

In the afternoon I carried canteens of water from the creek up to the soldiers in the trenches around the block house. There I saw men fall, and it was terrible. That night I went in with three army wagon loads of wounded men, and on the road we passed through some fighting. Some of our soldiers lay in the road shooting at, and being shot by Spanish sharpshooters. Foreign officers say they never saw or heard of such fighting as our boys have done.

The Spanish have been shooting at our Red Cross men; but English and German officers went into Santiago under flag of truce and made a vigorous protest.

Our ambulances went into the city under flag of truce and help to care for and carry from the city to Caney, women and children, as we expected to bombard the town.

A Losing Excursion.

The report of the excursion committee of the First Presbyterian and other Sunday schools shows a total deficit of $104.94 exists as the result of the excursion to Asbury Park Thursday. This is considered as remarkable for so dull a season, and divided between the Sunday-schools of the four churches that joined in the excursion will make a small proportion for each one to bear.

HE WANTED THE EARTH.

PECULIAR CHARGE MADE AGAINST CHRISTOPHER MYERS.

Miss Schorb Claims That He Carts Off the Earth That is Dumped on to Her Building Lot to Level it Off.

Christopher Myers, who lives near Scott's Press Works, now knows that dirt and ashes are valuable ingredien s, especially when dumped and spread on another's lot, for Friday he was ordered by Justice Moffett to pay Miss Carrie L. Schorb, of Mt. Horeb, $2 damages as well as stand the costs of court. The suit was brought because Myers had been trespassing on Miss Schorb's land and carting away dirt as fast as it was dumped there.

Miss Schorb some time ago purchased twenty building lots on La-Grande avenue, between Berckman and Central streets. The land was low, and to fill it in Miss Schorb gave ash carters and graders permission to dump clean ashes and dirt into the lots. In fact they were urged to do so, for Miss Schorb knew that the sooner the land was brought up to the surrounding level, the sooner would she have a purchaser.

But one thing became very noticeable. As fast as the dirt and ashes were thrown in it would disappear, and be found scattered upon the lots of some of the neighbors in that vicinity. This grew so troublesome and expensive that Miss Schorb determined to put a stop to it, and make an example of some of the people who were taking away the dirt.

Myers was made the victim. He couldn't very well be sued for stealing dirt, so Pope & Runyon, Miss Schorb's attorneys, brought suit for $25 damages for trespassing.

The case was tried Friday morning and the sum of $2 awarded. In presenting the case to the court the plaintiff's lawyers said that the damages they really desired were only nominal, as it was to keep the lots clear of trespassers in the future that they brought the suit, rather than to collect exemplary damages.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS

SCOTCH EVANGELIST TELLS OF LIFE AT SANDY HOOK.

Several of the Recruits Have Experienced Religion Since Joining the Army—Many of Them Patronize the Canteen.

Thomas Graham, the Scotch evangelist, who is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work among the 1,300 soldiers stationed at Sandy Hook, addressed the 4:15 o'clock meeting at the association in this city Sunday afternoon upon the work being done there.

Mr. Graham and a companion began to hold their meetings in a coal shed on the Hook, but are now in possession of a Y. M. C. A. tent, fitted up with the necessary stationery, reading matter, ice water coolers, chairs, settees, etc.

The religious services, he says, are well attended, and many of the boys have been converted during their stay on the Hook. The boys are much impressed with the care which the Y. M. C. A. men takes of them, and often want to know who "puts up" for all the conveniences, and one man, who said he had never been in a church before in his life, attended one of these services in a gospel chapel and was converted.

Last Wednesday, the speaker said, the soldier boys were all paid off, and with the State and regular pay received about $36. Many of them went over to the canteen at once and began spending it for drink while others were prevailed upon by Mr. Graham to send a part of their money home.

The soldiers are housed in small tents, the largest ones holding thirteen and the smaller ones four men. Their beds are bundles of straw and in the morning they come out of the tents shaking the straw off their clothing, and proceed to dress in the camp streets, for there is not room enough inside. At night the tents are so warm that the men can hardly breath, yet with all these discomforts the boys do not complain, and rather enjoy soldiering.

To Hold a Camp Meeting.

The members of St. Peter's A. M. E. Mt. Zion church are preparing to hold a camp meeting in Charles Hyde's grove beginning July 30th. The church was organized eighteen months ago as a mission, but at the general conference held in Paterson, April 29th, the mission was recognized as a church by the assembly.

Pulpit Supplies.

The following are the pulpit supplies for the Crescent Avenue church during the absence of Rev. W. R. Richards on his vacation: July 31—Rev. John Reid, D. D., of Detroit; August 7—Robert E. Speer, of New York; August 14—Rev. James McLeod, D. D., of Scranton; August 21—Robt. E. Speer, of New York; August 28—Rev. Chas. E. Dunn, of Freeport, Ill.; September 4—Rev. George D. Baker, D. D., of Philadelphia.

F. M. Slater and family have taken up their residence on Manning avenue after being absent from the city for some time.

WRECKED BY DRINK, BUT DREADED JAIL

Itinerant Umbrella Mender Before City Judge DeMeza.

HE TOLD A PITIFUL TALE.

FOUND IN A DRUNKEN STUPOR IN A BARN BY AN OFFICER.

Begged the Judge for Freedom and Promised to Leave at Once—He Was Once a Tanner and Lived in Newark—John McElvaney Was His Name—Gave His Age as Sixty-three Years.

He was only another example of broken-down manhood, wrecked by drink, but he was human. It was cold and drear in the white-washed cell over at the rookery where he spent the night, and his thin-worn garments offered little resistance to the chill that penetrated to his very bones.

"Judge," he said, as he hobbled into the dingy little courtroom at the rookery Saturday, and his voice trembled with earnestness. "If you'll only let me go, I'll leave town at once."

"It was drink that did it all, your honor. I had the cramps so bad yesterday and I took a glass of rum. And Judge," he laughed a weak little laugh, "When that stuff gets inside me I don't know what I do. But I'll go way, Judge, and won't trouble you any more."

He wore an old pair of blue overalls, a ragged shirt and a blue vest that had buttons on it matched with the initials "D. D. W." He carried and old cutaway coat, of the style of ten years ago, over his arm. His face was red and blotched and showed the traces of intemperance.

In response to the queries of Judge DeMeza, he told his little story. He had been a tanner and currier by trade and had managed to make a living at it. Then the "old woman" died, and his manner told that with her went all his hopes and ambitions, and since then he had been plying the trade of a wandering umbrella mender.

He was sixty-three years of age. John McElvaney was his name. He and his wife had lived in Newark until her death. Since then he had no home.

Patrolman Vanderweg had found him in a drunken stupor, lying in a barn. It was a common occurance with him, seeking comfort in drink. His frame, weakened by old age and excesses, was giving way. He had nothing to live for. His manhood was not all dead, however, for it rebelled at the thought of going to the county jail, a common vagrant. He had a little money, not much, but it would suffice to take him away from here.

The Judge listened to the story. There was nothing to be gained by sending the man to jail. If he would leave town, the ends of justice would be accomplished.

"Sentence suspended," said the Judge.

"The blessings of God be on you," returned the prisoner, and he salaamed low before the local magistrate. Then court was declared over for the morning.

TO EDUCATE COLORED ORPHANS.

A Colored Preacher Solicits Alms in the Baptist Churches.

Rev. R. H. Johnson, an aged colored preacher from Brooklyn, was present in the First and the Park Avenue Baptist churches Sunday morning soliciting alms for the running expenses of a home in Brooklyn for the care and education of colored orphan children. At the First Baptist church he made his plea at the session of the Sunday-school and received about $4. At the Park Avenue church church he was given an opportunity to present his cause after the morning sermon, and received a generous contribution from the congregation.

Rev. Mr. Johnson was familiar to many members of both churches, as he has been in this city several times on a similar mission. The institution which he represents is a worthy one and Plainfield people seemed anxious to help him.

Quick Payment of Insurance.

A short time ago the Rev. F. W. Ralkes, a member of Erie Lodge, No. 736, Knights of Honor, died at Dunkirk, N. Y., and in ten days from the time of death Mrs. Ralkes, who since moved to North Plainfield, received a check from Senate Lodge, No. 3,512, Knights of Honor, of this city. Immediately after death the matter was referred to the Supreme Lodge at St. Louis, and they in turn communicated with the Plainfield lodge. The committee from the Plainfield lodge, consisting of T. C. Smith, J. R. Phillips, J. H. VanMiddlesworth and R. A. Frey, having the matter in charge, duly turned over to Mrs. Ralkes the $2,000, who was much pleased at the quickness in which the business was transacted.

Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt Wooley, son and daughters, of Middlebush, Somerset county, spent Sunday at the home of G. Q. Dolliver, Fairview avenue.

TABOO CAPS AND BADGES

C TY EXPRESSMEN MUST HAVE NO DISTINCTIVE MARKS.

New Orders Issued by the Central Railroad of New Jersey Against the Baggage Handlers at the Depot.

The local expressmen who have headquarters at the North Avenue station are incensed over a recent order which they received from the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The new order is that the expressmen must remove their caps and badges and wear ordinary hats. One of the expressmen is responsible for the issuance of the order, and, of course, the others feel indignant that they should suffer on his account.

A few days ago a woman arrived at the station from out of town. She looked about for the baggagemaster to have a trunk re-checked to Fanwood. It happened that neither he or his assistant were in sight, as they were busy with baggage. In the doorway near the baggage office stood one of the local expressmen. He had on a cap and badge and the woman thought he worked for the company. She asked him to check her trunk to Fanwood, and at the same time handed him her check. The expressman took the trunk to the office of the United States Express Company, and from there it was sent to Fanwood. The expressman received 25 cents for his work, it is said, and the express company charged 15 cents for sending the trunk to Fanwood.

Everything went smoothly until the woman's husband learned that it cost 45 cents to have that trunk sent so short a distance. He thereupon made a vigorous kick to the railroad company, which resulted in the order being issued which compels the local expressmen to take off their caps and badges. It is said that the railroad company is thinking seriously of establishing a branch of the New York Transfer Company in this city, and in case that is done the local expressmen will suffer to a great extent, for they will not be allowed the privileges they now enjoy in earning a living.

PARSONAGE DOOR BELL.

A WITTY LECTURE DELIVERED BY A DUNELLEN PASTOR.

At a Church Sociable Rev. E. S. Jamison Wove Around the Subject an Interesting Story of Ministerial Experiences.

The parsonage door bell is an ordinary looking object and apparently devoid of interest to any except those who use it as a means of obtaining access to the pastor's house, yet Rev. E. S. Jamison, of the Methodist Episcopal church, wove around it Friday a story of ministerial experiences, replete with wit and humor, all hinging upon this insignificant object, the parsonage door bell.

The lecture was rich in incidents, many of them, perhaps, personal experiences, and kept the audience laughing continually. Dr. Jamison did not hesitate to ridicule the members of his own profession occasionally, and whenever the point to the story was a parson's slip, the speaker gave the audience the full benefit of the joke without sparing the minister.

The lecture was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of that church and the programme also included music and a literary selection. Those who took part were the youngest members of the church, and all did exceedingly well. Ice cream and cake were for sale at the close, and the ladies made quite a sum.

The programme opened with quartette singing by Miss Emma Apgar, Miss Mildred Gaskill, A. R. Apgar and W. W. Walters. There was a soprano solo by Miss Mabel Jamison, a recitation by Miss Lulu Gise, and a duet by Miss Mabel and Miss Ethel Jamison.

Part second began with a duet sung by Miss Jessie Haynes and J. E. Low. Another solo by Miss Mabel Jamison, and singing by a male quartette, composed of A. R. Apgar, W. W. Walters, J. C. Apgar and Raymond Apgar, closed the entertainment. Miss Estella Sofield was the accompanist.

All the selections were well rendered, and the audience enjoyed the programme as was attested by their hearty applause. Miss Haynes and Mr. Low were encored and so was Miss Jamison. The Misses Jamison have but recently connected themselves with the church and their voices, full of sweetness and power, are a valuable addition to the congregation. Miss Mabel Jamison is the leading soprano in one of the churches in Rahway, and sings there every Sunday. It is the intention of the ladies to give another and much more elaborate entertainment in the fall.

In Trinity's Pulpit.

Rev. Carlos Martyn, D. D., of New York, who last August so ably supplied the pulpit of Trinity Reformed church during the vacation of Rev. Dr. Schenck, has again been secured by Elder J. P. Laire, chairman of the supply committee, to preach both morning and evening next month, during the absence of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Schenck.

WON HIS SUCCESS THRO' HARD WORK.

Sketch of Career of Lucius R. Finch, of Plainfield.

ENERGETIC AND UPRIGHT.

BORN A POOR BOY, BUT WON WEALTH AND POWER.

He Became a Power in the New York Exchanges and Won For Himself the Title of "The Grand Old Man"—Interesting Incidents in His Life Given in the Accompanying Sketch.

With the burial of Lucius R. Finch, of Park avenue, in New Haven Friday morning, the business world of New York city has lost an able representative. Like so many men prominent in the business world, as well as in the professions and the trades, Mr. Finch was born a poor boy, but by an energetic and upright life made his name a power in the New York exchanges, and won for himself the title of "The Grand Old Man."

Large and massive, with a physique of unusual vitality and strength, a childlike sympathy for all mankind, and a strong love for his God, his religion and everything good, he well deserved the title and wore his honors with as little display of vanity as could be expected from one of his popularity and extensive acquaintance.

Mr. Finch was born in Woolcott, Conn., March 19th, 1813, and at his death was in his eighty-sixth year. Woolcott was at that time a small country village, and remains in much the same condition today. When Mr. Finch was about sixteen or eighteen years of age he moved to New Haven, where he immediately set himself up in business as a contractor. One of his first contracts was the building of the railroad from Albany to Schenectady, in New York State This was the first railroad built between the two places, and nearly the first one built in New York State.

Mr. Finch was a hustler from boyhood, and to this quality is attributed much of his success in life. He was always the first to go to work and often the last to quit at night. He was a strict temperance man, and used to offer his men higher wages to tempt them to abstain from drinking whiskey while in his employ. His example was such a good one that his men were forced to follow it, and in this way employes were generally the best workmen to be had, which meant more business for Mr. Finch.

While still a young man, not having reached his majority, he joined the Methodist church in New Haven, and attended services faithfully in churches of that denomination until a short time before his death.

When about twenty-two Mr. Finch was married to a Miss Charlotte Turner, of Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, who was considered the most handsome woman in that part of the State. The couple lived happily together up to sixteen years ago when she died.

While still a young man Mr. Finch organized the firm of Finch & Barnes, in New Haven, and did an immense business in the grocery trade. He also founded the Second National Bank there, and with the assistance of ex-Governor Morgan, of Connecticut, procured its charter. Mr. Finch succeeded in getting a law passed to permit banks to hold their surplus in money, instead of investing it in real estate, as was then the usual way.

In 1855 Mr. Finch came to New York and founded another firm of commission merchants known as Finch & Hill, to do business in conjunction with the New Haven firm. Both Messrs. Barnes and Hill are dead. He rapidly became a prominent figure on the exchanges, and could remember when a half a dozen men would gather together on the corner of Broad and South streets, instead of meeting in one of the costly exchanges.

Mr. Finch was a member of the Produce Exchange. He was intimately acquainted with many of New York's best known business men, all of whom are expressing sorrow at his death. Among his most intimate friends might be mentioned P. C. Claxton, the first president of the Fourth National Bank in New York.

Upon the death of his wife, Mr. Finch came to this city and took up his residence with his son, Edward L. Finch, of Park avenue. He continued to commute regularly until within a year past, although he retired from active business several years ago. Recently his health had been failing slowly, but he had no real disease, and the physicians said that death was due to a general breakdown of the system consequent upon old age. His fine physique was what kept him up, and it was his superior bodily strength that enabled him to live beyond his three score years and ten and pass the four score mark.

Many anecdotes are related of Mr Finch by his friends in New York. It is said that he was the first one to mix flour and water together to test the flour as to its soundness, a thing that now is done by every flour merchant all over the land. He was among the first ones to make the trip to New Orleans after sugar and molasses, and it is to Mr. Finch's keen foresight that Mr. Hartshorn, of Saratoga, proprietor of the famous spring there, owes his wealth. Mr. Finch suggested that he fence in his spring and charge each person drinking 5 cents Mr. Hartshorn did it and is today worth thousands. Mr. Finch was very fond of Lake George and Saratoga, and used to spend much of his time at one or the other. Mr. Finch was a Republican, but always voted for the best man.

Mr. Finch leaves two sons, Henry, T., of Brooklyn, an insurance broker and Edward L., of this city.

The funeral services were held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the house, Rev. W. C. Snodgrass, of the First Methodist church, officiating assisted by Rev. E. M. Bodman, of Grace Episcopal church. The services were very simple, in accordance with a request made by the deceased, and interment was in the plot at New Haven this morning.

ATTACKED BY FLIES.

MISS VAN NEST WAS COMPELLED TO RETURN TO ESCAPE THEM.

A Swarm of Large Horse Flies Caused Trouble Near Martinville—They Voraciously Attacked a Horse—Horses Suffer.

Those who have been driving in the mountains back of Bound Brook this summer have reported an unusual preponderance of horse flies. These large flies attack the horses with great voracity and nervous animals are nearly driven wild by them.

Friday Miss Van Nest, of Craig place, had an encounter with a swarm of them and was compelled to turn back. She was bound for Martinville to visit relatives when a large number of these flies, some of which were fully an inch in length, appeared and attacked her horse.

The animal refused to go forward and became frantic with the stings of the insects. They gathered in a great swarm on the horses back and head. The horse tried to turn about but Miss Van Nest attempted to go on. The attacks of the flies were so fierce, however, that she was at length compelled to turn about and return. After she left that neighborhood, the flies disappeared.

Already several runaways have been caused in that section through the irritation of the horses by the attacks of the horse flies. The horses of the natives seem to suffer as badly as those who visit there.

PEACEMAKER IN JAIL.

He Escaped Without Fine, While the Others Paid for Their Fun.

They quarreled. Ed. Corrigan tried to soothe their ruffled spirits. The police came and took them all away. The combatants and peacemaker languished in jail Saturday night. Sunday morning City Judge DeMeza gave them a hearing. Thomas F. Keenan and James Smith were given a choice between a fine of $3 and ten days in the county jail. Although the times are hard, freedom had its attractions. Corrigan escaped punishment, for the Judge suspended sentence.

Patrick O'Connor would not harm anybody except himself. He partook too freely and did the borough. Then he came over into Plainfield with a like intent. He soon ran afoul of the police, however. He kept the other three company amid the creeping and crawling things that hold carnival at the rookery. Yesterday morning the City Judge suspended sentence on him.

Another Picnic.

The postponed picnic of Miantonomo tribe of Red Men was held again Saturday evening with much success. This is the second time it has been held and the promoters are so much satisfied with the general results that they are considering the advisability of postponing it again and holding another picnic. Financially, it was a decided success and so prompts further efforts. There were nearly four hundred present at Mountain Park Grove where it was held and all enjoyed a pleasant evening. The same committee as before was in charge.

How to Kill a Church.

The Mt. Olive Baptist church was largely attended last evening to listen to Pastor Jackson deliver a sermon from the theme entitled "The Fourteen Ways of Killing a Church." The sermon was listened to with marked attention and enjoyed by all. The pastor held a secret men's meeting at 4:30 o'clock, immediately after the Sunday-school, in which the brethren all were present and took part. The nature of it is unrevealed, but all who attended came out with a smile.

—Street Commissioner Gavett was kept busy Saturday staking out the lines for the location of the surface drainage pipes on Plainfield avenue and West Front street.

THE PURE FOOD LAW WILL BE ENFORCED.

State Authorities Find Many Preparations Adulterated.

ARRESTS WILL BE MADE.

ARRANGEMENT TO TEST THE FOODS TAKEN AS SAMPLES.

Food Law of the State Covers All Sorts of Food Adulterations, and Offenders Will be Looked After Now—General Crusade Will be Inaugurated by Dairy Commissioner Maguire.

For many years complaints have been heard in New Jersey of the immense amount of adulterated foods that have been in use, and from the findings of the State Dairy Commissioner during the past two months it is evident the complaints were well founded. Out of 109 samples of cream of tartar collected in the State, 48 were found to be adulterated; 14 out of 18 samples of catsup were found to be impure; 28 out of 37 samples of honey were adulterer; 6 out of 19 samples of molasses were adulterated. This is only the result of a quiet little investigation that was being carried on by Dairy Commissioner Maguire preparatory to beginning a general crusade against the dealers who are foisting impure goods on the New Jersey public.

The food laws of New Jersey have been so formed as to cover all sorts of food adulterations. Experts consider that the laws are very good ones. But they have so far been inoperative because of a lack of facilities to carry them out. The State Board of Health has determined to make it a part of the State Dairy Commissioners duty to look after the adulterers of food as well as the adulterers of milk and butter, and from now on Commissioner Maguire will be on the lookout for violators of the food laws.

At the State House a permanent laboratory is now being fitted up, and when it is completed Shippen Wallace, the State chemist, will make his headquarters there and devote his entire time to his duties as a State officer. In the past all chemical analyses were made by Dr. Wallace at his home in Burlington, or by Dr. Drisler in Newark. Once in a great while an analysis was made by Prof Cornwell, of Princeton.

It has been found that the establishing of a Daily Inspection in the State has almost entirely rid the State of adulterated milk and butter. Of course there is some of the natural work still going on of giving to the public impure articles in the dairy line, but during the months of May and June last past, 214 samples of milk were tested and but two were found below the required standard. During the same period, out of 41 samples of butter tested 38 were found pure and all the samples of oleomargarine, cheese and lard tested were found pure.

As soon as the laboratory is established in the State House, the department will not only go into the examination of food in a wholesale way, but will also take up the examination of drugs.

CONDUCTORS LAID OFF.

Central Man Take an Unexpected Vacation—Cause of it Unknown.

Some changes were made last Saturday by the Central Railroad Company in the conductors on the passenger trains. Bert Hyser, who had charge of an Easton train, was laid off, while Mr. Jeffery, conductor on a Philadelphia train, and Mr. Brokaw, who had a Somerville run, has been treated the same way. Reasons for this action have not yet been learned. All three men were popular and have been in the service for some time.

A Soldier's Complaint.

Rutherford Hayes Daley, of Manning avenue, who recently enlisted and is now located at Fort Hancock, spent Sunday with his wife on Manning avenue. While at home Mr. Daley related some incidents in connection with affairs at Fort Hancock. He says the soldiers are fed exceedingly poor. The morning breakfast, he says, consists of a piece of fat pork the size of a business card, a cup of black coffee, without milk, and a piece of hardtack.

Couldn't Survive the Operation.

Sunday morning occurred the death of Pearl Amermen, nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Amermen, of 17 Stone street, in the borough, and the parents have the sympathy of a host of friends and acquaintances in their severe loss and bereavement. An operation was performed on the daughter a few days ago which proved to be unsuccessful. The end came quietly and peaceful yesterday morning.

To Pray for Brave Boys.

The Royal Santiago Circle, Mothers of American Protectors, will hold a prayer and praise service this evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mrs. W. J. Ford, 222 East Fourth street, near Watchung avenue. The subject will be "Consolation," and Mrs. Seeley Edsall will lead the meeting.

FIREMAN STRUCK BY OVERHEAD BRIDGE.

Probably Fatal Accident Near Belle Meade.

DID NOT SEE THE BRIDGE.

FRED KORNAU WAS DASHED FROM THE TENDER BY THE BLOW.

The Accident Was Witnessed By Foreman Higgins, of the Section Gang—The Injured Man Was Found Face Downward in a Pool of Water—The Victim Taken to Muhlenberg Hospital.

It is a beautiful country, that part of New Jersey that the Bound Brook division of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad runs through. Although Fred Kornau, of Wayne Junction, has been a fireman on that line for nearly a year, he looked about him with admiration as he climbed upon the tank in the tender to engine No. 623 Friday morning. He straightened up and forgot for the moment where he was. It was a fatal moment. The next one of the bottom beams to the overhead bridge east of Belle Meade struck him in the back of the skull, and what a moment before was a type of physical manhood, now lay crushed and bleeding beside the tracks.

The accident occurred at 8:15 o'clock as near as the crew could tell, for nobody stopped to look at their watches. Engine No. 623, one of the camel back type of the P. and R. engines, was drawing a train of six flat cars, loaded with ballast, and a combination smoker and baggage car, which was occupied by the Belle Meade section gang, John Higgins, of Belle Meade, is the foreman. They had taken the ballast cars at Hopewell and were bound for the Port Reading crossing where some work was to be done. The train was in charge of Conductor William Callahan, of Trenton. C. W. Meek, of Philadelphia, now boarding at Trenton, was the engineer.

Foreman Higgins was standing at the door of the car occupied by his gang when he saw Fireman Kornau climb over to the tender. Then the bridge came in sight but the fireman did not notice it. The string of rope "eat tails" that dangle to warn brakemen of the approaching bridge, passed over his head when he straightened up. Kornau is a tall powerful built man, standing over six feet in height.

Higgins saw the beam strike him. He uttered a cry and then pitched headlong into the tender. When they stopped and came back, they found him unconscious, lying face downward in a pool of water beside the track. He was lifted into the baggage car and taken to Bound Brook. The back of his skull was cut open and it is feared that the skull was fractured.

At Bound Brook, Dr. Fisher was summoned and examined the injured man. He recommended that he be taken to Muhlenberg Hospital in Plainfield at once. He feared the injury was fatal. The ballast cars were left at Bound Brook and Kornau was buried to this city. The ambulance was summoned and the man taken to the hospital. He was still unconscious.

Fred Kornau lives at Wayne Junction where his father is foreman of a section gang. He is unmarried. He will be twenty-two years old next month. He has been working on the Trenton section for nearly a year.

Cure Constipation

and you cure its consequences. These are some of the consequences of constipation: Biliousness, loss of appetite, pimples, sour stomach, depression, coated tongue, nightmare, palpitation, cold feet, debility, dizziness, weakness, backache, vomiting, jaundice, piles, pallor, stitch, irritability, nervous headache, torpid liver, heartburn, foul breath, sleeplessness, drowsiness, hot skin, cramps, throbbing head.

Ayer's Pills

Are a Sure Cure for Constipation

Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills are a specific for all diseases of the liver, stomach, and bowels.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. After vainly trying various remedies, I began to take Ayer's Pills. Two boxes effected a complete cure."

D. BURKE, Saco, Me.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural action."

WM. H. DELAUCETT, Dorset, Ont.

THE PILL THAT WILL.

A YOUTHFUL SOLDIER.

CHRIS. SORENSEN, JR., SEVENTEEN YEARS OLD, ENLISTS.

Begged His Father to Give Him Permission and Finally Succeeded in Getting It—In Fourth Regiment Band.

Plainfield has furnished one of the youngest soldiers in the present war. He is seventeen years of age, but as valorous as any in the ranks. His youthfulness only serves to bring out bolder the patriotism which he has shown in a desire to serve his country. The name of this brave little American is Chris. Sorensen, Jr.

It was a dramatic scene a few days ago when this youngster, but a short time out of his knickerbockers, approached his father—a veteran of the civil war—and asked for his permission to enlist. The boy suspicioned that his father would be reluctant to give his consent, and it was as he expected. The son met with a reception for his cherished desire that boded it ill success if he had not been of a determined disposition.

Young Sorensen was engaged in the rather unsentimental employment of chopping wood when he decided that the opportune time had arrived for him to ask his father the important question. He dropped his axe, adjourned to the woodshed where his father was engaged, and broached the subject.

"No, no! You go back to chopping wood, young man. You're too young to go to war," said the senior Sorensen.

"Oh, father, why won't you let me go. You know you went to war when you were a boy, and why can't I go while I am a boy. I'll probably never have a chance again." It was said with tears welling in the eyes of the boy.

The father was on the point of reiterating his former statement when he hesitated in a half-perplexed and half-reminiscent manner, and then said:

"Well, all right, you can go."

And suiting action to the word, he took a lead pencil, got a piece of paper, and wrote:

"I hereby give permission for my son, Chris. Sorensen, Jr., aged seventeen years, to enlist in the army.

"Chris Sorensen."

The next day the young patriot was on his way to Sea Girt where in a short time he had undergone his examinations and been admitted as a member of the Fourth Regiment and assigned as a member of the band. For several years past young Sorensen has been musically inclined and has shown marked ability playing an alto horn. Since the organization of the Queen City Band he has been a member of it.

In a letter received from him Thursday he expressed a great delight with life at Camp Voorhees, and relates some of his experiences in camp. He is the youngest soldier now quartered there.

MUSTANG'S WILD RUN.

Frightened Youngster Was Trailed Along in the Wagon.

B. C. Firstbrook's horse ran away Thursday morning from in front of a house on West Sixth street, just in the rear of the car house. Firstbrook is a baker and he lives on Liberty street. He was delivering bread, and left his horse, which is a nervous mustang, untied. His little brother, Clinton, six years old, sat in the wagon holding the horse.

Something startled the animal and in a moment he was running down Sixth street at full speed. He turned into Grant avenue, ran as far as Fourth, turned in that street, and was caught by D. F. Stewart, of John street, in front of Hope chapel.

Little Clinton was badly frightened and was screaming loudly when the horse was caught. No damage was done to the rig, and Firstbrook soon ran up and drove the horse away.

Picnicked in the Evening.

The members of Warren Engine Company held a successful picnic last Friday at Mountainside Park Grove. There were about three hundred people present. The committee in charge did all in their power to make the event one of pleasure. The crowd was orderly and everything passed off quietly. Music for dancing was furnished by O'Reilly. A nice profit will be realized by the company after the bills are paid.

To Put in Steam Heat.

Edward White, the dry goods merchant, has awarded to D. J. Galbraith the contract for putting the steam-heating apparatus in his large store on West Front street. Before Mr. White took possession of his new store he used hot air for heating. Now he is having his entire building fitted with pipes and radiators. All three floors will be heated this way.

Mr. Honeyman's Tourists.

Mr. Honeyman's English party has been heard from in North Devon, England, where they had coached to Clonelly in perfect weather. They describe that spot as the most romantic in England. They were then proceeding to the English Lakes and all were well.

Mark Doud, of Fort Hancock, spent Saturday and Sunday with his parents in the borough.

TORRENTS OF WATER FLOOD THE STREETS.

A Severe Storm of Wind and Rain Thursday Night.

LIGHTNING WAS INCESSANT

SOME STREETS WERE FLOODED FROM CURB TO CURB.

The Storm of Last Night Was of Unusual Severity—Some Damage Reported—Green Brook Rose to the Top of Its Banks—Business Section Saw Much Water—Danger to Bridges.

Some daring weather prognosticator remarked that it was going to be cool Shursday. He probably owes his life to the fact that he does not live in this section. It was not cool. It was hot. Late in the afternoon the clouds began to gather and a day of exceptional warmth promised to end with a violent storm.

During the hours and silence of the day the elements seemed to have gathered strength for a terrific display of their power in the storm that swept over this section just at sundown. There was plenty of notice of the arrival of the shower. For two hours the clouds rolled up from the northwest and marshalled their forces.

It opened softly but soon the big drops were followed by a heavy downpour. Then the rain came in sheets and the accompanying gale tore into shreds and dashed along. The wind became almost a tornado in violence. The electrical forces were unusally active. The lightning was incessant and blinding, while the thunder rolled and crashed in never ceasing accompaniment.

While the rain lasted the downpour was remarkably heavy. There might just as well have been no gutters or storm sewers. In the business section of the city the water filled the streets from curb to curb. Park avenue was a raging torrent, while Front street was not much better. Under the railroad bridges great lakes were formed that extended up the streets for many feet on either side.

Green brook rose to the top of its banks and threated to overflow. At Tier's dam there was a mighty volume of water rushing over it. Down on Elm place, the water flooded the street and ran into some of the yards. Pedestrians had to wade or go across lots.

Other streets were flooded during the worst of the rain. The dirt and sand was washed from the macadam surface and the stones were left bare.

During the heavy thunder storm of Thursday the handsome house recently purchased by W. G. Delameter on Kimball avenue, in Westfield, was struck by lightning and caught fire. The fire alarm was sounded and, although the rain was coming down in torrents, the firemen responded promptly and the flames were soon extinguished. The loss is about $50 and is fully covered by insurance. When the fire bell rang the biggest part of the male population of the town turned out thinking that the firebug had paid another visit to the town, and that this time he might accomplish what he started out to do Monday morning and burn the whole town down.

The chimney of the house, 407 West Second street, blew off in the storm Thursday and frightened the people inside the house considerably. No further damage was done.

Lightning struck in Stony Brook, in the vicinity of Greenbrook road and Grove street, attracted a large number of people. The water completely covered the bridge and the current was very strong. At one time it looked as though the bridge would be carried away.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.

A Special Feature Will be Business Addresses of Commuters.

The Wand Company has decided to issue a city directory for Plainfield and North Plainfield, having acquired the rights and business of H. H. Baker, the veteran directory publisher. The Wand Company is one of the most enterprising directory publishers in the metropolitan district and are capable of getting up such a directory as Plainfield has long needed. J. B. Wand, a member of the firm, is in the city now and will supervise the work. Canvassers will be put to work immediately and the book will be issued in the fall. A special feature of the directory will be the New York business addresses of commuters.

Keeps Too Many Ducks.

A West Front street resident has aroused the indignation of his neighbors by keeping a large number of ducks which run about his yard and keep up an incessant cackling. It is understood that a complaint has been made to the Board of Health about the nuisance and that some action will be taken soon. The same man also keeps goats and this is also claimed to be a nuisance. As the man lives near the centre of the city it is not to be wondered at that complaints have been made.

POLICE RAIDED FULL FLEDGED CRAP GAME.

Roundsman Flynn Went in By a Window.

PLAYERS FINED IN COURT.

GAME WAS GOING ON IN THE HOUSE OF ALBERT CHAMPION.

A Hurried Scattering of the Gamblers When the Cop Appeared—One Hid Under a Bed and Another Jumped Into a Lot of Paper Under the Stairway—It Was a Very Clever Capture.

It was just before 2 o'clock Thursday morning. Sergeant Kiely, Roundsman Flynn and Patrolman Vanderweg picked their way cautiously along Madison avenue between Front and Second streets. They halted in front of the story and a half building occupied by Albert Champion as a barber shop. From one of the upper windows, setting snugly under the eaves, the faintest glimmer of light fought its way into the outer darkness. The officers halted. When they spoke it was in whispers. For a minute they stood quietly. And then through the air came floating the faint sound of ivory disks beating a merry tattoo against the inside of a leather cup.

"Hist, be quiet, men," cautioned the corpulent sergeant.

"We've got 'em dead to rights, boys," ventured the roundsman in a familiar manner. "It's craps, sure enough."

"Happened, yes, but not pinched," added the patrolman.

"Yes, but we'll get 'em," the sergeant replied. "Come on around this way"

And then three officers disappeared through the narrow alley between Champion's little domicile and the building on the corner of Second street and Madison avenue. If any one had been near they would have seen Roundsman Flynn lay hold of the roof and his two brother officers give him a lift. A moment later the Roundsman was tip-toeing up the slanting roof to a window which invited a favorable entrance for the officer. Meantime the two officers were effecting an entrance through a door on the first floor.

"Come seben, come eleben, bully boy, ah h h h."

That from the interior of the house. It was the opportune time.

With one bound Roundsman Flynn went through the window. His appearance was not expected. But Champion was ready for it. The lamp, made especially for midnight sessions of this sort, was snuffed in a twinkling. And all was darkness. There was the sound of shuffling feet and hurried movements, denoting a sudden desire to evacuate the house on the part of those who had been deeply engaged but a moment before in speculating on the number of spots the little disks would turn up.

"No use to run, boys, we've got you," advised Flynn.

He struck a match and lit the lamp again. Lo and behold there was but Champion standing alone. The others had fled in terror. A hunt was instituted for them. Joe Carter was nearly suffocated under a bed. He was hauled out, grinning ferociously. Albert Butler was found secreted in a pile of paper under the stairway, puffing hard.

In the morning they were lined up in front of Judge DeMeza in the rookery. They all admitted the corn. Champion was fined $15 and warned that if he ever came before the court again on the same charge he would be sent to the county jail. Butler was fined $8, and Carter $5.

Another crap shooter, who was not caught in the act of playing, but who was seen to leave Champion's place a short time before the raid was made, was Charlie Ward. Charlie was arrested, too, and admitted that he made "a couple of passes." He has been before the court before on the same charge, and as a result he is $8 poorer today.

CHILDREN ROB GRAVES.

Evergreen Cemetery Graves are Stripped of Flowers by Vandals.

Abram Henry, one of the grave diggers in Evergreen Cemetery, on Plainfield avenue, is having much trouble with flower thieves. All the graves in the cemetery, which are carefully cared for and planted with flowers and plants, are sought out by these vandals and stripped of all ornaments in the floral line.

Although Henry is in charge of the cemetery, he cannot be in all parts of it at once, and while his back is turned the boys and girls get in and proceed to help themselves to all the flowers in sight. If this continues the graves will be neglected after a while because it will be known that none are sacred from spoliation.

Fell and Broke Her Arm.

Mrs. Peter P. Robinson, of Short Hills, fell down stairs at her home Thursday night during the shower and broke her arm. It was set Friday morning.

TWICE HAS LIGHTNING HIT PHOEBUS' HOUSE

Last Experience Occurred During Tuesday's Storm.

SIDE OF HOUSE TORN OFF.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD CHILD PARALYZED BY THE SHOCK.

Lightning Struck a Large Tree and Branched Off to Strike the Dwelling House With Disastrous Results—The Child Has Entirely Recovered—Four Dogs Killed Outright by Shock.

F. C. Phoebus, of Clinton avenue, has had more experiences with lightning within the past few years than he cares for. Twice has his house been struck by lightning, and some member of his household rendered unconscious as the result.

His last experience occurred Tuesday July 19th. During the heavy shower a large tree in front of his house was struck, and the bolt, glancing towards the house, tore off the entire east end and a part of the roof, then ran down and along the cellar ceiling until it reached the dining room, where it tore away part of the floor and paralyzed a four-year-old son of Mr. Phoebus' who was playing with two other children.

The tree was shattered and cut in half. The bolt seemed to follow the trunk from the top down to within several feet of the ground when it shot off in another direction and entered the house.

Mrs. Phoebus and her children were alone in the house at the time, and there was no one to attend to the little fellow except his mother. The shock and paralysis only lasted a short time. No other member of the family was hurt, although Mrs. Phoebus was very nervous and excited when her husband returned. The damage done to the house is very conspicuous, and can be seen very plainly from the outside.

The shock killed a litter of four collies which were in a kennel outside of the house.

Mr. Phoebus' first experience was two years ago. He was living at Greenbrook then, and his house was struck, disabling him and a colored workman just as it did his son, Tuesday. Both recovered. A lot of chickens were killed that time.

CLAIM STILL GOOD.

Debtor Was Out of the State so Eight-Year Debt is Now Being Sued For.

Murphy & Blatz, the lawyers, have brought suit against John A. Murphy, a butcher, doing business in the west end, for George W. Eddy, another butcher. The suit is for $500 and is brought in the Circuit Court. The papers have been served.

The $500 claim is on a note which Murphy gave to Eddy in December, 1889. The note was for twelve months, and covered a book account. When the note became due, Murphy did not take it up, and soon afterwards moved out of the State. Since nearly eight years have passed since December 1890, when the note became due, it would ordinarily be outlawed as the statue of limitations in New Jersey runs for six years only. But in the absence of the debtor the statute ceases to run, therefore it is lawful to sue him upon his return. It is on these grounds that Eddy's lawyers bring the suit.

MACADAMIZING SANDFORD AVENUE.

The Residents Pay for the Material and City Furnishes The Labor.

In macadamizing Sandford avenue, Street Commissioner Gavett says that nearly all the property holders have arranged to have the macadamizing extended from curb to curb. This additional macadamizing is being done at a cost of 10 cents a running foot which only pays for the stone, the city furnishing the labor gratis.

Nearly all the lots on Sandford avenue are 60-foot fronts, so that the cost to each property holder is $6. When this street is finished it will make one of the finest streets in the city, with its nice houses, fine shade trees and smooth, level roadbed.

Westervelt avenue will be taken next. It is hoped that the property holders on this street will undertake the same work, and many of them have signified their intention of doing so.

Leading Around the Y. M. C. A.

Notices have been posted in the Y. M. C. A. warning certain young men who have been in the habit of sitting on the steps of the building in front and smoking, that such conduct is not conducive to the well being of the association and that it must stop. It is hoped that they will take the hint.

What a Cheaper Fare.

Concerning the trolley fare between Somerville and Bound Brook The Somerset Democrat, this week, very aptly says: "10 cents is too much to pay for a trolley ride to Bound Brook. It should be 5 cents. The trolley company would carry more passengers and make more money if they would reduce the fare to 5 cents."

GROCERS ARE ACTIVE.

STATE ASSOCIATION MET AT MOUNTAIN PARK INN.

New Associations to be Organized Throughout the State—Proprietary Brands to be Controlled by Association

The semi-annual meeting of the New Jersey Grocers' Association was held at Mountain Park Inn July 20. There were about seventy delegates present. The session commenced at 10:30 o'clock in the morning and continued until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. At noon Manager Moulton provided one of his extra fine dinners for the delegates. Some were so well pleased that they remained at the Inn over night and returned next day. In spite of the warm weather there was a cool breeze on the mountain and the heat was not oppressive.

It was decided by the delegates that a special committee be appointed by the president to organize new associations in the towns and cities where there are none at present. The committee on insurance made a very satisfactory report, stating that at present there is about one million and a half insurance being carried by the company in the association.

The reports of the president, secretary and treasurer, were highly gratifying and showed a prosperous condition of the association. In the treasury there is a good balance, and a report of increase in membership was also made.

The trade interest committee reported that during the coming six months several new proprietary brands would be placed under the con*trol of the association. At present* there are a large number of brands of goods that are directly under the control of the organization. All of the other committees made excellent reports. Before the association adjourned a vote of thanks was extended to Manager Moulton, of the Inn, for his hospitality. The next meeting of the association will be held at Paterson.

LAWYER WILLIAMS SOLD OUT.

Other Legal Lights Had a Chance to Get Bargains.

Thursday afternoon the office furniture and law books of W. Gordon Williams were sold under attachment proceedings and a landlord's distress warrant. The parties interested were Mr. Veghte, a law book seller, of Somerville, who got out the attachment, and Craig A. Marsh, who claimed $72 for rent of the office. Mr. Veghte's claim was for $130.

The furniture and books were worth about $450 and brought about $120. Most of the books were bought in by Mr. Veghte, who also took the safe, worth $140, which only brought $39. George W. Moy, J. P. Runyon and Wm. G. DeMeza purchased some of the books. Counselor W. S. Angleman represented both Mr. Veghte and Mr. Marsh.

Old Folks' Concert.

Last Friday at the Fillmore Baptist church a very successful old folks' concert was given under the auspices of the church. The concert was arranged by and in charge of Mrs. Mary Thomas and Mrs. Ellen Randolph, while Miss Nora Williams presided at the piano. The young and old people of the church gave the concert which proved to be enjoyable to all present. Following the concert a short entertainment was given by those who gave the concert. There was a fair attendance and a goodly sum was realized for the benefit of the church.

Preaches in Two Languages.

At Coontown, just back of Washingtonville, there is only one church, and that is of the Methodist denomination. The village is composed of German and English speaking people, about half of each, and to accommodate both classes the pastor of the church, Rev. George Bowers, preaches in the morning in the German tongue and in the evening in English. In this way all the people are enabled to hear the gospel in a language which they understand.

For the Brave Boys.

The Royal Santiago Circle, Mothers of American Protectors, will hold a prayer and praise service Monday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Mrs. W. J. Ford, 222 East Fourth street. Subject: "Consolation"—Heb. 6: 18.

Invented a Scissors Sharpener.

Joseph VanArsdale, of Spooner avenue, has invented a device to sharpen scissors which he intends to have patented. Mr. VanArsdale is sixty-five years of age, and has been a machinist for a long while.

Frank Marsh Well.

LOAD OF HAY ON FIRE FROM NOVEL CAUSE.

Cyclist Collided With It, With Cigarette in His Mouth.

LOAD SOON ALL ABLAZE.

PLAINFIELD RIDER WHO DIDN'T SEE VERY CLEAR

James Patterson West Fell Mell into the Hay near Rahway and His Cigarette Set Fire to the Agriculturist's Product—Farmer Just Had Time To Save His Valued Team of Horses.

Strange and solemn was the procession that staggered through Westfield avenue, Rahway, July 20th. The advance guard was an elderly farmer, who was leading a pair of horses. The rear guard was a man in knickerbockers, trundling the wreck of a bicycle.

Each man was limping painfully. Each wore gloom in his face. It was evident from their behavior that diplomatic relations between them were strained. The remnants of a whiffletree, which trailed behind the horses, was blackened by fire. Back along the road lay a smouldering heap, all that was left of a fine wagon and a load of hay. From time to time the farmer muttered in his chin whiskers opprobrious remarks about bicyles and the smoking of "goah dasted cigarettes."

James Patterson's cigarette was, indeed, the cause of all the trouble. Patterson was scorching, from Elizabeth to his home in Plainfield, puffing away for dear life. As he turned into Westfield avenue, James Wilkin, of Cranford, drove his wagon out of an adjoining field into the road, and checked his horses in order to breathe them before they should pull his load of hay up the steep hill ahead of him.

It so happened that the smoke Patterson was blowing out of his nostrils obscured his vision. The front post of his bicycle struck the tail of the wagon with great force, and he took a header, cigarette and all, into the nice, fragrant hay.

When the scorcher had wriggled free he stood by the wreck of his machine, pulling wisps of hay from down his back, and said rude things to the farmer. Wilkin was responding in kind, when he noticed a spiral of blue smoke arising from the cavity which Patterson had made in his load. With a great outcry he whipped up his horses and drove the wagon into the roadside ditch, upsetting it, conceiving that this to be the only means of saving his property.

He himself was thrown headlong, spraining his knee, and before he could reach the fire, to pull away the uninjured part of the hay, a breeze had caught it and wreathed hay, wagon and all in flames.

EXCURSIONISTS HAD A GOOD TIME.

A Cool Breeze Lessened Excessive Heat at the Shore.

Those who went on the excursion Thursday to Asbury Park and Ocean Grove had a fine day along the shore. There was a cool ocean breeze which tempered the extreme heat and made the beach a comfortable place indeed.

When the train left here in the morning the fifteen cars were so crowded that another one was put on at Roselle. There were no accidents reported, and all had a good time. The terrific storm that came towards night overtook the excursionists near Elizabethport, and the entire run from the Port home was made in a heavy rain amid incessant flashes of lightning. At Plainfield the rain came down so hard that many of the people stayed in the cars or else made a run for the station, which was soon crowded. By 9 o'clock, however, the storm was over and they were able to get home.

The Hobson Grip.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Two prominent citizens of Nethermood engaged in a little argument in front of Emery's Hotel in Scotch Plains Friday night, that came near ending in blows. Bad words are said to have flown around like chaff, and had it not been for the interference of their friends, a disgraceful fight would have occurred.

While the repairs made to Park avenue under the railroad bridge may be in accordance with the best principles of road making, they certainly do not please the wheelmen of the city. There are numerous stones of fair size lying about the roadway that make wheeling there unpleasant and even dangerous at night. To one who is unaccustomed to the city, the stones are apt to be discovered through the agency of a tumble.

The sight of one of Uncle Sam's soldier boys in his blue regimentals is now attracting little or no attention. When the war first opened the sight of a blue coat caused many heads to turn but they are fast becoming frequent even here in Plainfield, and the soldier boy no longer is considered a great curiosity. He has, however, to answer a multitude of questions, considering everything that has happened, is likely to happen and of which there is not the slightest likelihood of happening. He is expected to know everything about the war or else his friends are greviously disappointed.

Not a day passes but there are several applications for work at the local factories, some times the applications amount up to over a score. Some of the men in search of work are from this city, others have been traveling about this section, meeting with refusals at every hand but still pressing on with the hope that the next one may result in steady work. While once in a while there is a vacancy that can be filled, most of the workmen are turned away. They include not only common laborers but skilled mechanics who ordinarily command high wages. They are now willing to work for almost anything that will keep body and soul together.

There are queer signs displayed in every city, which find their way into print, and Grand Rapids has its share, but the palm is yielded to the following, which has drifted in from the far East. Mrs. Marshal, an indigent widow, went into the laundry business on a small scale. She had her sign painted upon the shutters of her front window like this:

No I
Mrs. Mar shall La undress
All work punctually done
Open at 7 o'clock

See specimens in this window.

The next morning when she went out to see what caused the crowd in waiting there, she found that the left blind had been blown back by the wind and the sign hardly read as she meant it should, although it accounted for the presence of the crowd.—Herald, Grand Rapids.

Ann Ford, who was discharged this week after spending ninety days in the Union county jail, holds the record for time served in that institution. She has been sentenced fifty-eight times to terms of either sixty or ninety days, chiefly the latter, and the total time she has served would aggregate over eleven years. All her sentences have been for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Mrs. Ford is now about sixty-three years old. She was one of the pioneer settlers at Elizabethport. Her husband has been dead a number of years, and her oldest son, ashamed of his mother's habits, went to Montreal about fifteen years ago and now occupies a prominent position in the Singer Sewing Machine Works there. All of Ann's children have left Elizabethport, because of her intemperate habits, and all are doing well in other places. She still, however, retains some property in Elizabeth.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plain Soldiers Can Witness.

Sullivan's Troubadours continued their successful performance in Stillman Music Hall Tuesday. The programme was an entire different one from that presented Monday night and found as great favor with the audience. The shower weather had its effect on the size of the audience which was a little smaller than that of Monday night. Considering the night, however, the showing was good. Sullivan gave selections from "The Marble Heart" very satisfactorily. The performance closed with Nelson's farce comedy, "The Secret," a very laughable affair.

BALLINGTON BOOTH TELLS OF HIS WORK

Commander of the American Volunteers Makes an Address.

A VERY SMALL AUDIENCE.

THE VOLUNTEERS HAVE ACCOMPLISHED MUCH IN THEIR WAY.

Booth was at His Best Monday Night and Made a Very Interesting Address—Nothing Slow About the Volunteers—Serve Their Country as Well as Their God.—Religion in Brass Bands.

Commander Ballington Booth, of the American Volunteers, was present at the Y. M. C. A. hall Monday and delivered an address upon the work of the organization of which he is the head to a small audience. The Commander, tall and erect, and of prepossessing appearance, is no stranger to Plainfield people, having been present at meetings before in this city, but never have the people heard him present the cause more earnestly or been more charmed with him as a speaker than last night. He was at his best, and the words, flowing from his lips in well-rounded sentences, carried power and conviction with them.

The Commander was accompanied by the National staff band of eleven pieces. They played several selections before and during the progress of the meeting. Adjutant Taylor, who blows the "big horn," when called upon for a selection suggested that the Commander favor the audience with one on his Anglo-American harmonica, which he had with him, and after a few introductory remarks, the Commander complied. Rev. William C. O'Donnell then introduced Commander Booth, saying that the American people have been ready to applaud two things about the Volunteer Army. "First, the blending together of the flag of their country and the banner of their Redeemer; second, the gallant work of their Commander and his heroic wife. Commander Booth then spoke in part as follows:

"Love of God and love of country are two cardinal points in the working plans of the Volunteers. Whatever may be said, a Volunteer service always has something about it interesting alike to those inside and outside the ranks. In its character there is nothing slow, dry or morose, but warmth and energy are displayed everywhere.

"There is no idea in the Volunteer ranks to cease beating the drum, but continually is heard some voice calling sinners to repentance, and to step forward and accomplish something for God and their country. The time is coming when the people will realize that this movement is for the saving of the Nation. Today, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, can be found gallant bands of Volunteers marching beneath our standard.

"There are always some people of a prophetic nature who stand on the outskirts of a new movement and ask, 'Will it last?' This movement is still young, yet it is rapidly developing the latent power of the Christian churches of America. We believe in a real Christ, who left a real home to shed real blood and open the doors of a real heaven that we can enjoy eternally.

"The need of the nineteenth century is applied Christianity, Christianity brought down to the level of human life. The Volunteers call things by their real names, and even if some of the converts are rough and uncouth, when they stand before an audience and proclaim Christ, they are blessed.

"We believe in serving our country as well as our God. I was born in England, but haven't a drop of English blood in my veins. I have been in this country for twelve years, and any physician will tell you that a man loses his physical body every seven years. America is the country of my adoption. I believe in American government as the best government, in its laws, its civilization and its people, and I look upon it as the greatest country in the world today.

"I like the present attitude of this country. This is a holy war. We are fighting to liberate the poor Cubans. They will have a government of their own, yet annexed to the United States.

"I think if Christ should come to this earth he would do just what the Volunteers are doing. A great work is being done by them among the working classes. They are reaching people that cannot be touched in any other way. If God's work can be done with the aid of brass bands, let us use brass bands. If a church bell can call together the true hearted, ring the bells, but whatever the way, if it is for the glory of the Master, it is well."

Commander Booth referred to the different departments of his work in closing, particularly to that done by Mrs. Booth in the prisons, and during his discourse related many touching incidents of men saved by the power of God, and lifted out of the lowest depths into peace and rest. The members of the Plainfield post were out in full force, and the proceeds of the meeting went to their fund.

SWEDES WILL WORSHIP.

SWEDISH FREE CHURCH TO MEET IN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The Little Band Which Has Been Gathering in the W. C. T. U. Rooms Sunday Nights, to Hold Mid-week Service.

Some time ago a movement was started among some of the Swedish residents of this city looking toward the formation of a branch of the Swedish Free church in Plainfield. As a result, meetings have been held in the W. C. T. U. rooms Sunday evenings.

The National church in Sweden is the Lutheran church, but there are, nevertheless, many members of the Free church, which corresponds with the Congregational church, in this country. Recognizing the Congregational church as practically the same in religion and church government with themselves, the local branch has applied to the Congregational church of this city for permission to use their sanctuary.

Sunday morning a short meeting of the board of trustees of the Congregational church was held and the Swedes were granted the use of the lecture room Thursday evenings free of charge.

While many of the natives of Sweden residing in this city know enough English for business purposes, they are unable to fully appreciate a religious discourse, so they wish to have it delivered in their own tongue. Already Swedish Free churches have been established in Orange and Perth Amboy. It is now planned to form one here if possible.

The little gathering that has been meeting every Sunday evening in the W. C.T.U. rooms numbers about forty in all. According to the rules of the Union no collection can be taken up there except for the advancement of the work of temperance and missions. The followers of the Swedish faith have wished to raise a sufficient sum to enable them to hire a regular preacher to speak to them once a week in their mother tongue. Heretofore the meetings have been conducted by the members themselves.

The need of a mid-week meeting has been felt and the request to the Congregational church, which was granted, was a result of this feeling. At this meeting a collection will be taken up. It is hoped that the movement will soon gather sufficient strength to be able to have a minister of its own.

Case. The work has been done by hand and is of rare artistic excellence.

It Gets the News.

As a purveyor of war news, the Evening Post of New York leads all the evening newspapers of the metropolis. The strength and character of the Post's editorial utterances have long since won for that paper an international reputation. These strong features combine to make a newspaper which appeals irresistibly to intelligent people, and one that is truly representative of the highest type of American journalism. Together with cabled despatches concerning the latest happenings at the front, the Evening Post is printing a series of letters from staff correspondents describing in detail the work of our army in Santiago, which are exceedingly interesting and are well worth preserving as contemporaneous accounts of the various engagements preceding the fall of Santiago.

WHEELMEN, BEWARE!

CITY JUDGE AND POLICE WILL ENFORCE BICYCLE ORDINANCE.

George Gould, the Bicycle Dealer, Fined for Riding Without Light—Judge Says Wheelmen Must be More Careful.

Beware, wheelmen! Offend not the city ordinances for the City Judge and his keen allies, the police, are on your trail. In other words, the authorities of the city are getting tired of seeing the bicycle ordinance of the city frequently violated and City Judge De Meza has instructed the officers of the police force to enforce the law to the letter. It is against the scorcher and the rider without bell and lamp that this crusade is aimed.

It all came out of the fact that George Gould, the Park avenue bicycle dealer, was stopped by Patrolman Vanderveer on West Front street last Monday for riding without a light. Gould thought it a joke and did not show up in court this morning as he was ordered to by the policeman who stopped him. As a result he was haled before the City Judge next morning and fined $3.

On his failure to appear a warrant was issued for his arrest and it was served by Roundsman Frederickson, who soon found the offending wheelman and brought him to the courtroom.

Gould, it is said, started from a hotel on Somerset street and rode without lighting his lamp, down Somerset street to Front street, and was riding on when called to by the officer. At first Gould paid no attention to the call thinking, as he said this morning, that it was only a joke. When it was repeated Gould slowed up and stopped, and was allowed to go on again upon his promise to appear next morning at the court.

City Judge DeMeza then issued orders to the officers to begin a sharp war on scorchers and wheelmen riding without lights and bells. Prior to these past few weeks the police have been lenient with wheelmen, and have not been so strict in enforcing the ordinance as formerly. But from this time forth the summer campaign will be carried on in earnest. Therefore, riders of the silent steed, beware.

WASN'T READY FOR TRIAL.

Michael Ettinger Did Not Have an Important Witness on Hand.

Two lawyers, Counselor S. S. Swackhammer and Walter L. Hetfield, had quite a setto Monday morning in Justice Mosher's court over the adjournmett of a case. Jacob Kane brought suit against Michael Ettinger for $100 which he claimed he loaned Ettinger and the latter's wife, and the case was set down for trial yesterday.

Kane and his counsel were ready for trial, but Ettinger appeared in court with an affidavit that an important witness was ill. Ettinger asked that the case be postponed. After hearing the arguments on both sides, Justice Mosher concluded to adjourn the case until August 22.

Some time ago Kane brought suit against Ettinger for the recovery of this alleged loan, but as Mrs. Ettinger was dead, the court held that he should have sued the executors, and granted a nonsuit in the case. This time Michael Ettinger and Michael Coyne, executors of the estate of Kate Ettinger, are the ones sued.

BIG TIME AT COONTOWN.

Women of Methodist Church Gave a Successful Festival Tuesday Night.

The largest gathering every held in the Coontown M. E. church, of which Rev. George Bowers is pastor, took place Tuesday, the occasion being a festival given by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church. The programme included an overture from violin, piano and cornet, by Messrs. Frazee, Guttman and Creiger; an exhibition of sleight-of hand by John H. Carney; graphophone selections under the charge of George Voehl, and German dialect recitations by John H. Carney. The latter's description of how Dewey took Manila and the manner in which he raised Old Glory at that place aroused the patriotic spirit of the audience, and cheer after cheer was given the speaker. At the close of this number the entire audience joined in singing "The Star-Spangled Banner." Sixty quarts of ice cream were sold during the evening. As a result of the affair a donation of $30 was made to the church.

Frank Vosseller Recovering from an Operation at Camp Thomas.

Frank Vosseller, of East Sixth street, who is a member of Company A, Twelfth New York Vols., located at Chickamauga Park, "Camp Thomas," has been on the sick list. A short time ago he underwent an operation for a fistula and has not yet fully recovered. It will probably be two weeks before he can leave his bed. He is, however, convalescing. In a letter written to a Plainfield friend he said that his company expects to go to Porto Rico, as they have been inspected and blacksmiths have been given orders to put new shoes on all of the mules.

These grand wines of Speer's that have mellowed in flavor in the course of years of ripening, are the choicest wines in this country and can only be obtained by paying a price that is higher than new wines from western vineyards. Mr. Speer deems it necessary for a healthy wine that it be allowed years to mature in wood to get rid of its coarse parts; with this object he keeps his wines several years in fumigated cellars and frequently racks before bottling or offering for sale. The reputation of Speer's wines as a valuable medicinal and family wine extends around the world.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co., on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found myself in the case of the interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: 'There are other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the talking about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection.'" The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of the interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: 'There are other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the talking about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection.'" The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at many druggists' at the price, FIVE CENTS. This packet is sufficient for the ordinary needs of the occasional user. One dozen of the FIVE CENTS cartons (120 RIPANS TABULES) packed in a handsome carton, suitable for the pocket or the household, will be sent, postpaid, to any address on receipt of FIVE DOLLARS. Address THE RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Ask your druggist for RIPANS TABULES. If he does not have them in stock, tell him to get them. One agent wanted in every town. RIPANS TABULES may also be had of some druggists, general storekeepers, news agents and of some hotel clerks and barbers. Give price and size wanted.

FRESH-AIR CAMP FOR POOR CHILDREN.

Glimpses of Life at Camp Woolfe, Westfield.

HOW THE MOVEMENT BEGAN

THE PLAINFIELD ENDEAVORERS ARE TAKING ACTIVE INTEREST.

Facts Concerning Westfield's Great Charitable Institution—Description of the Camp and the Life of Its Occupants —What Has Been Accomplished—A Charity That Pays—The Workers There.

In the midst of a pretty grove on the outskirts of Westfield may be seen the cluster of buildings composing Camp Woolfe, where every summer a happy company of women and children, gathered from the slums of New York, may be seen enjoying life amid the unaccustomed surroundings of fresh air, plenty of good, simple food, kind words and religious teaching. Many Plainfielders visit Camp Woolfe, and it would pay many more to do so, for it is an example of a practical, helpful charity, working with perfect success.

The history of the camp dates back to the spring of 1895, when five mission workers in the east side of New York had laid on their hearts the need of an outing, during the heated term, for the poor mothers and their younger and sickly children. Their desire was to separate them from their miserable surroundings, instruct them in housekeeping and home making, and, if possible, lead them into a definite Christian experience, and as this need was not met by any of the Fresh-Air Charities of the city, they decided to start a camp for such a work. Accordingly, forty-two mothers and children, in charge of the present matron, Miss Sara Curry, were brought out to Camp Woolfe, July 5. There were only funds to last two weeks, but the work soon attracted the interest of philanthropic people, by whose help the camp was kept open six weeks. The present wooden buildings were not then built, the tents in which the guests slept, ate and attended religious services in a large tent. In August, however, the substantial farm dormitory was built, capable of sheltering a hundred persons.

By this time, the Christian Endeavor Societies and Epworth Leagues of Westfield and vicinity had become greatly interested in the work. The Union Fresh-Air Mission Association was formed, and since then each department of the work, being in the hands of an efficient committee, has been conducted with gratifying success. A substantial frame auditorium was substituted for the tent which served for dining and meeting room, and here the guests of the camp may be found during the day, the mothers reading or chatting or caring for their little ones, the children laughing and playing about. Swings and hammocks abound, and little folk who scarcely knew what grass and trees were, a short time ago, revel in the free, outdoor country life.

In the frame building which constitutes the kitchen, the women can learn clean and economical methods of preparing food, and personal cleanliness is made easy by a newly constructed washhouse. A sewerage system with complete sanitary arrangements has been constructed.

A nursery building capable of accommodating twenty babies has been erected, thoroughly equipped, and placed in the charge of a competent nurse. There are cared for sickly babies whose mothers are obliged to work during the day, and so cannot come to the camp. Many babies grow remarkably stronger, after a few weeks in these pleasant quarters, and few deaths have taken place.

The Endeavor Societies and Epworth Leagues conduct short gospel services every Friday night and Sunday afternoon, and many have gone home from Camp Woolfe renewed spiritually as well as physically. Even the children join in the services with enthusiasm, and sing their favorite hymns with an energy that nearly raises the roof. The children are the most fascinating part of the whole, to the visitor. The babies in the nursery beam at the kindly faces above them, and the older ones talk freely with visitors and seize with pathetic delight any little toys or books that are given them. Camp Woolfe is a charity that pays, and is paying right along. None of those who have been among its pleasant influences and under the charge of its earnest Christian matron, can ever go back to just the old life again.

The officers of the Union Fresh Air Mission Association for the present year are as follows: President, George E. Woolfe, of New York; vice-presidents, Arthur N. Pierson and David M. Torrey, of Westfield; secretary, Miss Jane R. Morrow, of Westfield; treasurer, Miss Edith T. Morehouse, of Westfield.

INJURED JUDGE'S HORSE

FAULTY REPAIRS, IT IS ALLEGED, WERE THE CAUSE.

Combination of Rain and Heat Caused Boards on Bridge to Curl—Tripped Over Them and Was Injured Somewhat.

Owing to an accident to his new road horse, City Judge George W. DeMeza has been obliged to place the animal on a farm, with a chance to rest and recover. The accident happened on the Somerset street bridge, and was due to a curled up piece of board which caught the horse's foot and threw him heavily.

When the bridge was built the planks were not set as close together as they should have been. The action of sun and rain on them drew them apart and left wide cracks which were not very safe to wagon wheels. Then the members of the Board of Freeholders covered the cracks with pieces of plank running parallel with the street, shaved off the ends so as to offer very little resistance to wagon wheels, and thought the improvement permanent.

They worked all right until this last damp spell, followed by a day or two of fierce heat, which curled up the ends of the planks, and made a dangerous place in the centre of the street.

City Judge De Meza's horse was the unlucky one to fall. Striking the plank fairly, the horse stumbled and struck his knees before he recovered. In the fall both knees were barked, and the animal otherwise stiffened so that his owner considered a rest necessary. City Judge De Meza may bring suit against the Freeholders upon the recovery of his horse.

A NEW KIND OF APPLE.

THE OFFICERS DROPPED AMONG THE ORCHARD RAIDERS.

The Boys Were Shaking the Very Trees in Which the Marshals Were Hiding—Boys Were Fined $5 Each.

"Oh, Bill, just look at those apples," loudly whispered one of the boys as they scaled the fence Tuesday evening around Mayor Wilson's orchard, in the rear of the Borough Mayor's handsome home, "Tunlaw." Apparently there was no one in sight. Soon the boys were greedily gathering the fruit and shaking down more.

Now, Mayor Wilson has a very fine orchard and he naturally takes much interest in it. Frequent visits are made to the orchard and some of the finest fruit disappears. This caused His Honor no end of trouble. He informed Chief Wilson that the boys must be kept out of the orchard, and the officer said that the Mayor's wishes should be complied with.

Tuesday evening the boys made a visit to the orchard. They were shaking one tree vigorously for the apples. The fruit dropped, and they were just congratulating themselves on their good luck when two of the biggest apples they had ever seen dropped in their midst. They quickly recognized Chief Wilson and Marshal Wise. In short order the officers had under arrest Albert Perry and another boy. They were arraigned before Recorder Long. Each one was fined $5 and was then discharged. They were not conscious of the fact that in the very tree they were shaking were the two officers hiding, so when the latter dropped down the lads were badly frightened.

NOT MUCH BUSINESS.

After A Remarkably Short Session, the Board Went Into Executive Sessions

One of the shortest meetings of the Board of Education ever held was the regular open meeting held Tuesday. The session didn't convene until 8:15 o'clock, and lasted fifteen minutes, most of which time was taken up with the reading of minutes.

Those present were President J. B. Probasco, M. D., and Messrs. Lovell and Lounsbury. Bills were ordered paid and a communication from E. H. Bird, the tax collector, read. It stated that taxes to the amount of $1,295.53 had been received as follows: For 1895, $7.90; 1896, $956.07; 1897, $331.56, with interest $167.78, making a total of $1,463.31.

Doctors Murray and Tomlinson sent communications accepting their appointments as medical examiners. The Board then went into executive session.

No Trace of the Horse.

Councilman Walter L. Hetfield has as yet received no news of his lost horse. He has searched the country around pretty thoroughly without success, and hardly knows what to do now.

Lots of Business.

It is possible that the City Council will hold two more meetings this month, as business of importance will have to be considered.

WANT TO BE ANNEXED.

How the Porto Ricans Consider American Invasion.

NINE CITIES SURRENDER.

SLIGHT SKIRMISHING REPORTED FROM THE FRONT.

Refugees Arrive at Ponce and are Given a Grand Welcome—Report of Conference with Leading Citizens on Annexation.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Ponce, Porto Rico, August 1, via St. Thomas, August 3, 12:55 p. m.—Nine additional cities have yielded without resistance to the advance of the American army under Gen. Miles.

Spanish troops were quartered in most of the cities taken. There was no fighting, however, at any of them. The American troops are being enthusiastically welcomed by the citizens. Thus far no Spanish sympathizers have been found.

In many cases the Spanish troops garrisoning the towns were compelled by the people to leave the place and retreat on the road toward San Juan.

Ponce, Porto Rico, August 1, via St. Thomas, August 1, 1:06 p. m.—The auxiliary cruiser St. Louis arrived this morning bringing the Porto Rican refugees who were the ringleaders in the revolution a year ago.

After the revolution they went to San Domingo, but returned to Porto Rico, where they were caught by the Spanish and put in jail. They were subsequently deported, but have since been in New York.

Upon their arrival here they were received like heroes. Bands played American airs and prominent officials made speeches of welcome. Their progress to their homes was a continual ovation.

The returned refugees had a conference this afternoon with the leading citizens and say that ninety per cent. of the population prefer annexation to the United States to self-government.

Besides the refugees, Gen. Brooke with the Third Illinois arrived here. The governmental post office will be opened tomorrow.

Ponce, Porto Rico, August 2, via St. Thomas, August 3, 1:20 p. m.—Garrison's brigade arrived here today from Yanco, making the total American fighting force in this vicinity nine thousand men, equal to the Spanish force on the entire island.

There was some firing last night between the American pickets and the Spanish soldiers who are hiding in the bush. No one was hit on the American side. It is the general belief that there will be no forward movement until the other transports arrive.

A Cruise Near Sandy Hook.

Mrs. Margaret Wilson and son, Allan, of Grove St., started yesterday morning on a pleasant trip on board one of the government steam yachts in company with State Fish and Game Warden Shriner and wife, of Paterson. Warden Shriner goes on a two-days' cruise around Sandy Hook to detect illegal fishers, and takes a few personal friends with him.

To Camp on the Shrewsbury.

A party of Plainfield young men left Saturday to establish a summer camp on the banks of the Shrewsbury River near Red Bank. The party included Thomas U. Smith, Clifford Smith, Louis Darling, William L. McClure and Roger Erickson. They will spend several weeks there sailing, swimming and fishing.

Mr. Green, of Marsh, Ayres & Co.'s store, is on the sick list.

FAST MEN TO MEET IN A ROAD EVENT.

Lister's Fifteen Mile Road Race To Be Held Tonight.

A LIST OF THE ENTRIES.

TWENTY-FOUR RIDERS WILL START IN THE EVENT.

The Course Will Be Out Park Avenue—The Start Will Be At Randolph Road—Race Begins at 6:30 o'Clock—Winner of Irvington-Milburn Race Will Ride—Other Fast Men Entered.

But for the series of road events, arranged by Harry K. Lister, the bicycle racing season in Plainfield this year has been an unusually slow one. The second of Lister's races will be held this evening at 6:30 o'clock over a course of fifteen miles.

The start will be made on Park avenue, corner of Randolph road. The riders will then go to Pumptown, via Oak Tree, around the pump and return over the same course to Avon Park where they will turn and go back to Pumptown, around the pump again and finish at the starting point. The course has been arranged as to make it just fifteen miles.

To make the contest of particular interest, Harry Lister has provided an excellent lot of prizes. There will be two time prizes, the first a silver watch, and the second a gold chain. The six other prizes will be as follows: First, diamond ring; second, sweater; third, gold link cuff buttons; fourth, racing saddle; fifth, pearl-handled pen-knife; sixth, cyclometer.

The entry list is a large one, including twenty-four names. Among them are Jorden Hanson, of Perth Amboy, the man who won the Irvington-Milburn race, and John Cunningham, of the same place, who finished fourth in that great event. Both of them will, of course, start from scratch. George Voorhees, the well-known New Brunswick road rider, and Fred Nelson, of Stelton, who started from scratch in the other race, will be the other scratch men. Ray Towle, of Dunellen, is entered, but his rival, Peter Stambuels, Plainfield's colored rider, is missing.

The officials will be the same as those who officiated in the first meet. Harry K. Lister will act as clerk-of-the-course.

The entries with their handicaps are as follows:

Name	Residence.	Handicap.
George Voorhees	New Brunswick	Scratch
Fred Letson	Stelton	Scratch
Jorden Hanson	Perth Amboy	Scratch
John Cunningham	Perth Amboy	Scratch
		Seconds
Eugene Richter	Netherwood	30

TELL A WEIRD TALE.

Young Men Claim to Have a Note from Suicide.

Frank Denckla, Wyatt Barnes, George Sneicker and Harold Phillips went swimming Tuesday in the pond back of the paper mills at Scotch Plains. When they returned, they told a ghastly tale of finding a corked bottle floating around in the water in which was a note telling the finder that the writer was going to commit suicide, and that his dead body would be found in the bottom of the lake. The boys insist that their story is true, and are thinking of organizing a searching party to drag the pond.

Cory Divorce Case Continued.

A great part of Monday was taken up in the Vice-Chancellor's court at Newark in listening to the summing up of Lawyers Swackhamer and Newcorn, who represent the parties in the suit for divorce brought by Henry H. Corey against his wife, Alice V. Cory. Mr. Newcorn opened at 9:30 o'clock and took until shortly after 3 o'clock, when Mr. Swackhamer arose and talked until court adjourned. The arguments will be continued Saturday morning.

A Bicycle Party.

Miss M. G. Morse, of Franklin place, gave a bicycle party Tuesday to a few friends in honor of her guest, Miss Edna Minita Howell, of Chester, Pa. The party started just at dusk, and rode out to Pumptown and back, returning to find the house illuminated and decorated with Japanese lanterns. Dainty refreshments were served on the large piazza, and a period of sociability closed the evening.

ACCEPTANCE IS AWAITED.

All Confident that Spain Will Accept Peace Terms.

NO OFFICIAL NOTICE YET

UNOFFICIAL REPORTS SAY SPAIN WILL ACCEPT.

President McKinley Says He Has Received Unofficial Notification—Day Says No Official News—Nothing Definite Received.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 3, 1:06 p. m.—President McKinley, soon after 10 o'clock this morning, said that he had received unofficial notification as to Spain's agreement to our peace terms.

He was expecting Spain's reply to the American communication at any moment. Secretary Day says that he has not received any official advices as yet of any action on the part of the Spanish government on the peace terms.

At 10:30 o'clock there had been received at the French Embassy no Spanish response to peace terms although a communication not definite in character had come so hand.

TEXAS DRYDOCKED.

She Will be Thoroughly Overhauled While Here and Repaired.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

New York, August 3, 1:24 p. m.—The battleship Texas was placed on the drydock at the Brooklyn Navy Yard this morning.

A number of the plates in her hull will have to be replaced. She will also be thoroughly overhauled and her engines looked over.

The hospital ship Relief has finished loading hospital supplies and delicacies and will sail this afternoon direct for Ponce.

ROUGH RIDERS TO RETURN.

They Will Leave Santiago on the First Available Transport.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 3, 1:55 p. m.—Roosevelt's Rough Riders were today ordered to Moutauk Point.

They will come with Wheeler's cavalry on the first available transport from Santiago.

Uprising in Spain.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

London, August 3, 1:20 p. m.—A despatch from Barcelona says that a formidable uprising of Carlists has taken place at Lerida, province of Catalonia.

Death of Miss Jennie Hays.

The death of Miss Jennie Hays, daughter of Henry Hays, of 1106 Dunellen avenue, occurred Tuesday, after a long illness. The funeral services will be held from the residence this afternoon at 5 o'clock, and interment will be in Cypress Hill Cemetery, Brooklyn.

Prize Choristers.

The prize choristers of Grace church for July were Harris Egan, Harry Messerschmidt, Douglass Murphy, Reginald Chandor, Miss E. Noe and Miss E. Van Deventer. The regular choir will not sing during the month of August.

Dispossessed for Rent.

Joseph Runyon, formerly of this city, and who has been running the South Plainfield hotel recently, was dispossessed Monday by Proprietor Fitzgerald, who claims that Runyon owes him $50 back rent.

Will Visit Somerville.

Frank Gonshee, of the borough, for being drunk and disorderly was arrested Tuesday evening by Marshal Schenck, and next morning Recorder Long imposed a fine of $10 or 10 days. The offender took the days.

PLUMBERS GO TO COURT.

TROUBLE OVER QUESTION OF SUPPLIES FURNISHED EACH OTHER.

Galbraith & Walsh Sued E. D. Barrett for Materials and He, in Turn, Filed a Setoff Against the Firm.

A dispute between two plumbers of this city over goods bought and sold on each side, ended in a trial before Justice Nash Tuesday afternoon. Dennis J. Galbraith and his former partner, Thomas Walsh, were the plaintiffs in the case, the defendant, Ernest D. Barrett. Both parties have been in the habit of accommodating each other by furnishing sundries, etc., when they ran short.

Galbraith & Walsh sued for a bill of $17.84 balance. Barrett filed a setoff nearly covering the amount claimed by the plaintiffs, and altogether the case was as complicated and tedious a one as a Justice is generally asked to decide.

According to an alleged custom among plumbers, Galbraith & Walsh charged Barrett 10 per cent. advance on all the goods they purchased. This, said Mr. Galbraith, was one-half the advance generally charged to customers. The plaintiffs had two other plumbers as witnesses, E. H. Enander and John H. Carney.

Irving L. Brady represented the plaintiffs and W. S. Angleman appeared for the defendant. Their defence was a setoff and a claim that part of the bill had been paid.

After listening to the evidence Justice Nash reserved his decision for one week.

DRAGGED BY A RUNAWAY

A FRISKY HORSE SERIOUSLY INJURED B. S. BRAIDER YESTERDAY.

He Was Climbing Into a Delivery Wagon When the Horse Started—He Clung to the Wagon and Was Dragged.

Tuesday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock B. S. Braider, who is manager of the Plainfield Co-operative Association store on Central avenue, and who delivers goods, met with a serious accident.

He was driving a young horse and after delivering some groceries in a house on Manson place, he untied the horse and attempted to get into the wagon. The frisky animal started before Mr. Braider could reach the seat, and at a rapid pace he ran down the street. Mr. Braider held on and was dragged about two blocks. Both of his arms were terribly lacerated and in some places the skin was torn loose. Finally Mr. Braider was obliged to let go, but the horse continued his wild run. The rig finally wound up in a large field, where the wagon was kicked into kindling wood by the horse.

The animal was frantic and it was some time before he could be subdued. He was caught by a man employed by the Great Atlantic Tea Company, who happened to be in the vicinity, and later Mr. Braider came along and took the horse in charge.

It was at first thought that Mr. Braider's injuries were of a critical nature, but an examination proved that they are not so bad. It will be several days, however, before he will be able to fully attend to his duties.

PLAINFIELD BOY PROMOTED.

Frank Vosseller Selected to be Quartermaster's Clerk at Camp Thomas.

The friends of Frank Vosseller, who is now located at Camp Thomas, Chickamauga Park, Ga., will be pleased to learn that he has about recovered from a recent operation which necessitated the removal of a fistula. Mr. Vosseller is now able to be around again. It will also be of interest to his many friends in this city to learn that purely on his own qualifications he has been promoted. This change took place last Friday when he was selected as a clerk in the department of Quartermaster-Sergeant Trowgott, with headquarters near those of the Colonel of the regiment. Mr. Vosseller possesses clerical abilities that has won for him the position he has recently acquired, and his friends will congratulate him on being so fortunate. The other Plainfield boys in Camp Thomas are doing well.

Carrier Pigeons Start.

Manager Mills, of the U. S. Express Co., received a lot of carrier pigeons yesterday from Eli Moreton, of 419 South Tenth street, Newark, and he liberated the birds at 8:25. The crowd at the station watched them as they circled about for fully ten minutes. They then started on their homeward journey direct.

For Boynton Beach.

A four-horse stage was required to take the members of Lucetta Council, Daughters of Liberty, to Boynton Beach yesterday, at the annual outing of the order from all over the State.

A NIGHT IN A CELL AT THE CITY JAIL.

An Old Salt Tells of Strange Sights There.

MANŒUVRES OF INSECTS.

JOHN PHILLIPS NEVER SAW ITS LIKE BEFORE, HE SAYS.

Was Arrested for Begging and Being Drunk—Locked Up Over Night—That Was Punishment Enough—Was Glad Enough to Leave the City—The Judge Suspended Sentence and Let Him Go.

"Well," quoth John Phillips, a man from "anywhere," as he stretched out on the wooden seat in the cell, where Patrolman Saffron landed him Tuesday evening, "I might have struck it worse." There was a cold damp air to the semi-underground cell, but John was used to almost anything and he did not mind it. He laid down on the bench, pillowing his head on the old worn coat that had served him in that way many a time before.

All was quiet in the jail save when a train went rushing by. John could not see them but the roar plainly its way into his confinement. He had settled down for a snooze when he was attracted by a scratching in the corner of the cell. In the dim light from the solitary electric light in the corridor, he could see something advancing across the floor.

Looking again, he saw it was a monster black bug. Following it were others. But what attracted his attention was the regularity of this insect force. They were formed by fours with here and there a file-closer. They marched to the centre of the cell and there formed company front. A detachment of centipedes, led by a monster of his kind, filed out by platoons and deployed to the left. Then came smaller bugs of a dark red color, then others until John's hair fairly rose on end.

"Great Cæsar's soup tureen," shouted out the prisoner, and then he swore.

The insect army went through all sorts of manœuvres as the night went by and John watched them from his post of observation. This morning he confidentially told one of the officers that in all his experiences in the jails throughout the country, he had never seen one equal to that of Plainfield. It marked an era in his experiences.

Phillips was arrested for begging and for being drunk on Watchung avenue Tuesday night. He had been a sailor and had visited many ports all over the world. He was now an umbrella mender. His home was "anywhere."

When the Judge heard what a night he had had, he suspended sentence on the old salt on condition that he would leave town in ten minutes. Phillips said that it would be necessary to tie him here to persuade him to remain. He departed and cast not one look behind.

DUNELLEN PASTOR MARRIED.

Rev. A. L. Martine Wedded to Mrs. O. B. Chandler, at Glen Head, L. I.

Glen Head, L. I., August 3.—The marriage of Rev. A. L. Martine, pastor of the Dunellen Presbyterian, church to Mrs. O. B. Chandler, also of Dunellen, was celebrated this morning at 10 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Chandler's sister, Mrs. Smock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. John Smock in the presence of a very few relatives. The bride and groom will leave this place today with horse and carriage and will spend their honeymoon taking a drive of about one hundred miles, during which time they will visit friends at Nyack, N. Y., and Mr. Martine's sister at Pine Ridge, N. Y. They will return to Dunellen to live the latter part of this month.

PLAINFIELD BOY AT TAMPA.

W. S. Stewart, a Cavalryman, Expects to Be Ordered to Porto Rico.

D. F. Stewart, of John street, has received a letter from his son, William S. Stewart, who is in Troop K, Sixth U. S. Cavalry, at Tampa. With the letter came four Mauser cartridges, the kind that the Spanish soldiers use, and formidable looking shells they are, too. Stewart and Frank Marsh, who is with him, are well, and at the time of writing were expecting to move on to Porto Rico.

New Fire Ordinance.

Councilman Will N. Runyon has in preparation a new fire ordinance which he will present in the near future. It is said that it will require one whole evening to read the document, and Mr. Runyon's friends are trying to persuade him to put the matter off till cool weather.

FAMOUS TREATIES.

ASKETCH OF THOSE OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

The World Is Likely to See Another That Will Alter the Boundaries of Nations—One at Midnight That Gave Us Alaska in 1865.

At a time when the world is likely to see another treaty that will alter the boundaries of nations, it is well to look over the great treaties of the century. What did they effect?

The first of these began almost with the century itself and arose from events connected with Napoleon's seizure of power and his aggressive policy in Europe. It is known as the "Peace of Amiens" between Great Britain, Holland, France, and Spain. It was facetiously named the "Peace of Amiens" because it really provoked war. Its most notable achievement was to enable Napoleon's friends to invite the French senate to give Napoleon, who was then First Consul, some token of the national gratitude of France. The Senate voted to prolong the First Consul's tenure of office. The proposition had but one opponent, a Girondist, who loudly asserted that the first steps towards a despotism had been thus taken, and that a flagrant usurpation threatened the Republic. Lafayette registered a noble "no," sent the First Consul a spirited letter, and ceased the relations he had hitherto maintained with Napoleon who had already stirred up a rebellion in Holland, was the master of Italy, and was now about to become the master of France. The treaty was signed March 27, 1802, by the Marquis of Cornwallis on the part of England, and by Joseph Bonaparte on that of France. A joint session of both houses of the Senate in consequence Napoleon was on August 3 proclaimed in these terms "The French people name and the Senate proclaim Napoleon Bonaparte First Consul for Life."

The London "Times" and the whole British press had at first disapproval. Napoleon thundered back that if the English press interfered in the domestic affairs of the French people, that the nation knew how to respond to such flagrant impertinence, and would not be slow to preserve the dignity of the French name. Accordingly as Addington used to say in after years, the ink on the treaty of Amiens was scarcely dry when national pride was aroused which imperilled the new peace. The promptness with which France challenged the British nation upon that occasion is the secret of why Englishmen, whoever else they may despise, have still a profound respect for Frenchmen, and have been very shy of intervening upon their domestic discords since. The blue envy of the press had nearly ruined the Empire.

The next in importance was the Treaty of Vienna in 1815. This was the great council of the powers which readjusted the territorial chaos caused by Napoleon in the affairs of Europe. The Czar of Russia, the Kings of Prussia, Denmark, Bavaria and Wurtemburg and nearly all the statesmen of eminence gathered around the Emperor Francis of Austria and his more famous minister, Metternich. Metternich by common consent presided. Lord Castlereagh represented England and Talleyrand France. The subordinate envoys and attaches of other Courts added to a host of petty princelings whose nominal titles remain, but whose power have disappeared from the map of Europe, crowded every hotel or available private residence in Vienna. They all gathered like vultures to feed upon the caged lion whom the brutal Sir Hudson Lowe was at that time insulting on board of the Bellerophon en route to St. Helena. This assemblage was also likely to end in renewed war. By the secret understandings after the Battle of Waterloo the allied sovereigns had reserved to themselves the disposal of all vacant territory to some of the princes then out of a job. The Ministers of Austria, England, Prussia and Russia determined to decide upon all territorial questions among themselves and only after so deciding submit them to France and the other Powers. This nearly caused a rupture. Talleyrand on hearing of the arrangement demanded that the whole European concert should be held in open Congress. But the "Big Four" continued their sittings as already arranged. Still it was found impossible to continue. While Napoleon reigned these powers were united against him, but now that the common danger was disposed of they were no less against each other.

The Congress assembled in September, 1814, and on January 3, 1815, Talleyrand's purpose of breaking Europe into two halves was only averted by a secret treaty pledging the two powers at once take the field against Russia and Prussia in defence of the Peace of Paris. France was immediately admitted into "the Big Four" and Europe assumed those divisions in which it remained until United Italy and the German Empire arose.

Passing over the treaty which ended the Crimean War, those which ended the Holstein and the Austro-Prussian wars and that of 1871 which gave Alsace and Lorraine to Germany, we come to the next great international conference, that of Berlin.

The treaty of Berlin in 1878 stopped the victorious march of the Russian Army upon Constantinople. It thus preserved a little principality in Southeastern Europe, Spain being the blotch in the corresponding corner of Southwestern Europe. These precious blossoms, the word "Jingo," and "the Princes League" are said to be the net results of that treaty in which Lord Beaconsfield figured. Russia had perfected a treaty with "the Sick Man," the famous treaty of San Stefano, by which was secured complete independence for the Christian populations of Montenegro and which created the new state of Bulgaria with a seaport on the Egean Sea. Bulgaria was to be a mere blind for Russia. The British Government took alarm contending that any such step reopened those questions already settled on the abdication of Napoleon in the Congress of the "Big Five" was accordingly called in Berlin. This time Prince Bismarck presided. Prince Gorchakoff represented the Czar, Count Andrassy, Austria and Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury the interests respectively of Britain. Under the conditions of this treaty Turkey was shorn of some of her territory, which was added to Austria; the principality of Bulgaria was recognized as an autonomous Power with a Christian Government and a national militia. Stipulated reforms were to be introduced into Crete, Epirus, Thessaly, Armenia, and other parts of the Ottoman Empire.

Lord Beaconsfield went back from Berlin with the cry of "Peace with honor," Salisbury's estimate of the situation being that there was neither peace nor honor. Two years ago the most frightful massacres took place in Armenia and when Lord Salisbury who was a member of the conference was appealed to to rouse British sentiment of England to enforce the treaty, Lord Salisbury jauntily declared that the redress of Armenian injustice was not a function of the Conservative party. The great leader of the Liberals who had been returned to power on the Bulgarian atrocities was not in Parliament, and Sir Vernon Harcourt was as silent as a heap of baggage on the opposition bench.

The next arrangement which mightily affected the world's destinies was that at the Town Hall of Shimonoseki in April, 1895. Count Ito was at home on this occasion and Li Hung Chang with Mr. Foster of America and Count Cassini in the back ground safe guarding those of China. As most of the Chinese fleet was either in the hands of the Japanese or at the bottom of the Yalu river or in the harbor of Wei-Hei-Wei, and the victorious armies of the Mikado were in sight of Pekin, the Chinese had no alternative but to concede whatever was demanded, knowing that Russia, Germany and France, which constitute the "Triple Alliance" for the control of the Orient would veto any immoderate terms. Japan demanded the cession of the Liao Tung peninsula, the warships already in Japanese hands, control of Port Arthur and $200,000,000.

The Plenipotentiaries held five sessions, the result of which was that the mailed hand of Russia was seen behind the Chino-Japanese war. Japan got all she wanted, China's money indemnity and Formosa, Russia more recently taking the Liao Peninsula and valuable railroad rights in that territory which is now virtually a Russian province. Great Britain apparently did not know that Canada was hopening until the Russian bear had completely fortified himself in the Gulf an ice-free port and an outlet in the Pacific Ocean which it destines ere long to be a Russo-American Lake. But England finally came to the continuance of peace by taking Wei-Hei-Wei.

While these events were taking place in the far East, this country was creating a diversion of momentious importance in Venezuela and the message of President Cleveland in December, 1895, was admirably timed whether Cleveland so intended it or not, to create such a disturbance in London as would not only vindicate the Monroe doctrine in Venezuela but also repay Russia for the famous "midnight treaty" of 1867, by which Alaska was ceded to the United States. To Russian assistance and Russian friendship for the United States we are indebted for the present encouraging foreign policy under which, particularly with the possession of the Philippine Islands, we are sure to have an "open door" in the Orient independent of any Power on earth. In fact it is no longer either the "Big Four" or the "Big Five." It is now the "Big Six" as any further treaty making in connection with the present war with Spain, will abundantly reveal to anyone who does not already see the United States looming ominously upon the destinies of the century that is now at our doors. America is henceforth going to have foreign markets for her manufactures and a foreign policy of her own and Europe will have to reckon with our Talleyrands in the great events of the future.

Greville's Reply.

Mr. Greville was persuaded, when he was over sixty years of age, to attend a spiritualistic seance. For the first time in his life, was in great form, and the revelations were astounding. Greville sat silent, and his aged, wizened face was emotionless as a mask. Suddenly the medium grew excited, and said to the old gentleman:

"A female form is bending over you. Oh, the extraordinary likeness!"

Greville sighed.

"She lifts her hands to bless you."

Greville sighed again.

"It is your mother."

"A poor thing," said Greville; "I am glad."

She smiles. She says all is well with her."

Greville sighed again and said, "I am delighted."

"She says she will see you soon. You are old, and you must meet her before long."

Then Greville quietly observed, "That's very true. I'm going to take tea with her this evening."

READING FOR BLIND.

A UNIQUE FEATURE OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Pleasure Taken by the Sightless in the Room Set Apart for Them—Fields of Literature Open to Them—A Daily System of Readings.

All good Americans should hope to visit the Congress Library before they die. It is one of the world's wonders, well worth a trip across a continent to view.

A sign points a directing hand to the reading room for the blind, and following it you enter the strangest room in the library, and, indeed, the strangest reading room in the world, for this is the only library known to contain special provisions for the blind. The idea of having reading room for the blind was suggested to Mr. Young, the librarian, by a woman whose sight had been touched by the plaint of a blind girl friend that there was so little opportunity for the most helpless class of persons in the world to have access to the literature for which they longed.

The room dedicated to this purpose is of good proportions, shady, cool, with great windows filled with growing plants, the touch and scent of which are a constant delight to the readers. The furniture suits the room and numbers among its pieces an unusually fine carved chair, a generous wall and a table to match. The blind appreciate this furniture very much and are proud of it, often feeling of the carving and speaking of its beauties. Around the walls of the room are ranged cases containing literature for the blind, and the room is divided in the center by a large screen, behind which the readers can retire and so escape the observation of casual visitors. On the carved table is a beautiful vase, a gift from a Washington woman, and it is daily filled with cut flowers, which come as offerings from seeing people to their less fortunate friends.

The special attendant in charge of this room has a large responsibility resting upon her. She is Miss Etta Josephine Hutcheson. The privilege of reading in a room by themselves meant two things to the blind. It afforded an opportunity to read books that had hitherto been unobtainable, and it was an acknowledgment of them as a class. This acknowledgment is especially dear because their complete dependence on the good will of their seeing friends has made them looked upon as objects of charity, and this public recognition of them as a class possessing the intelligent needs of seeing people is soothing to their natural pride for independence. The collection of literature at their service embraces all the standard works, the Bible, encyclopedias, Dickens, Thackeray, Eliot, Emerson, the great essayists, poets, &c., and many musical compositions.

The cost of printing for the blind is so great that only the well-to-do can attempt the collection of an individual library; hence the benefit of a reading room to them. The Bible, for instance, which can be compressed into a pocket edition for ordinary readers and bought for 2 cents and even less, when published in finger print covers a series of eight volumes, and costs $100. A prayer book sells for $20, and a common writing desk costs $75. This class consists of a table, guide and stylus, and the rapidity with which the blind write is marvellous. As they read, they frequently pause to jot down on the stylus a sentence. Their writing is done from right to left, though they read from left to right. The correspondence among themselves is a great source of entertainment, education, and comfort, and where several are gathered in the reading room, the reading is published, a smart interchange of slates goes on, each reading with his fingers the thoughts jotted down by the others.

After the reading room for the blind was opened the library officials were anxious that everything possible should be done which would tend toward its successful and permanent operation. One suggestion that has resulted in constant and increasing pleasure came from David Hutcheson, a nephew of the general reading room. It occurred to Mr. Hutcheson that if each day a good reader could be secured to read aloud to the blind visitors for an hour, they could become acquainted with much literature that has not yet been reproduced in the publications for the blind. With the co-operation of Miss Giffin, this plan was worked out. Mr. Hutcheson was a little timorous of its continued success, fearing it would be difficult to secure readers for more than one day in the century, more readers have offered their services than dates can be found for, and very celebrated readers at that. The first person to read aloud was Mrs. John Russell Young, wife of the Librarian. Then came Mrs. Page, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Grace Greenwood, Frank Stockton, and many other authors have contributed their quota to the daily reading matinee. On several occasions celebrities have given little talks rather than readings, and these are especially appreciated, particularly as they relate to travel. These readings have proved a most interesting feature of the reading room, and greatly extended the scope and opportunity of the room's Free-circulating Many blind persons desired to avail themselves of the privileges of the reading room, and were unable to do so, because they had no one to bring them to the library, so Miss Giffin interested a number of women who were willing to act as escorts to the afflicted ones, and these escorts day by day bring their charges to the readings.

It is interesting to note that their is no distinction of color or nationality. The first reader was a colored man, and the second a young white girl, who asked for Emerson's Essays, saying she was "hungry for Emerson." The literature called for by the readers is of a remarkably high order. The very concentration required of the blind for their reading creates a high order of intelligence and a desire to learn of the best. The room is well patronized every day, even in bad weather, though on wet days more men than women are observed. Many pleasant and lasting friendships are formed among the readers, and a system of correspondence maintained. Many letters of inquiry about the room are constantly received from residents of other cities.—New York Sun.

THE THREE KRUPPS.

And Their Wonderful Gun Works at Essen, Germany.

The city of Essen is located in the center of a hilly valley, which abounds in coal and iron ore, and the digging for both and the melting of the ore and casting the metal into ingots and rolling it into bars have been the occupation of the inhabitants for centuries past. Frederick Krupp, the founder of the great works bearing his name, was born in 1787, and when crucible cast steel was first introduced into England, and its importation from there into Germany had been made impossible through the edict of Napoleon, called "the continental sperre," F. Krupp began to produce crucible cast steel, first in small quantities for files, stamps, rolls for coins and shears, but only slowly could he convince and persuade German manufacturers to use his cast steel, and after a life full of disappointment and hardships, he died in 1826, after a long and severe illness, leaving to his son Alfred little else than the old homestead, which still stands in the midst of the great works and the invention of his inventions.

Alfred Krupp's energy and enterprise soon conquered. His first success was to be able to furnish a cast steel of a varying degrees of hardness, thereby increasing its adaptability for many new purposes. Next came the invention of the cast steel tires for railroad tires, which were patented in 1853 in all countries, and furnished him capital for enlarging his plant. In 1865 he interested himself in coal mines, iron ore mines and furnaces, which should furnish the necessary material for his works, and in 1867 he began to reap the harvest from his experiments, inaugurated long since, with steel cannons, and the great Franco-German war of 1870-71 proved beyond doubt their superiority as against the old bronze cannons. Since then the growth of these works and their growth has been phenomenal, and when Alfred Krupp closed the busy and successful and philanthropic work of his life in 1877 at Villa Huegel, his princely home on the side hills of the valley of the Ruhr, the city of Essen, in recognition of his great work, erected in his memory a beautiful monument on the most prominent square of the city, and deputations from many nations mourned at his bier.

Essen is a city of ninety-six thousand inhabitants, and over twenty thousand of this population are employed in the works of the able and energetic son of Alfred Krupp, Friedrich Alfred. Over 1,200 acres of ground are covered with buildings and machinery. Many coal mines belong to the works, and over 400 iron ore mines furnish the metal and large iron ore deposits in Spain, near Bilbao, have been purchased th addition, and a special fleet of steamers has been built which bring over 200,000 tons of the lovling ore from Spain to the German coast and up the Rhine. Twenty furnaces at Duisburg and Neuwied-on-the-Rhine are reducing this ore for the Krupp works and are owned or controlled by them.—Iron Age.

"TOAST" IN A CUP.

Origin of the Use of the Word for After-Dinner Speeches.

The word "toast" used for describing the proposal of a health in an after-dinner speech dates back to the medieval times, when the loving cup was still regarded as an indispensable feature of every banquet. The cup would be filled to the brim, with wine or mead, in the center of which would be placed a piece of toasted bread. After putting the lips to it the host would pass the cup to the guest of honor, seated on his right hand, and the latter would in turn pass it on to his right hand neighbor.

In this manner the cup would circulate until each one present had taken a sip, drinking towards his right hand neighbor, until finally the cup would come back to the host, who would drain what remained and swallow the piece of toast in honor of all the friends assembled at his table.

History teaches that the ancient Greeks, the Romans, the Assyrians and the Egyptians were in the habit of drinking one another's health at dinner. Indeed, at Athens, the etiquette concerning what may be described as the liquid courtesies of this kind was very strictly observed, being known by the name of Philothe." The participants in the repast were in the habit of drinking to one another till they could carry no more, and they would pour out the remainder of the wine on the floor of the dining room, lest that might happen to be handy.

At Rome the same custom prevailed. Post-prandial oratory, however, was severely condemned as out of place, and while the Greeks contented themselves with exchanging, as they put the cup of wine to their lips, "I salute you; be happy," the Romans restricted themselves to the exclamation, "Propine," which is the Latin for "I drink your health."—Chicago News.

NATION'S GRATITUDE

AMERICA'S HOMES FOR ITS OLD AND MAIMED SOLDIERS.

It Is to General Winfield Scott, the Hero of the Mexican War, That We Owe the Real Initiative in This Work Where the Heroes of Our Wars Live.

The pension rolls attest to the lasting gratitude of the American people. For on the roster of the nation's fame are not alone the men who suffered in the civil war, but the widows and daughters of revolutionary soldiers, now less than half a score, those of the heroes of 1812, and many a name that was famous in the war with Mexico.

Nor is this the only evidence of the nation's gratitude, for throughout the country are palaces of comfort and ease, where the heroes of our wars live out their declining years as wards of the states and the nation. Our Soldiers' Homes form a study in gratitude which surpasses in interest even the story of Les Invalides of Paris, of the Soldaten Heim of Berlin, or those of Kilmainham and Chelsea for they are as extensive as the nation and as deep-hearted in spirit as is the thankfulness of those who toil that the aged warriors may know no further sorrow.

It is to General Winfield Scott, the hero of the Mexican war, that we owe real initiative in this work of gratitude. Like all great soldiers, his heart was with his army, and their sufferings and trials appealed most strongly to his noble nature. It was at the close of the Mexican war that the tribute extorted from the City of Mexico for himself and his soldiers, was placed by him to the credit of a Soldiers' Home. The draft for one hundred thousand dollars was indorsed by his fellows: "The Bank of America will place the within amount to the credit of the Army Asylum, subject to the order of Congress."

But Congress was slow to act and not until 1851, when the nation itself demanded immediate action were homes provided for those who were left from the three hundred thousand and more who had fought under Washington, and from the half million who had been under arms in the war of 1812. The act of Congress provided for a National Home at Washington, but as the people would brook no delay temporary homes were founded at New Orleans, at Greenwoods Island, Mississippi, and later at Harrodsburg, Ky. But the bulk of the Scott fund went toward the purchase of a five hundred acre tract three miles north of the national capitol. And upon it the government has erected many splendid structures, more than sufficient to accommodate all who have applied. Since its foundation nearly eleven thousand veterans have been admitted and to-day its walls give shelter to over seven hundred old soldiers, almost the last of the regular army. The rules of admission to this and all the branch homes are simple in the extreme. For the main home they read as follows:

1. Every soldier of the army of the United States who has served, or may serve, honestly and faithfully, twenty years in the same.

2. Every soldier and every discharged soldier, whether regular or volunteer, who has suffered, or may suffer, disability by reason of disease or wounds incurred in the service and in the line of his duty, rendering him incapable of further military service, if such disability was not occasioned by his own misconduct.

3. The invalid and disabled soldiers, whether regulars or volunteers, of the war of 1813 and of all subsequent wars.

The branch homes are as follows: Central branch, Dayton, Ohio; Northwestern, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Eastern, Togus, Maine; Southern, Hampton, Virginia; Western, Leavenworth, Kansas; Pacific, Santa Monica, California; Marion, Marion, Indiana.

These homes, which together form "The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," have cared for nearly 30,000 veterans, and now have within their walls nearly twenty thousand. The rules for admission require an honorable discharge, disability which prevents earning a livelihood, and no veteran drawing a pension of $16 or over is eligible, except by vote of the board of managers.

Yet these are but a few of the homes, for in twenty-six of the northern states separate institutions under state care provide shelter for the veteran, and in most of the southern states have similar homes for the widows of ex-Confederate veterans, some of the latter in charge of private organizations.

Over 1,200 inmates attest to the gratitude of New York in the magnificent home at Bath. As many are provided for in the Quincy home, Illinois and in that of Ohio at Sandusky. But perhaps the most elaborate is that of Iowa, at Marshalltown, which, while it contains only about 500 inmates, is arranged to accommodate more than double that number.

In fact all the homes are able to accommodate many more than are now within their walls, for the rush realized by the managers that the veterans of the civil war are growing silver-haired, and yearly more are knocking for admission. And as they enter they find each year some new comfort, some new addition to the thoughtfulness of the nation. All of the homes, state and national, are splendidly equipped. The immense grounds in all of them are beautifully laid out, the garden plots being cared for by the old veterans. In many of the homes the farms, looked after by the old soldiers, give appreciable incomes. At the national home in Milwaukee, the farm products have an annual value of $20,000, while those from the Leavenworth home easily sum up $15,000. Of course these figures are trifling compared to the expenses of the institutions which in Milwaukee sum up $325,000.

The libraries in all of the homes, both state and national, are growing annually. The Dayton home has about 20,000 volumes while the other institutions average from 2,000 to 10,000. Papers and periodicals from home and abroad are on file in all of the institutions.

The states and the national government, for its wards, it will be seen from all this, in no half-hearted fashion. Yet many will be surprised to hear that in some of the institutions there are even cures for drunkenness. It is safe to say that a considerable percentage of these old veterans have been impoverished by drink, and when they arrive at the institutions they are not considered as prison inmates, but as men to whom the nation owes a debt. Their weaknesses are condoned. They are under discipline, of course, but it is a discipline about thirty street boys gathered around. One slipped a piece of old iron into his pocket, the grateful bootblack with a bit of chalk decorated his back with a hideous caricature, his hat was stolen and put to the gutter as he soon and one of the boys accused him of stealing a 'dabber.'

"The man flushed with natural indignation, and immediately there arose a whoop of derision, and as he strode away he was guyed by the whole crowd for two blocks. While in this frame of mind it would have done him good to have interviewed some of the ladies who write the picturesque tales about the imaginary street boys."—Chicago Times Herald.

The One Chinaman in the Union Army.

The enlistment of a Chinaman in the volunteer army in California, recalls the fact that there was but one Celestial in the War of the Rebellion. His Chinese name is unknown, but the name which he enlisted with was Thomas Sylvanus. He was born in Baltimore about eighteen years before the outbreak of the war. When only a child he was taken to Pittsburg, where he acted as a servant for a wealthy family in which he lived. When the war broke out Thomas ran away and enlisted in the army. He served Uncle Sam until the close of the war, shortly after which he turned up in Indiana, Pa., where he resided until his death, which occurred a few years ago.

While in the service of the United States, Sylvanus contracted a disease of the eyes from which he went almost blind. In 1880 he applied for and was granted a pension of $12 per month. He also secured several hundred dollars back pension. An examination of the records discloses the fact that Sylvanus was the only Chinaman in the late war, and consequently the only one to apply who drew a pension. At last accounts his widow and children were still living in Indiana, Pa.—Washington Post.

Took the Colonel at His Word.

At Camp Thomas, Chickamauga, soon after Col. Andy Burt was promoted to the Colonelcy of the Twenty-fifth Colored Regiment, he undertook to exercise his troops in more ways than one. He informed them that they would have to play ball an hour each day in order to get accustomed to the southern sun.

"Now," said the Colonel, "you boys come out and we will take a turn at ball playing. Captain Jones, you with you. Lieut. Colonel Burt while playing, but simply Andy Burt. Now, play ball."

It soon came the Colonel's time at the bat, and with a vicious swipe he drove the ball hard into the crowd for three bags. A large, greasy, black soldier was doing the coaching act, and yelled, as the Colonel made a dive for first, "Run, Andy; run, you tallow-faced, knock-kneed, dabergasted——get up there three bags."

The Colonel stopped at first, turning on his heel, returned to the home plate, donning his straps, remarked: "I'm Col. Burt from this time on until further orders."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Dangerous Fun.

R. Ganthony, in Random Recollections, relates this experience of an actress in Africa:

One of the young ladies of the company—who, by the way, never seem to understand that black people are men—thought it great fun to go to a soldier's hut, peep in, and kiss her hand to the chief inside. He immediately came out to buy her, and was very much in earnest about it.

"No, thank you, I am not up for auction to-day."

"Three cows."

"Really very good of you, but—"

"Four oxen."

"No thanks, I am not for sale."

"Five oxen."

"No, let me go."

He let her go with a Zulu oath, and her friends, who had missed her, congratulated her on her safe return—which they had reason to do.

Test of Gamin in Real Life.

Not So Noble in Character as the Story Writers Picture Him.

"I have read a good many stories," said the city man, "about the honest newsboy who chases a man three blocks to return the five dollar gold piece given in the smoke of a ticket; the sympathetic bootblack who protects the widow's son, or the heroic street gamin who gets run over by a dray while rescuing another boy, and murmurs, 'Is Jimmy all right?' and then dies. I have come to the conclusion that these stories are written by girls fresh from school, or refined old maids who live in a village, and they are read by men who thoughtfully stick the tongue into the cheek while reading. Yet there are men who read and believe.

"I saw one of this class the other day who went to the rescue of a bootblack who was trying to fix his broken box.

"'My lad,' said the good man—they always call them lads in these stories—'you are in trouble; let me assist you.'

"Then he knelt down on the side walk in his good clothes, used a half brick for a hammer, raked up some twine from his pocket, and after fifteen minutes' hard work, made a credible job of it. He finished about thirty street boys gathered around. One slipped a piece of old iron into his pocket, the grateful bootblack with a bit of chalk decorated his back with a hideous caricature, his hat was stolen and put in the gutter as he soon and one of the boys accused him of stealing a 'dabber.'

THE MAN WHO HADN'T TIME.

He never had time to play,
He never had time to rest,
But he worked away and thought of a day
When what he had done would attest
The usefulness of his life,
His worth as a man among men;
Then he would quit the strife—
He would rest on his laurels then.

As a bondman chained he slaved,
Ever looking ahead;
As a miser he hoarded and saved,
Gruelling daily toil;
Beyond was a happy day—
Nearer and nearer it drew—
When his work should be put away
And cares should be banished, too!

At last, upon a day,
When the sun was low in the west,
He put his work away,
And sat him down to rest,
But where was the dreamed-of bliss?
And why was it never used?
Things seemed to be going amiss—
So he brooded a while and died.

A PAIR OF SINNERS.

BY ST. JOHN ADCOCK.

She was the only daughter of a draper who had once been eminent and was now retired; he was a young and prosperous barrister. Her manners and habits of thought were, perhaps, overrefined and affected; she was of a morbidly poetical temperament, and looked at life always through a prism of sentiment. He was unimaginative and practical.

Naturally, then, when they met they loved; and she was too romantic and he too matter-of-fact to believe in a long engagement.

They had been two months married, and but just returned from the honeymoon, were seated cozily by the fire one wild, wintry evening, when Mabel, in a languishing mood of sentimental melancholy, unburdened herself of a tardy confession.

It had really never occurred to her during the rapture of their short engagement, but once or twice before since their marriage it had risen to her lips to confess things might make a note of discord in the harmony of their wedded lives, she had left it unspoken. It was a trifle, no doubt; but hers was a disposition that magnified trifles. She found a subtle joy in grief, as do all who are surfeited with happiness, and, under such circumstances, the smallness of the grief is no disadvantage.

"Are you sure, Clarence," she asked him, sighing, "that you really love me?"

"Absolutely, dearest."

"And you have never loved any one but me?"

"Never—never—never!"

"And you will love me always?"

"Forever."

He yawned and looked at his watch. They were half expecting a visitor.

"Suppose I had a secret in my life which I had never revealed to you?"

She regarded him yearningly.

"What sort of secret?"

"I always used to say, dear, that I had told you all about myself—everything; that I was keeping nothing back from you. Are you sorry?" Her eyes grew misty with tears. "I did not intend to deceive you. There is one—only one—event of my life I have never mentioned to you. I had forgotten it until lately.

"Well—and what is it?" he interrupted, a little irritably.

She sank down on the rug beside him in an attitude of supplication, and clasped her arms about his knees.

"Don't look at me so coldly, Clarence," she pleaded. "Don't speak so harshly. You will forgive me, dearest. I know there should be no secrets between us, but it is such a little, little secret, and I never meant to—"

"No—no. Well—let me know what it is."

"It overwhelmed me with shame. Oh, words cannot tell how deeply it humiliated me."

"My dear child, do calm yourself." He laughed, but felt vaguely uneasy. "It can't have been anything so very awful."

"I will tell you, Clarence."

She dried her eyes, and, reaching up, laid a hand upon his shoulder caressingly.

"Did you know, dear, that I once used to write poetry?"

"Well, many persons do that. It may be foolish, but it is not wicked."

"I used a deal of it. My sole ambition then was to be a poetess. Much of what I wrote was love poetry—"

"Addressed, I presume, to the heartless man you just referred to?"

"No, dear. It was addressed to quite imaginary persons."

"Well, well! Yes?"

"And about six years ago, dear, I collected all my poems into a volume and published them."

"And the heartless man was the publisher?"

"No. The publisher was exceedingly kind. He thought very highly of my work—"

"Never mind the publisher. I am anxious to get to that heartless man."

"The book was published, and I saw only one review of it, and that—it was in a paper called The Writer—Oh, Clarence, it was cruel—cruel!"

"If that is all—"

"All! It humiliates me to think of it even now. I remember every harrowing word of it, but I cannot—cannot bring myself to repeat them."

"Don't try to. My dear girl, why on earth should you upset yourself like this over a trivial matter that happened and was forgotten six years ago by everybody but yourself?"

"But think how I suffered! The publicity—the disgrace! These poems," he wrote—oh, do not ask me what he said!"

"I assure you, I won't."

"For months after I avoided all who knew me. Such contempt—such ridicule as he poured upon me in that review! If there is any man I hate—yes, hate, Clarence!—it is he."

"And yet he may be quite a harmless, inoffensive sort of ass, if we only knew him."

"I withdrew the book instantly and burnt the entire edition."

"If all authors accepted their critics' verdict in the same spirit, that man who wrote about the hundred best authors would have had to fix his total at fifty."

"I felt as if all the world were laughing at me."

She shuddered at the recollection of it.

"By Jove! Of course, the best of critics are not angels, but yours must have been a—"

"A heartless, heartless man!"

"If it had been a man's book—"

"He may not have known I was a woman."

"You are too severe. No reviewer criticises a book till he has read the title page."

"But I did not use my own name. I wanted to see if they would mistake my work for that of a man. I called it 'Hearts' Longings, by Harold Ranson; but all my friends knew, so that really made no difference."

"Not a bit."

He had grown suddenly thoughtful, and spoke absently.

"You will forgive me, darling—won't you?—for deceiving you?"

"Deceiving me?" he asked.

"Well, for seeming not to confide in you unreservedly?"

Taking the childish, pretty face between his hands, he gazed down into her dreamy blue eyes, and laughed softly to himself.

"I—don't—know," he said.

"But—it was nothing actually wrong, Clarence," she cried indignantly; then, melting again, "I know, dear, I used to say all along that I had concealed nothing from you. I had told you everything—"

"I used to say the same to you, didn't I?"

"Yes."

"Well, coming to think of it, I remember I have a secret which I have never disclosed to you. So, after all, we are each as bad as the other."

She started, and scanned his features eagerly.

"You? A secret, Clarence?"

"Only a little one—like yours."

"But mine was no secret. I had forgotten it," she protested. "Besides, mine was nothing for which you could blame me!"

"I wish I could say that of mine."

"Clarence!" she sobbed, "you have been deceiving me!"

"No; I had forgotten about it."

"You always said," she faltered, her lips quivering, "you never loved any girl until you met me."

"Now, I want you to make me a promise: If I forgive you, you will forgive me?"

She hesitated.

"Tell me, first, all about it."

"Do you promise?" he insisted.

"Oh, Clarence, you can never be the same to me again! I do hope it is nothing dreadful. What can it be? I—I—"

"Do—you—"

"Yes, yes, dear. I promise!" she said desperately. "Whatever it is, I love you and I must forgive you."

"You won't hate me?"

"I could not."

She pressed her handkerchief to her eyes.

"I won't keep you in suspense," said he. "We have both been sinners, and I was the worst of the two. I must tell you, then. Before I was a successful barrister I was a good-for-nothing young scoundrel with a very good opinion of myself and very bad one of everybody else. I was a wicked young dog and did several scandalous things that I am ashamed of now."

She caught her breath and waited in an agony of expectation. He seemed very serious, and yet a bathing suit was flickering round the corners of his mouth.

"They were all of the same description, but I am sorry on account of one in particular."

"And that?"

"Well, being hard up, I used to earn old guineas in all manner of odd ways. I was a flippant, self-satisfied brute, and—" he paused, and putting an arm about her, drew her closer to him. "I have a heart now—you know I have, sweetheart, don't you? But once upon a time—you have promised to forgive me, and not to hate me!—in the days when you published your book, I was—"

"You—you, were?"

"The heartless man who reviewed it!"—St. Paul's.

Old in the Service.

"How are you getting along with your new servant girl?" asked the caller.

"Our new servant girl?" replied the hostess, with some indignation in her voice. "Why, she has been with us for four days!"

Exceptions.

"Oratory is a gift," remarked the admiring constituent. "Well," replied Farmer Corntossell, "mostly it is. But now and then a man gets good enough at it to charge you fur listenin'."—Washington Star.

In the Winter Months.

"Mrs. Lowdiet," meekly muttered the hitherto patient boarder, "I can stand hash every day without a murmur; but when you put raisins in it and call it mince pie, I draw the line."

Teacher (in geography class)—"Johnnie, how is the earth divided?" Johnnie (who reads the foreign news)—"Don't know; I haven't read the papers this morning."—Chicago Mail.

A MAGIC PERFORMANCE.

How a Coin Placed in a Handkerchief May be Made to Disappear.

You take any handkerchief and put a quarter or a dime into it. You fold it up, laying the four corners over it so that it is entirely hidden by the last one. You ask the audience to touch and feel the coin inside. You then unfold it, and the coin has disappeared without anybody seeing it removed. The method is as follows:

Take a fine, thin, privately put piece of wax on one side of it; place it in the center of the handkerchief, with the waxed side up; at the same time bring the corner of the handkerchief marked A (as represented in Fig. 1), and completely hide the coin; this must be carefully done, or the company will discover the wax on the coin.

Now press the coin very hard, so that by means of the wax it sticks to the handkerchief; then fold the corners, B, C, and D, (see Fig. 1), and it will resemble Fig. 2.

Then fold the corners, B, C, and D (see Fig. 2), leaving A open. Having done this, take hold of the handkerchief with both hands, as represented in Fig. 3 at the opening, A, and sliding along your fingers at the edge of the same, the handkerchief becomes unfolded, the coin adheres to it, coming into your right hand. Detach it, shake the handkerchief out, and the coin will have disappeared. To convince the audience the coin is in the handkerchief, drop it on the table, and it will sound as if on the wood. This is an easy trick.

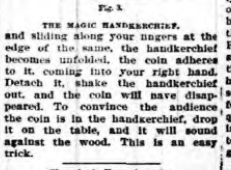

Fig. 3.

THE MAGIC HANDKERCHIEF.

Chemical Experiments.

"It is a great wonder to me," said an old chemist in his laboratory the other day, to a Denver Republican reporter, "why more boys do not take up chemical experiments as an amusement. Why, I can do things with the common materials of ordinary life which really seem to be more magical to the uninitiated than any of the wonders performed by magicians on the public stage.

"Now, there are those curious little bubbles of glass, known variously as 'Prince Rupert's drops' and as 'Bologna *tears.' Apparently they are merely lit*tle globules of glass, with elongated tails, made by heating a small glass rod in a flame and allowing the molten drops to fall into water.

"After they have cooled you may pound the thick part with a hammer or mallet, yet you cannot break them. On the other hand, if you break a little piece off their tails, or touch any part of them with a quartz crystal, they will disappear into the surrounding atmosphere quicker than snow will melt on a hot fire. To the person who does not know the reason the performance is most astonishing.

"And yet it is all very simple. It is due to what is known as surface cohesion. Glass, when heated to a molten state, has naturally reached a very high temperature, and when the drops of melted glass are allowed to fall into cold water the sudden change produces a stress all over the surface of the drop which is really terrific. This stress, however, must be considered as a whole. It is strong when taken all together, but it is exactly as though a piece of very thin rubber was stretched over the surface of the glass. If you break the rubber, its hands to resume its normal condition would pull it off the glass.

"So when you break off the tail of the drop or cut into it through the very hard glass with a crystal, its endeavor to suddenly resume its normal condition results in its own destruction, and it breaks up into particles, which are really finer than the finest sand. It seems like a wonderful performance, but it is no more wonderful than many another which any youngster could perform if he would study even the simplest forms of chemical action."

A Lullaby.

(By Anna R. Brady, Age 15.)

Crooning a song so soft and low,
Little Lou sits in her easy chair,
Rocked to the south wind's parting glow,
With its mellow light on her golden hair.

"Hushaby! Lullaby! Sleep, thee, my pretty one,"
And over the dolly she tenderly stoops—
"The birdies are sleeping, the long day is done,
While lower and lower the golden head droops.

"In yonder west the sun is descending;
May angels safe watch o'er my little one keep."
In a soft, sleepy sigh has the little song ending,
For baby and dolly are both fast asleep!

SMOKELESS POWDER.

A Remarkable Compound Soon to be Used in Our Navy.

It has been remarked that gunpowder is to the gun what the soul is to the body. It gives it life and makes it of some account. It is the means to an end. Gunpowder drives the shot that the man behind the gun aims at the enemy, and enables him, if he be as skilful as most of the marksmen in the United States now are, to demolish his target, whether it be a bird or a man or a ship or a fort.

Ordinary gunpowder, the kind one buys in a store, is a mechanical mixture of 75 parts of saltpetre, 15 parts of charcoal and 10 parts of sulphur. The properties of such a mixture possess may be altered to any desired extent by changing these proportions; the method of treatment also modifies the character of the resulting powder, and the size and shape of the grain likewise influence the action of gunpowder.

To manufacture gunpowder quantities of each ingredient are thoroughly mixed in the proper proportions, in a machine called a mixer; the composition resulting from this is known as green powder. Green powder must be subjected to the incorporation process, an extremely dangerous one, for it is in the incorporating room that nearly all powder mill explosions occur.

The green powder is put into a tub, where heavy runners of three or four tons weight grind it into a homogeneous mixture. After incorporation the "mill cake," as it is called, is crushed between gun metal rollers, then it is subjected to different treatment, according to the kind of powder to be produced, whether grain, pebble or prismatic. Granular powder is the ordinary grain gunpowder of commerce. Pebble powder, or giant powder, or blasting powder—for all three are practically the same—is quite like grain powder, except that each grain is of the size of a pea or a bean. Prismatic powder is the kind used in our service to drive shot home, therefore a short description of it may not be uninteresting.

The powder charges for guns of the United States Navy are made up of hexagonal prisms of brown gunpowder. Brown gunpowder contains usually about 82 parts of nitre, three parts of sulphur and fifteen parts of underburned charcoal, which accounts for the chocolate color of the powder. Prismatic powder passes through the same process as other powders, only the grains are pressed into prisms by hydraulic machinery instead of being separated and glazed. The prisms thus formed are one inch high and three-quarters of an inch on the sides; there is a round hole, half an inch in diameter, through the middle of each hexagon.

Smokeless powder is so called because when exploded it produces no smoke. As a matter of fact, however, a light, thin, unsparkled vapor is usually seen, but it quickly disappears. Smokeless powders, from the nature of the ingredients employed in making them, leave no residue when exploded, the products or the combustion being gaseous, whereas in ordinary gun powder, black or brown, as it is known, the products are partly gaseous and partly solid, the solid parts being visible in the deposit left in the bore of the gun, in the bits of fire blown out of the muzzle at the time of discharge and in the thick, heavy smoke that hangs about, obscuring the view.

Japanese Babies.

When a boy baby comes to a Japanese family it is the invariable custom to put a huge paper fish, resembling a carp, on a bamboo pole outside the door. This is done in the first month of May after the boy's birth. The carp is the national emblem, because it is strong and hardy and is typical of good luck. When the baby is a month old it is presented at the temple and a first name given it, the choosing of which is novel. The father writes on three slips of paper different names. The priest writes the fourth name in the air and the one first striking the floor is supposed to be especially favored by the god of the temple, and is chosen.

When the Japanese baby is 3 years old he begins to wear the obi or girdle, which consists of the loose robe worn by the Japanese and commonly called a kimono. When the boy is 15 he is considered of age, and a feast is held by his relatives, another name is given him and his head no longer shaved on top. He is now a man and his relatives give the feast in advertising him, most now affix "San" to his name. San corresponds to our "Mr." If his name is Omi he will hereafter be addressed as Omi-san.

Even the tiniest villages have their theatres, and Japanese children are all literally supplied with playthings. The business of amusing children is a recognized *industry, and the street jug*glers, acrobats, singers and story-tellers make comfortable livings. In the family the children are amused by the father, who tells them stories of Japanese heroes and warriors, or they play cards. Sometimes they play a game like checkers, in moves, but requiring 360 pieces instead of twenty-four. Kaleidoscopes, theatricons and kite-flying are also popular among children. When there is snow the youngsters play just as our own children do. Football, stilt-walking and contests with tops are in vogue.

New Soldering Liquid.

A German has brought out a soldering liquid which is acid free. It is made by dissolving 500 parts of zinc in 1000 parts of hydrochloric acid and 500 parts of water. When the solution is complete the remaining free acid is neutralized by the addition of ammonia water.

COST OF MEAL $500 000,000.

Where the Material Came From and the Environment Necessary for a Meal.

Recently, a man, who is fond of arithmetic, made up his mind that he would find out how much a dinner really cost. His first ascertained that the dinner he was eating cost seventy-five cents, presumably. He contradicted this, and then made out the following statement about the cost of that simple little dinner:

The pepper, he said, came from ten thousand miles away. It grew on a little bush about eight feet high, which must have had a growth of at least five years. The pepper was picked green; it had to be dried in the sun, and this meant employing women. It took one ship and one thousand miles of railroad to bring the pepper to the United States. The flour of which the bread was made came from Illinois; some one owned the land, and that meant the investing of capital, and then he had also to pay wages to workingmen. The flour had to be ground, and the building of the mill, and the plant, or machinery, meant more money invested. The millers had to be paid, coopers had to be paid for making the barrels, and, of course, the wood of which the barrels were made had to be cut and sawed and shaped, and this meant the employing of more men. Then the flour had to be shipped over the railroad and handled again by cartmen before it came into the house.

The tea on the table came from China and the coffee from South America. The codfish had to be brought from Maine. Men had to be employed to catch the fish; then other men and women were employed in drying, packing and boxing it, and it, too, had to make a long railroad journey. The salt came from the northwestern part of New York State. The spices in the cake came from the Spice Islands, over in the Indian Archipelago. The canned peaches came from California, and they, too, represented the employment of capital and labor. The simple little dinner represented, directly or indirectly, the employment of $500,000,000 of capital and 5,000,000 men.

Warning to Young Men.

The bicycle face is old. The bargain-counter face, the quick-lunch face and the war-bulletin face are more recent. The newest discovery in this line is the pipe face, which is grown by men who smoke pipes. The staid old Medical Record saw it first and said this of it:

THE PIPE FACE.

"The habit of smoking the pipe has a perceptible effect upon the face. The pressure of the lips to hold the pipe in position increases the curvature of the lips round the stem, and the muscles become more rigid here than in other parts. Thus the lips at a certain point become stronger and the pipe is unconsciously held in the same *habitual position. After long continu*ation of the habit small circular wrinkles form parallel with the curvature of the lips around the stem. These are crossed by finer lines caused by the pressure of the lips to retain the pipe in position. In the case of old men who have smoked a pipe for years the effect upon the lips is very marked."

An Historic Carriage.

An historic carriage owned by the late Dr. Evans has been offered for sale at the Paris Tattersall establishment, but it was decided at the last moment to retain the vehicle as an item of the estate. In it the doctor left Paris with the Empress Eugenie on Sept. 4, 1870, when he was assisting her to reach England. It is intended by the heirs of the noted dentist to transfer the carriage to the Evans Museum, which is to be founded in America under the clauses of the doctor's will.

The vehicle will be temporarily handed over to the care of the old coachman who drove the Empress, her attendants and the doctor to the coast in 1870, when she was about to embark for England in the Rover, Dr. Evans' yacht. The vehicle is a landau with accommodations for four persons, and was built in 1867 for the Exhibition. About ten years since Dr. Evans had it reclaned and reembellished, in order to make a journey to Granville over the Normandy coast traversed by him with the Empress in 1870. During that long drive he stopped at the same places en route as those selected on the memorable journey.

A Good Disposition.

Some day it will be found that to bring up a man with a genial nature, a good temper, and a happy frame of mind, is a greater effort than to perfect him in many accomplishments.

"How is it that your baby drops asleep at such a regular time? What do you give her?" "Nothing. Her father just stops singing to her."

LIGHTS IN THE PYRAMIDS.

Tomb of the Pharaohs to Be Illuminated by Electricity.

The ancient institutions of Egypt are rapidly giving way to the new order of things. For centuries old methods of transportation have been in vogue unaffected by the rapid strides in other parts of the globe, the camel being the only means of conveyance of freight and passengers, and crude agricultural implements of Biblical times have only recently been laid aside for newer machinery. Waterwheels have been recently made to turn mill wheels, and where no falls existed the Nile's waters are being impounded for power purposes as well as for irrigation. There are immense stretches of country, until recently unproductive, now covered with cotton plantations, and their product has become of the greatest importance to Egypt. English capital is now building a great storage reservoir near Assouan, in the Upper Nile region, in which will be caught the water of the river during the freshet season, to be used in the dry times. This will feed a great irrigation system, which, it is hoped, will reclaim vast stretches of desert land and what was once a barren waste of sand will be transformed into blooming plantations, growing wheat and cotton. Thus will be restored to the ancient country its old reputation and standing as the "granary of Europe."

The latest and not the least novel of these innovations is the illumination of the pyramids by electric light. Already the trolley car has invaded the ancient precincts, and it is possible to ride to these old structures from several points by electric vehicles. Wires will soon be laid from the Assouan cataract, where a modern power plant will be constructed, to the pyramids, and the interior rooms and passageways as well as the exterior will be ablaze with electric light. Many timid persons have heretofore been deterred from making this trip because of the gloomy interior. The tour was formerly made with the assistance of several natives, who acted as guides and torch-bearers, their flaming lights serving only to enhance the darkness of the passageways.

Novel Automobile.

A particularly novel type of automobile, advertised in an English journal as light and gracefully constructed, is shown in the illustration, which represents a combination coupe and motor tricycle. The motor cycle is detachable from the carriage and can be ridden by itself, but when attached as shown it serves the purpose of a horse. The groom or footman is supposed to sit in the motor-tricycle saddle and to start the combination by two or three turns of the pedals, after which the petroleum-driven motor attached to the rear of the tricycles develops sufficient power to propel the carriage without any further assistance. The oil reservoir will hold a sufficient quantity of oil to carry the cab between fifty and sixty miles. The cab is said to hold two persons comfortably.

The Mouse and the Banknote.

A country vicar tells a curious story about a mouse and a banknote. The note, which was left on a shelf in a store-room, always kept locked up, suddenly vanished. The servants were quite above suspicion. The fact that the note had been laid in that particular place and had disappeared, admitted of no doubt whatever. After some search it was noticed that there was a mouse-hole in a corner of the floor. A carpenter was sent for, and a board taken up. A large quantity of minute bits of paper were drawn out, the accumulation, probably, of very many years. Entranced to say, in one corner of the heap, a nest of young mice was discovered lying on a banknote! It was uninjured, no portion had been nibbled away, and was the only piece of paper left entire in all the heap. It appeared, then, that the mouse had carried the note, folded up as it was, through its hole, and then unfolded and spread it out as a lining to its nest, and had used it as a blanket, evidently conscious of its softness and flexibility. The wonderful part of the story is that the mouse left one piece of paper entire, apparently because it was of a different texture from the rest.

New Industry in Virginia.

A new industry in this country is to be established near Norfolk, Va. It is an institution for extracting the oil from peanuts. The prospectus of the company announces that the product from 1 acre of peanuts will be 228 gallons of oil, worth 50 cents a gallon; 3, 680 pounds of peanut flour, worth 2 cents a pound, and 3,680 pounds of meal for stock feed, worth 40 cents per 100 pounds, which will make the value of the product $460 for each day's operations.

The peanut flour is used for making bread cakes, etc., which are used in some of the hospitals in Europe. It is claimed that much of the castile soap of commerce is made from the oil of the peanut, and to that purpose the product of the Virginia mill will be devoted.

No fewer than 17,173 persons have been buried in Westminster Abbey.

THE COSTER'S WEDDING.

How "Entry 'Awkins and His Lizer" Celebrate Their Nuptials.

Touring in the eastern districts on my bicycle last Sunday took me, perforce, through the regions of Whitechapel, where I overtook a coster's wedding procession, says a correspondent of the New York Mail and Express.

A coster's wedding is a species of social function familiar enough to those whose lot is cast in the highways and byways of the east end of London. The typical coster is not the sort of a person to hide his light under a bushel on such occasions. He is careful to see that the fact of his nuptials shall be made known to the biggest possible section of the community at large, consistent with a due regard to the laws of economy. To do him justice, his efforts, ably seconded as they are by the feminine contingent, usually result in a striking success. The whole function is expressly designed to create a maximum amount of sensation with a minimum regard for the conventional rules of behavior at such events.

Sunday is the usual day fixed for the ceremony, the modest party assembled in the church maintains under the watchful eye of the person a subdued demeanor as a rule, though cases have been known when certain recognized items of the programme, such as old-shoe throwing, clapping on the back and universal embracing of the bride, were taken a little too previously. No greater extravagance in the way of carriages is ever thought of than the "donkey shay," possibly renovated and repainted for the occasion and reserved for the exclusive use of bride and groom. But more often the presence of a conveyance is entirely dispensed with, and a sort of scratch procession is organized to the home of the bride's mother. Here the first item is a feast, followed by a carousal of such sanguinary and prolonged length, to which a large and varied assortment of friends and relatives are duly invited. It occasionally happens that a few turn up without the formality of an invitation. Such a proceeding is risky, even in these free-and-easy circles, but should the unbidden guest succeed in timing his or her appearance to the proper psychological moment, when good wishes and good beer have worked their maximum of genial effect, probably no serious consequence to the harmony of the gathering would result.

All this, however, constitutes the family side of the affair. The public *festivities are usually fixed for the fol*lowing day. The place of resistance consists almost invariably of a room at the saloon bars of the neighborhood.

The first intimation given to the casual pedestrian that anything special is in progress is usually the emergence from a saloon of a party of gorgeously attired women and men, all in a state of extreme hilarity, who link arms promiscuously and commence a noisy, zig-zag march in the direction of the next saloon. The bride and bridegroom usually head this motley procession, with arms around each other's waist and leaning shoulder to shoulder in the most approved "'Awkins and 'Lizer" form. This sort of thing continues for the greater part of the day, the party becoming gradually more and more demonstrative until exhaustion, or the unexpected appearance of the police puts an end to the proceedings.

Woman on a War Vessel.

There is one instance, and one only, on record since the days of Artemisia, the friend and ally of Alexander, concerning whose naval prowess Herodotus tells such wonderful stories, of a woman who has fought on board a man-of-war.

She was the wife of one of the gunners on Admiral Rodney's flagship and plied the trade of a bumboat woman.

It was during the war between France, England and their colonies, which in American history is known as the French and Indian war, and Rodney had charge of the fleet in defense of the English Channel.

During a hot engagement of the admiral ordered, in great astonishment, that a woman was serving one of the guns and doing it well.

The fight was too severe to interfere at the moment, so that, the story goes, *in spite of the flagrant breach of dis*cipline the Admiral let her alone.

When the enemy had struck his colors he went to the woman and demanded:—

"What are you doing here?"

"Fighting the French, your honor. My husband is wounded and down in the cock-pit, and so I took his place. And why not, your honor? Do you think I'm afraid of the French?"

She was reprimanded very gently and sent ashore with ten guineas as a reward for her bravery.

The Parisian Cabby.

The Paris cabby is not merely an institution, he is a social treasure. He can be as drunk as a lord, as witty as the boulevardier, the worst scamp in Christendom, and in all capacities he is the stranger's best guide, philosopher and friend. Get into the right side of a cabby and he'll tell his passenger anything from a state secret to the latest Parisian scandal. As a cicerone he is invaluable, because, having a fund of "fairy tales" at command, he is never at a loss to answer any question the stranger asks. The other day a fiacre stopped in front of the Column Vendome, and a certain Bostonian put his head out of the door to inquire of his jehu what the column might be. Cabby, perched on the box, calmly replied: "Oh, that? That is the Column Vendome, which the communards pulled down to make into cannons!" an answer that so tickled Yankee humor cabby got an extra pour boire for his "bull" or his impudence.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Working for Plainfield.

The good folk of Scotch Plains feel that they have a grievance against the Plainfield Common Council. The cause of it all is the refusal of the Council for the present to allow the trolley to run down Second street. With few exceptions, the Scotch Plains residents are anxious to hear the hum of the trolley and to be quickly transported by its cars to Plainfield. They feel that it is not fair to them to delay the progress of this improvement.

The Plainfield Councilmen are not in office, however, to suit Scotch Plains. It's the welfare of Plainfield that they are concerned about. So it is probable that all the protests from that little village will amount to nothing until the Council decides that Plainfield is satisfied with the arrangements made with the trolley company.

There is a strong sentiment in Plainfield in favor of connecting this city and Scotch Plains by trolley if only a suitable route can be adopted. That can only be a question of time and then the trolley will spread out an arm to the east as well as to the west.

Somerville is Happy.

The staid old town of Somerville is feeling young again now that it has a real live trolley road with real cars on it. Some of the old-time residents goes with horror on the innovation, but most of the good people of the Somerset county seat find a great source of satisfaction in the trolley. So great is the interest in the trolley that the Somerset Messenger has devoted a portion of one of its columns to "Trolley Notes."

Two of the items included under that head are accidents wherein some respectable horse from the adjoining farming districts has risen to protest against the advent of the new-fangled arrangement that goes by itself. In one case the driver's face was "somewhat bruised and scratched." It will take some time before the county seat settles down after the excitement attendant on the first appearance of the trolley on Main street.

Somerset County's Sheriff.

Somerset county will this fall lose a good official and a faithful and honest worker in the interest of the county's welfare. Sheriff Wyckoff's term of office expires and the citizens of that county will have a chance to pick from the number of candidates who are already beginning to start their campaigns for the position. In another column will be found a sketch of the principal candidates as given by the Somerville Unionist Gazette. Their words of praise for the retiring official are timely, and The Press unites with them in the wish that the next incumbent will be able to perform his duties in as eminently satisfactory manner as Sheriff Wyckoff has done during the three years he has been in office.

A Trolley Suggestion.

It has been suggested, and the idea seems a feasible one, that the solution of the problem of how to connect the Scotch Plains trolley route with the present system in this city is to connect with the Fifth street line instead of attempting to run through to the centre of the city. The proposed line out East Second street could turn into either Berckman or Richmond streets, pass under the railroad and connect with the present tracks on Fifth street. Such a plan could do away with all the trouble with the property owners on East Front and Second streets, between Richmond street and Watchung avenue.

When the bicycle began to take such rapid strides into popularity, it was predicted that the time would come when it would supersede the horse. The motor or horseless carriage was looked upon as the successor of the horse in other ways. Thus, it was prophesied that the horse was soon to disappear from general use. The decline in the livery business was noticeable and seemed only another proof.

The day of the horseless carriage has not come in America, at least. It seems probable, however, that when it is sufficiently improved it will gradually take the place of the horse for business purpose. The bicycle will not, however, overcome the horse on the road. This summer, there seems to be a revival of interest in the horse in Plainfield. The business of the livery stables has been good this season when pleasant weather made it possible. Then, too, there have been a number of our citizens who have purchased horses and now spend much of their spare time on the road.

Trotting has immeasurably grown in general interest during the last year and the contests at the local driving park have attracted much interest from all, beside the expert horsemen, of which every city has a few. So far, the sport in Plainfield has been kept clean and the objectionable features, that kill a healthy outdoor enjoyment in other towns, have so far not appeared.

The City Park.

Although there are, perhaps, many of our citizens who do not realize the fact, Plainfield has a city park. And furthermore, the city park is no longer the eyesore that caused so much unfavorable comment. The efforts of the Town Improvement Association have not been in vain. The park has assumed a neat and orderly appearance and there are already many who take advantage of the shaded seats provided by the Town Improvement Association and rest there for a moment.

For nurses with their accompanying charges, the park has grown to be quite a resort. There has been plenty of criticism of the methods and practices of the association of the Plainfield women, but in that respect there cannot be ought but praise for their efforts in behalf of the park. It cannot all be done in a day, a week, or a month, for that matter, but the decided improvement that is now to be noticed should be a matter for general satisfaction on the part of every good Plainfielder.

Postmaster Bird.

Elias H. Bird has severed his connection with the city of Plainfield as one of its corps of public officials, and is now devoting all his energies to his duties as a servant of Uncle Sam in the office of postmaster of Plainfield. After considerable delay Mr. Bird's resignation, as city tax collector, was accepted Monday evening by the Common Council, and the city lost the services of a capable official. Since his first appearance in the tax collector's office, Postmaster Bird has made many friends. He conducted the business of that department in up-to-date fashion, and his books have now been audited and found correct in every detail. He leaves the office with the best wishes of those with whom he came in contact, and who were best qualified to judge of his faithfulness to his duties. The city has lost a good servant, but Uncle Sam has gained one.

The Sewer Beds.

The meeting of the Common Council last evening brought to light the fact that, under present conditions, the sewage disposal system is not adequate to the needs of the city. As a result, it was necessary to ask for an appropriation to increase the effectiveness of the sewer beds.

The fact that there has been a large increase in the number of sewer connections, and no corresponding increase in the number of beds is the cause of the present difficulty. In the original plan twenty beds were provided for, but that number was not completed. The present number used, seventeen, cannot take care of the sewage as they should.

There was much truth in the remark of Councilman Buckle that now the city had the sewer beds, they would have to make the best of it.

Weather Affects Merchants.

Many of the local tradesmen are complaining that the frequent showers of the past two weeks have seriously affected their business. The shoppers have taken to coming at such unexpected intervals that many of their usual customers will not venture out unless they find it necessary. Umbrellas are carried at all times, no matter how clear the sky. Instead of shopping through the city, the people rush after what they want, purchase it in a hurry and depart at once, keeping one eye on the sky. Liverymen find that many of their patrons fear being caught in the rain and so postpone their usual drive.

Of course, when the shower comes, there is no business for anybody except trolley cars and hacks.

The State is fast becoming cut up with trolley lines that are developing districts heretofore unreached by any method of rapid transit. The latest attempt is to connect Westfield and Rahway by a trolley road. There isn't any doubt but that it would be a desirable thing for everyone if the traction company is kept well under control. Although Westfield and Rahway are only five miles apart, they have had little communication with each other. To reach one place from the other it is now necessary to go by rail to Elizabeth, changing cars at Elizabeth. The new route will make the two towns seem far nearer.

Hotel Changes Hands.

Mr. Hansen, of Elizabeth, who has purchased the saloon and hotel business formerly conducted by Fred Caspar, on East Front street, took possession Monday.

Intervention.

It is not desirable to cross bridges till we come to them, nor do the American people anticipate any interference on the part of Europe in dealing with the questions of peace and war and the results of war now confronting us. Whatever the disposition of foreign nations, they are too much at cross purposes among themselves, too certain of the practical co-operation of the greatest of the world's naval powers with this country, to take serious risk in attempting to enforce conditions. Yet we must not shut our eyes to the fact that recent history reads us certain warnings, nor to the omen that there has been open discussion abroad as to the desirability of an international congress to revise our terms of peace with Spain, should these seem to Europe excessive or otherwise objectionable.

Between the first peace overtures, with their dilatory pourparlers on one side, or both, to the actual preliminary business of the protocol or rough basis of discussion between the accredited negotiators some time ordinarily elapses. Mr. McKinley will not delay the course of such an important business, but will doubtless insist on equal sincerity on the other side. But it can scarcely be expected that steady progress will be made without many dangerous halts and hitches in so delicate an affair. It is at such times that the intervention of foreign diplomats has been often exercised, though it may be in a circuitous and indirect fashion. If everything proceeds to an apparently satisfactory end, as far as the two countries are concerned, intervention sometimes comes in the form of direct international pressure. The congress of Berlin in 1878 snatching the fruits of victory from Russia's the partition of the treaty of Simonoseki at the end of the China-Japan war; the veto put on the porte after the late Greek war; the enforced restoration of Thessaly and the reduction of indemnity from $50,000,000 to $10,000,000, are more recent examples of interference to which many parallels could be added.

It does not change the status of the argument that in some cases such intervention has been in accordance with the sympathies of civilization. It is enough that nations have frequently assumed the power and made themselves the arbiters of right and wrong. And who does not know what the arbitration of international right and wrong means in such cases? After all the matter reduces itself to a question of power and the answer to the question, "Is the game worth the candle?"

The University Need.

Clark university at Worcester, Mass., sets a model for a class of institutions of which we need more. It is the one educational faculty which provides solely for "graduate" instruction. All our other colleges and universities, however much they may encourage and establish foundations for postgraduate study and original research, for the most part fasten their attention on the mental training of youth as a means to some end to be attained afterward. This is essentially true even of Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Princeton, the Chicago university, etc., in spite of the fact that these institutions are noted for departments of theology, medicine and science. But Clark university, with its 11 professors, aims solely to offer facilities for research in special lines, though these are versatile and widely divergent. It is an institution for serious and intellectual young men, not for lads feeling their way toward culture and refining it with frolic and athletic contests. It aims at the highest university ideal, and, though young in life and only blessed so far with 40 students, it is already greatly discussed and respected in educational centers abroad. To increase the number of such institutions and to further develop similar lines of work in our other great universities should be the aim of our endowment giving rich men and not to plant more small colleges, which are in effect higher "high schools." Of the latter class we have enough, valuable as they are.

One thing was made clear even to those previously inclined to carp by the official reports made by Admiral Sampson and his officers of the great naval battle. It was this—that the absent admiral was entitled to his proportionate share of the glory, as the battle was fought tactically on the plans and orders which he had provided. Yet one is tempted to regret that there had not been something more of the magnetic warmth and cordiality which Schley displayed in his congratulations to Sampson in the words of Sampson speaking of Schley. Both are valiant and faithful servants of Uncle Sam, but there is a difference in temperament.

Foolish philosophers have a way of sneering at the caprices of feminine fashion. Yet the history of fashion is the history of civilization. From the day of Eve's fig leaf to that of the sophisticated Worth gown it spans either directly or by implication all that is most interesting in human society.

The well known American artist E. A. Abbey was made an associate of the Royal academy three years ago, and now he has been elected member. These almost unprecedented honors might cause some of his jealous brother artists to cite them as another evidence of Anglo-American rapprochement.

Peace.

The option of peace lies within the grasp of Spain. All illusion, which deceived her people like a mirage appearing to a desert traveler, has been dispelled. There is scarcely a section of the Iberian peninsula now within reach of a newspaper which does not smart under the knowledge of irretrievable defeat and a premonition of woes to come. There can be no expectation in continued fighting except of still more crushing reverse. The only thing which could now feed Spain's dogged obstinacy in suffering further sacrifice of men and money is the fear of domestic convulsion. Certainly the spirit of proud sentimentalism has gone as far as is need. Nations of Europe desiring a settlement of the Spanish-American issues can help to accomplish it by guaranteeing the monarchy against the chaos of Carlism and revolution. This insures Queen Christina's ministry in dealing with peace negotiations as the sole problem to be studied.

One thing stands, however, unalterable with the present current of American sentiment. Spain must needs submit in such terms as to the loss of her colonial possessions as we of our free will choose to dictate. It is not simply a question of grasping new territory on the part of the United States, nor is it confined to the exaction of the only substantial substitute for a war indemnity in money which a bankrupt nation can offer. Spain has misgoverned and debased every dependency she has ever owned. She has lost colony after colony from this cause. In the interests of humanity and civilization this must come to an end, power which has been weighed in the scales and found wanting in all those qualities and ideals which justify power. The sooner Spain swallows this wholesome and bitter gall of knowledge the better for her. This country does not lack in chivalry or pity for a fallen foe. But America will stultify herself if she does not exact from Spain complete cession of further right to inflict misery and stagnation elsewhere than on her Mediterranean shores.

Reorganization In Cuba.

The instinct of the English speaking peoples is to build up as well as to tear down. This is well illustrated in the prompt measures to reconstruct the conditions of order, government and trade in the city and province of Santiago. Immediately on the surrender of that center of eastern Cuba, with its 25,000 inhabitants, to General Shafter's army of inferior number, a system of administration was organized wisely and liberally planned. The Cubans appear to have been greatly disgruntled because the province was not handed over to them to govern in their own fashion. The American government naturally prefers to give its insurgent allies some lessons in the arts of political and civil management before relegating to them so difficult a task. Spanish-American peoples have in themselves not proved themselves adepts in these most complicated problems of civilization. The disposition suspected from certain Cuban manifestations, too, rather to obey the dictates of hate and persecution toward the opposing element than to follow the policy of conciliation and clemency has had its due weight. We have no sympathy with the cruel and revengeful instincts of a Spanish inheritance. What we did not do in our own war we shall not permit in a foreign war.

The American administration imposes no restraints on life, liberty and business, except such as are essential to law and order. The military problem having been settled, freedom of action and complete protection are guaranteed to all who refrain from hostility to the new regime. This forecasts what the whole policy will be in treating the question as we gain further possession. The sooner the Cuban insurgent government learns to acquiesce and follow cheerfully in the same steps the sooner it will achieve its ambition and justify itself before the world.

Aguinaldo, the insurgent leader in Luzon, evidently distrusts the purposes of the Americans. The proposition of his committee to Captain General August to unite the Spaniards and the Filipinos under one flag, declare a republic, persuade the Americans to withdraw or invoke the interference of the powers, has a treacherous ring quite in accord with his career.

Kaiser Wilhelm the Restless will visit Jerusalem this fall. It will not be with scallop shell on breast in dress of humble palmer to expiate his imperial sins, but in all the peacock gorgeousness of Solomon himself. He will march to the clangor of drums and trumpets and symbols and patronize the scene of Christ's life and crucifixion with his usual condescension.

The regulars, who fought with the Seventy-first, New York volunteers, is to receive charges, resent as bitterly the charge of cowardice made against the latter named by a certain New York paper as if made against themselves, if the statements attributed to them are half way true.

The first fruits of Hawaiian annexation crop out in the desire of our new countrymen to enlist in any service under the stars and stripes. There is a fascination in feeding at the public crib, even to the extent of shouldering a rifle.

ROESEL MUST HANG.

MONDAY SENTENCED TO DIE AUGUST 26TH.

He Did Not Display the Slightest Emotion—Dr. B. VanD. Hedges on the Jury That Will Witness the Hanging.

Louis Roesel, the murderer of Farmer James C. Pitts, of Summit, in September last, was re-sentenced Monday morning in the Union county court by Judge VanSickel to be hanged Friday, Aug. 26th next, in the county jail here, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. The prisoner did not display the slightest emotion. He was pale from his long confinement, but otherwise there was nothing to indicate that he felt his position. He leaned carelessly against the side of the jury-box, while his counsel, Frank Bergen, was objecting to the right of the Judge to pass sentence at this particular time.

Roesel, on his way back to his cell, said to Sheriff Kirk: "Well, if I hang I hang, and that's all there is to it. I'll keep my courage up to the end."

The sheriff says he never witnessed such a cool display of nerve as shown by Roesel, who appears to have no fear of facing the gallows.

The Court made an order appointing a jury of twelve citizens of the county to witness the hanging and to report to the Court.

The jurors named are men who are well known and competent to be grand jurors in the county. The list selected is as follows:

William M. Oliver, Elizabeth; Victor Mravlag, M. D., Elizabeth; Benjamin VanD. Hedges, M. D., Plainfield; W. H. Swain, Summit; Edward S. E. Newberry, Linden; Emmor K. Adams, Cranford; George Ball, Rahway; Henry A. Rath and Charles P. Russ, Elizabeth; Mulford M. Scudder; Westfield; William Allen, Union; Edward B. Kelly, Summit.

In addition to this jury the Sheriff selects twelve deputies, and the law also provides for three newspaper reporters the privilege of witnessing the execution.

Property Transfers.

The following transfers of property have been recorded in the office of the County Clerk during the current week, as reported in the New Jersey Contractor and Gazette: Egbert Aisdorf et ux to John Schoonmaker, southerly side line Front to Second street, corner Dutch church property, $1,000; Plainfield Real Estate Company to Uzal H. McCarter, northeasterly line of Lee place and West Sixth street, Plainfield, $1.

Fell From a Trolley Car.

George Washington, colored, of Plainfield avenue, fell from a trolley car Sunday afternoon, while the car was rounding the corner of Front and Somerset streets, struck on his back, narrowly escaping serious injury. As it was, one of the car wheels was within inches of the car wheels. Washington was not holding on as the car swung around the corner.

Systematic Horse Stealing.

During sometime Friday night Quartermaster John I. Holly's famous Kentucky charger strayed or was stolen from his stable on Park avenue. As this makes the third or fourth horse that has similarly disappeared within the last week, it looks as though a systematic gang of horse thieves are at work in the vicinity.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death. Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving post-office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

Sufferers should take instant advantage of his generous proposition.

LUNCH WAS DELAYED.

A Small Fire at the Revere House Called Out the Department.

An alarm of fire from Box 26, at Park avenue and Eigth street, shortly before noon Tuesday, called the fire department to the Revere House. A small blaze was discovered in the floor beams to the kitchen, caused by an over-heated range. The damage will amount to $25.

Clerk Potts, of the hotel, turned in the alarm. There was a little trouble between Chief Doane and the chief cook. The Chief ordered the cook to draw his fire, but the cook refused to do so, saying that it was lunch time. Lunch was delayed, however.

FINDERNE BOY SHOT.

He Was With the Army at Santiago, But Is Now Home.

Fred. V. V. Shaw, who was wounded in the battle in front of Santiago, is at his home at Finderne on a forlough of a few days. His wound is healing nicely. A Mauser bullet passed entirely through the ankle, cutting a hole through which a lead pencil could have been put. He will return to the hospital at Tampa in a few days.

To Build the Parsonage.

Messrs. John Valiant, A. A. Taft, E. E. Winckler, Edward A. Vermeule and Rev. Mr. Gardner compose the building committee having in charge the erection of a parsonage for Grace M. E. church. The committee will hold a meeting in the near future and decide when the work will be started. The parsonage will be erected on the property near the church.

Farm Purchased.

Francis Kelsh Gillen has sold his farm of 79 acres on the Metuchen road to Leslie P. Mick, of New York. Mr. McMulken will give possession in about four weeks. The purchaser has not yet decided when he will move in Mr. Mick takes stock, farming implements and crops except potatoes.

Children Take a Long Walk.

"Ebbie" and Stella Freeman, children of Mr. and Mrs. E. Freeman, colored, of Arlington avenue, strayed from home Monday morning and were found by Warden Tom Martin at Dunellen late in the afternoon. The police had been notified of their disappearance.

HEAT INTERFERED WITH THE TROTTERS.

Only One Match at the Matinee Meet Saturday.

MYRTLE TWIG WON RACE.

DEFEATED OSBORNE'S WOVEN WIND IN TWO CLOSE HEATS.

Other Events Were Called Off on Account of the Heat—Great Day Planned for Next Saturday—Unique Event Will Be Held—To Drive Nearest Three Minutes—Races Was Not a Success.

The intense heat Saturday after noon interfered with the racing at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, and the matinee races were not the success anticipated. Only one race came off, that between John Osborne's bay stallion "Woven Wind," and Thomas Brantingham's bay mare, "Myrtle Twig." This race was trotted in two heats, and "Myrtle Twig" was declared the winner both times.

These two well-known horsemen have long contested the merits of their respective steeds, and challenged each other to a trial of speed Saturday afternoon. This event was to have come in connection with other events, and was a drawing card. Instead, the horsemen, with a few exceptions, stayed away, and left "Woven Wind" and "Myrtle Twig" in possession of the field.

The first heat was trotted in 2:25. The horses got a good start, and went around the track side by side. On the second lap "Myrtle Twig" broke, and this gave "Woven Wind" a chance to forge ahead. When "Myrtle Twig" came down again, she closed in on "Woven Wind" and they passed under the wire almost neck and neck. It was a close finish.

The second heat was trotted later in the afternoon and was a repetition of the first. The time made was a little faster. 2:23½, "Myrtle Twig" winning by a head.

Next Saturday afternoon something of a novel nature is to be introduced. Among the events will be a race for amateur drivers, in which they will see how near they can drive two miles in six minutes. This will be a difficult feat for inexperienced drivers, for they will not be allowed to carry watches or receive any tips from friends as to the pace they are going. He who has a horse that can go in 3:50 will hold in his horse, and probably come in the first mile in 4:00 instead of 3:00. As it will be impossible for him to drive the next mile in two minutes, this driver will be out of the race.

Another man, who has a horse that can go in 3:50 will push him all the time, and may come in in 2:50. A race similar to this one was held a few years ago, and the prize was won by John Osborne, who made the first mile in 3:01 and the second in 2:59, thus winning the prize. Experienced jockeys like Osborne, Brantingham and Brower will be barred out.

The horses will not all be started together, but when the first has reached the quarter pole, the second will start, etc.

Great sport is anticipated, and as prizes will be awarded, the interest will be increased.

Several of the new horses recently purchased are expected to be on the track Saturday and show what they can do.

LIGHTNING PLAYS HAVOC IN JERSEY.

Set Fire To Big Barns Near Bound Brook.

HEAVY LOSSES REPORTED.

POOR FARM NEAR IS UNDESTROYED BY FIRE.

Lightning Started the Conflagration—Another Big Fire Near Flemington—Crops Suffered in the Storm—Bolt Struck Staten Island and Elizabethport Ferry House—Damages Elsewhere.

The breaking of the warm wave, as prophesied by the weather observers, has been attended with thunderstorms of unusual intensity. The rain fell very heavily and the lightning played havoc through this section of Jersey, burning and destroying property that will amount up in the thousands. Saturday evening a storm raged south of this city and much damage has already been reported. Plainfield felt the edge of the storm, but the electrical display that caused so much havoc was further to the south.

At 6:15 o'clock Saturday evening, just as the storm was at its height, a bolt of lightning struck the large barn belonging to I. V. Gulick, who lives on the Raritan river road, three miles from Bound Brook. Martin, the Polander laborer, who is employed about the farm, was in the barn and felt the shock.

The shock stunned him for the moment but he soon hurried out to see the top of the barn all ablaze. The family were all away at the time. In the barn were five horses which the hired man hurried out. He then saved fifteen head of cattle in an adjoining barn.

Meantime, the neighbors began to arrive and dragged out most of the wagons and a buggy from the carriage sheds. The fire spread very rapidly and was soon communicated to the other barn, the carriage shed and two great barracks of hay. The chicken house was also burned.

In the barn was Farmer Gulick's oat crop for the past few years, his new wheat crop and a stock of other grains. All his farm utensils and machinery were destroyed. The buildings were burned to the ground. A shed in the rear of the house was torn down to save it from the flames. The house, which was of stone, was saved.

The fire burned very fiercely until midnight. There was a limited supply of water and it was too far from Bound Brook to call out the department of that borough. The efforts of the neighbors were confined to saving the house and the contents of the barn which could be carried out before the flames spread through the building.

Mr. Gulick is rather uncertain as to exactly what his loss is. He says that it will be $6 000 or over at the least. It was partially covered by insurance. The barns had just been overhauled and put in excellent condition, while the new crops had just been placed there.

The fire did not burn itself out until Sunday afternoon.

The storm seemed to follow the Raritan river and the Kill von Kull, visiting New Brunswick, Metuchen and Rahway. The trolley systems of the places mentioned were affected by the lightning and traffic generally delayed.

The poor farm which is located on the road between Metuchen and Iselin was struck by lightning at 7 o'clock Saturday night. The poor-house, with the adjoining barns and outhouses were all burned to the ground, together with several barracks of hay. The loss will amount to $10,000. All the occupants were driven out into the rain, losing what few possessions they had. They were temporarily housed on a neighboring farm.

Lightning struck the ferryhouse of the Staten Island and Elizabethport Ferry Company on the Richmond county side of the Kills. All the lights in the ferryhouse were put out, but the damage caused was slight. A couple of women who were waiting for the boat to Elizabethport were badly frightened and fainted.

A terrific thunder storm, accompanied by high winds and vivid lightning, passed over Flemington. Lewis Cole's barn was struck by lightning and destroyed, with its contents, as were also several outbuildings. At Cherryville, Kilnesville, Stanton and other vicinities growing corn was ruined by the gale.

HUNTER IS MISSING AND MONEY IS GONE.

Scotch Plains Excited Over the Disappearance of Her Livery Stable Keeper—Was to Marry Miss Yorke Soon—She Gave Him $200, She Says—He Was to Fit Up a Home With It.

People in the village are wondering what has become of John Hunter, the liveryman, who suddenly disappeared from town a week ago today. Where Hunter is remains a mystery, but the reason for his flight is becoming apparent.

Six months ago a German family by the name of Yorke moved to town and took up their residence in Anthony Farley's cottage on Union avenue. Soon afterwards a sister of Mr. Yorke's came to make her home with her brother and his wife. Among the neighbors who grew intimate with the Yorkee, especially with Miss Yorke, was John Hunter, who resided close by.

Hunter was a frequent caller at the house, and payed Miss Yorke marked attention. They went out together, took walks in the moonlight, and became very friendly. Miss Yorke, it is said, thought a great deal of Hunter, and had promised to marry him.

About two months ago Hunter and Samuel Talntor bought out the livery business of F. K. Clark. Their success pointed to a speedy marriage, and the village gossips were everyday expecting to receive invitations to the wedding.

Miss Yorke had a little money in her own name, about $200, it is alleged, and a week ago Saturday night Hunter persuaded Miss Yorke to let him take it and go to New York to purchase furniture. The prospective bride says that she fully trusted Hunter and turned over the money, which was the result of her savings and earnings for years, to him, expecting him back at night with all the necessary articles with which to go housekeeping.

Hunter is said to have displayed a large roll of bills in one of the hotels that day, which, he laughingly remarked, "was not made in the livery business."

Hunter did not return that night, nor on Monday or Tuesday of last week. The bride to be kept up an impatient watch for him, but when three days had passed bringing no Hunter, she began to make covert inquiries around as to where Hunter had gone.

The facts soon became known, and outsiders interested themselves in the story. Hunter's family say that the missing man is in Baltimore. Others think that he is in New York, and that when the money is all gone he will return to the village. No warrant has been issued for his arrest, but the villagers hint at a warm reception which will be afforded him if he does return.

SHOOT FOR PETERS' SILVER TROPHY.

Opening Shoot of Central New Jersey Trap Shooters' League.

DUNELLEN GUN CLUB WON.

CLIMAX TEAM LACKED ONE OF ITS REGULAR MEMBERS.

T. B. Kellar's Son Shot His First Match—The Trophy Given by Peters' Cartridge Company Through Mr. Kellar—Kellar Made High Score—Poor Day for Trap Shooting—Much Interest Shown

Even the fierce heat of Saturday could not scorch the enthusiasm of the trap-shooters of this section. They turned out Saturday afternoon to attend the first regular shoot of the Central N. J. Trap-Shooters' League, which was held on the grounds of the Dunellen Gun Club.

The feature of the meet was the opening of the club contest for the new trophy which has just been offered. The Peters Cartridge Company trophy, it is called, and it was offered through Thomas H. Kellar, of Plainfield, who is manager of the New York end of that well-known concern. There are to be two matches at each grounds and the club winning the most will get the trophy, a handsome silver loving cup.

It was by no means an ideal day for shooting, for the sun was unusually hot and the glare hurt the eyes of the sportsmen. There was, however, a good attendance. The Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, and the Bound Brook Gun Club were represented beside the home club. New Brunswick is expected to join the league shortly. The Climax Club was minus one man, and so Tom Kellar put in his son, T. H. Kellar, Jr., to make up the five. The younger Kellar has not taken an active part in the sport, so he was not prepared to do any fancy shooting. Considering the fact that he was without experience, his showing was very good. The elder Kellar made the high score of the day, breaking 24 targets out of 25.

The match was won by the Dunellen Gun Club after a lively contest. At the start it was anybody's match. Then Tingley, of the Bound Brook delegation, fell down in his shooting. Young Kellar missed his first target, then broke three straight, and then shot with varying success.

Dunellen won out by six targets, with Bound Brook second, and the Climax team last by six targets. After the match shots were several sweepstakes, in which the honors were divided.

The scores in the team race were as follows:

THE TATTLING TONGUE.

Rev. Dr. Lewis Preached a Sermon On It at Trinity Church Yesterday.

Rev. Dr. A. R. Lewis, who preached in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning, took for his text "Taming the Tongue," Proverbs 21:23, "Who so keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles." His talk was a very practical one and commanded the closest attention of his hearers. He faithfully depicted the tattling tongue, the quarrelsome tongue and the scolding tongue, and at the close of his interesting discourse gave three never-failing remedies for their cure—God's grace, self-control and silence.

STRUCK BY CABLE CAR.

Wm. Swartz, of Clinton Avenue, Met With Serious Accident in New York.

While Wm. Swartz, of Clinton avenue, was in New York a few days ago visiting his wife's sister, he met with an accident that nearly proved fatal. He started out last Sunday forenoon with his two-year-old daughter, Edith, for the purpose of taking a trolley ride. He was crossing Third avenue in the neighborhood of Eighth street, when a cable car came along and hit him. He was knocked down and became unconscious. His daughter also received a slight scratch in the head.

Mr. Swartz was picked up by a policeman and carried to a drug store near by where prompt treatment was given to his injuries. The policeman had detained the motorman, secured his name and the number of the car, and he asked Mr. Swartz if he desired to enter a complaint. The latter stated that at present he was unable to determine who was to blame, and did not care make a complaint. The policeman gave him the name of the motorman and names of eye-witnesses, and Mr. Swartz has placed the matter in the hands of his sister-in-law's husband, who is a lawyer.

Mr. Swartz was assisted to the home of his relatives and he and his family returned home Monday evening. Dr. Zeglio is attending to his injuries, which consist of a large and deep cut in the back of the head and a wound in the left leg.

PUTTING THE WIRES UNDER THE GROUND.

Methods Used by Telephone Company in Laying Cables.

WORK BEGAN LAST WEEK.

THE CABLES HAVE TO BE PULLED THROUGH THE CONDUITS.

West Side of the City to Be Connected First—New Exchange to Be Opened in Spring—Manager Runyon a Busy Man—How the Work is Done—5,020 Feet of Lead Cable Now in Use.

This spring and early summer when workmen were busy laying the conduits, or "ducts," as they are called, for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, speculation was rife as to how the cables ever could be placed in them. The workmen opened the trenches, laid the "ducts" and covered them again, leaving no possible opening except the manholes distributed about the city.

The solution to this puzzle was found last week, for with the arrival of 5,020 feet of lead cable, weighing twenty-four tons, and a force of fourteen men, preparations were at once begun to place the wires in the "ducts."

A manhole was uncovered, and a workman dropped down to the bottom. In his hand he carried a bundle of thin wooden rods, each about a yard in length, and fitted with a screw at one end and a cap at the other. A rod was inserted in the open end of a "duct," which was seen coming up flush with the bricked up side of the manhole. This rod was pushed as far into the "duct" as it would go, then before letting go of it, another rod was screwed into the end of the first one and pushed in as far as it would go.

This was repeated until the first rod could be seen projecting from the end of the "duct" in the next manhole. The man in the first manhole attached a wire to the end of his last rod, gave the signal, and the workman below began to pull. Out came the first rod. This was unscrewed and tossed out of the way. The second followed, and the third, and so on until the last rod was through. The wire then came, and on the end of that was fastened a small rope. A thicker one followed that, and lastly came the cable.

The cable was not pulled through by hand, but a machine, especially made for the purpose, was attached to the heavy rope, and drew it through in great shape.

These lead cables contain 100 pairs or 200 wires. They are about two inches in thickness, so the size of the telephone wires can be easily imagined. The work is to be continued from manhole to manhole until all the cables on the west side of the city are in place.

Manager Charles W. Runyon, who is in charge of this work, says that the cable being laid down Park avenue will be the main one. From this main cable branches will go west on Fourth, Fifth, Eighth and Ninth streets. Connections will be made with the North avenue office by fall, and the subscribers in the western part of the city will be connected with the underground system.

It is not the intention of the company to connect the cable on the east side with the North avenue office, as the company expects to get into its office on Park avenue by next April. A bulge has been put on the cable at Fourth street, so it can be pulled into the new office without trouble or expense.

No underground connections with houses will be made, but distributing poles will be erected at convenient distances which will necessarily be above ground. These poles will be of the regular height, fifty to sixty-five feet, and will be placed in the rear of buildings as often as possible. This work is all to be done while the present system is still in operation, and the old wires will not be disturbed until the underground wires are in working order. The subscribers will not be interfered with in the least, and will get their regular service without trouble. When the new system is complete, the connections will be made in a short time, so short a time, it is said, that the users will not know that they were disconnected. All these things Mr. Runyon has to see to, and if anyone thinks that he doesn't have his hands full that person is mistaken.

There is quite some work still to be done before the system can be placed in working order. The distributing poles are to be connected with the cables, and the houses with the poles. The cables have to be spliced and soldered at these breaks, and many other little things will come up which must be done before that system is complete.

Died After Brief Illness.

Mr. and Mrs. David S. Dunavan, of East Front street, have the sympathy of the whole community in the sudden death of their son, Reese Laire Dunavan, six weeks old. The little fellow died Saturday at 7 o'clock after a brief illness with summer complaint.

GATHERED ON A LAWN.

CHARMING FESTIVAL TO RAISE MONEY FOR GRACE M. E. PARSONAGE.

Miss Woolston and Miss Stevens, Assisted By Their Sunday-School Classes, Gave a Lawn Party Friday Evening.

To help raise money with which to build a new parsonage for the Grace M. E. church, two of the teachers of the Sunday-school, Miss Ada Woolston and Miss Bertha Stevens, conceived the idea of holding a lawn party. The plan was carried out Friday night, and the party was given on Mrs. Edmund P. Stevens' lawn, 65 Grandview avenue.

The party was a great success, and, after paying all expenses, netted about $20, which will go to the building fund. The party was given by the two teachers and the members of their Sunday-school classes, about twelve young people in all. Great credit is due them for the pleasant way in which everything was conducted.

The lawn and piazza were prettily decorated with Chinese and Japanese lanterns, flags and streamers. There were tables scattered about at which the young folks gathered, ate ice cream and cake, or drank ice cold lemonade. No programme was rendered, but the evening was spent in social intercourse and pleasant chat. The piano was moved near one of the parlor windows, and several of the young women played selections during the evening.

Miss Lottie Benner presided over the lemonade table; Miss Belle DeMott and Miss Tillie Uhrhahn looked after the candy table; Miss May Fairchild and Miss Marie Keeney, over the cake; Miss Stella Vermeule, fruit, and Miss Grace Powell, Miss Marian Pearson and Miss Bessie Farley, after the ice cream table.

MIGHTY FISHERS FISH.

RETURN FROM PERTH AMBOY LADEN DOWN WITH SPOILS.

A Party of Local Fishermen Spent a Day Aboard a Yacht in Raritan Bay—Caught Many Fish—Lots of Sport.

Even the fishes shuddered when they saw the array that departed from the North Avenue station Friday night, en route for Perth Amboy and the fishing ground. Evidently they were prepared for all emergencies for the medical profession was particularly well represented. Judging from the traps they carried, they intended to catch everything in the bay.

The party consisted of Dr. Carman, H. C. Compton, Dr. Nelson, of New Market, Fred Nelson, of New Market, Horsley Barker, R. F. R. Huntsman, Dr. Bedford, Gen. Eli Long, Frank Nelson and Mr. Charles R. Thiers.

At Perth Amboy, they took a yacht and sailed for the fishing grounds off the Navesink Highlands. There they spent the night and slept on board the yacht. At least they were to sleep but no one can tell what happened during the hours of darkness.

Saturday they entered the contest with the fish and a great day they had of it. Nobody made any attempt to count the fish after the first twenty minutes. They had a big crate on board that was heaping full when the sport was ended and the finny occupants of it were to be numbered by the hundred. Altogether the day was a very successful one.

Saturday night, they returned to Plainfield, laden down with the spoils of the day's sport.

CO-OPERATIVE AUXILIARY.

One Will Be Started Here in Connection With the Association.

Last Saturday evening the Plainfield Co-operative Association held a social at their store at the corner of Central avenue and West Second street. In addition to the social features the members and their friends had the pleasure of listening to an address by James Rhodes, of Cambridge, Mass., who is secretary of the National Association. Mr. Rhodes told about the workings of the ladies' auxiliary which is associated in some places with the Co-operative Associations. As a result of the talk on this subject an effort will be made during the coming month to start such an auxiliary in this city. The association will hold another social on the evening of the 27th of August at their store, in fact a social will be held every month. At the social Saturday evening ice cream, cake and lemonade were served by the committee in charge.

This evening there will be a meeting of the board of trustees of the association at the home of Henry Van-Middlesworth, of Elmwood place, when arrangements will be perfected to start an auxiliary.

This Is No "Fish" Story.

George Macintyre, of East Front street, has returned from Barnegat where he has spent several days fishing. He brought 100 fish home with him, and said that one day he hooked a monstrous weakfish that straightened out the hook and got away.

Ex-Judge W. R. Codington is spending a few days on his farm at Millington.

CUSS WORDS COST A DOLLAR APIECE.

Expected Racy Trial of Fritz Did Not Take Place.

WAS GUILTY OF SWEARING.

VETERAN HORSE DEALER CHANGED HIS PLEA AT THE LAST MOMENT.

The City Judge Allowed Him to Change His Plea and Fined Him Three Dollars—Fritz Went to the Wrong Place First—Judge Thought He Wasn't Coming to Court at All.

Adam Fritz swore. He now admits that he used three cuss words. Each word cost him $1. Such was the decision of City Judge DeMeza who bunched the whole affair Saturday and fined the veteran horse dealer $3. Using profane language was the technical charge. Adam says that he thought his words might prove more expensive than they did.

The case has attracted unusual interest throughout the city for both the offender and the complainant, Councilman Walter L. Hetfield, have a host of friends and acquaintances. Adam Fritz has the reputation of going into anything heart and soul, so it was generally supposed that the trial would be a racy one, indeed. Fritz had given out that he would be his own lawyer and his sharp tongue was expected to provoke a verbal battle with the Councilman who is also quite handy in the use of the English language.

The affair came to an abrupt termination Saturday when Adam Fritz appeared in the City Court and quietly pleaded guilty to a charge of using profane language.

Councilman Hetfield, the complainant in the case, was not prepared for trial, as his only witness was not present, but was saved the trouble of going to issue by this unexpected action on Fritz's part.

Fritz's admission of guilt cost him $3. He pulled a five dollar bill out of a well filled wallet, rubbed the green back carefully to make sure there was not another one sticking close to it, then tossed it on the judge's desk with the remark, "I got off cheap enough," at the same time casting dark looks over in the direction of Mr. Hetfield, his one time friend.

The case had been set down for trial in the station house at 9 o'clock. Through some misunderstanding Fritz went to the Judge's office instead. When the hour had passed and Fritz failed to appear, Judge De Meza ordered Roundsman Frederickson to get a warrant, go over into the borough, and arrest Fritz.

When the officer reached the office, there was the defendant. The case was called, and Fritz at once asked permission to change his plea to guilty, which was granted.

WIFE DIES; HUSBAND ILL.

Mrs. Edward Titsworth Died Saturday at Her Home on New Street.

Mrs. Edward Titsworth, an elderly member of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, died at her home on New street Saturday noon. She was buried Monday at 4:30 o'clock from the church.

Mrs. Titsworth has been ill for several weeks. She died from a complication of diseases. Her husband, too, is ill, and has not been permitted to see his wife in three weeks.

Mrs. Titsworth was a daughter of the late David Smith, of Church street, and was married to a Mr. Moore. She had two children by her first husband, Jeremiah A. Moore, of West Fourth street, and David Moore, of Orange. She was married to Mr. Titsworth several years ago, and at the time left the Methodist church to join the denomination to which her husband belonged.

SAVED A FREIGHT CAR.

Prompt Work by Engineer Sisk and Others Put Out Fire.

Saturday afternoon David J. Sisk, engineer at the Walter Scott Press Works, discovered a freight car on fire on a siding near the foundry of the works. He ran to Foreman Weseman and reported the matter, and assisted by Messrs. Templin, Smith, Carman and others, the fire hose at the shop was brought into action and a stream of water thrown on the fire which was beginning to burn fiercely on one end of the car. It was soon extinguished. The fire was supposed to have started from a spark from a passing locomotive.

Rev. F. E. Peterson Preached.

Rev. Frank Fletcher, of New Market, who was to have occupied the pulpit of the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday morning, was detained at home, and Rev. F. E. Peterson, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church there preached in his stead. Rev. Mr. Fletcher occupied the pulpit in the evening.

Horses Overcome by Heat.

Two of Capt. Hand's horses were overcome by the heat Saturday. One died near Oak Tree, enroute to Boynton Beach. The other was overcome at the Beach, but is now recovering.

RACE FOR SHERIFF IN SOMERSET COUNTY

Already There Are Many Aspirants for the Office.

NORTH PLAINFIELD NOT IN IT

DEMOCRATS MAY SPLIT ON A CANDIDATE OVER CURRENCY QUESTION.

Unlogist-Gazette Tells Something of the Candidates in Both Parties Who Are Very Anxious to Secure the Nomination—Sheriff Wyckoff Has Been An Exceedingly Successful Official.

The office of Sheriff is regarded by politicians as a hungry man looks upon a delicious morsel of food. In common parlance "it makes their mouths water," remarks the Unionist-Gazette. The office becomes vacant this fall in Somerset county by the expiration of Sheriff Wyckoff's term, and already their are numerous aspirants to succeed him. It will take a good man, however, to conduct the office in as satisfactory a manner as has Sheriff Wyckoff. He has devoted his whole time to its duties, and the work has been well done.

On the Democratic side there is quite a stir among the politicians and it begins to look as though it would be a hard task to decide on a single individual without some friction. The man who seems to be in the lead at the present time is Selah Schoonmaker, the well-known agent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company at South Somerville. Mr. Schoonmaker has been at work for some time, and he seems to have made good progress. He is popular and a good business man. But the question is whether he will suit both the gold Democrats and the free silverites.

Then Director William Logan of the Board of Freeholders is said to have a weather eye on this nice office. He is a dyed-in-the-wool Bryanite, and would suit the most rigid of this class. Adam Hummer, of Millstone, would also be pleasing if the Democratic convention should see fit to nominate him, and he will probably do some active canvassing for delegates, and may make the other candidates hustle before the finish.

It is whispered about that Calvin McMurtry would like to try his hand once more in a shrievalty contest. He made the fight against Sheriff Wyckoff and lost. He now feels that he should be given a second chance, so some of his friends say. He is letting the matter rest with his friends up to the present time, and may not conclude to make an active canvass.

On the Republican side of the fence there is already some active work going on. The most interesting little fight is over in Franklin, which boasts of two candidates, Collector C. V. N. Suydam, of Middlebush, and Sanford Snyder, of Millstone, who are both seeking the delegates from that township. Both feel confident of success. The contest seems to be a friendly one up to the present and which gentleman may have to retire remains to be seen.

Assemblyman P. V. D. VanDoren early announced himself as a candidate, but when he recently received an appointment as deputy revenue collector, it was generally understood he had withdrawn. But Mr. VanDoren was in Somerville this week and says he is still in the field and expects to remain there. About the time Mr. VanDoren received his appointment George W. Cooper, of Somerville, announced himself as a candidate for the office. Cooper is thus the only candidate from Bridgewater township up to the present time.

WANTED TO PAY A DEBT.

He Broke Into Perrin's Kitchen in His Anxiety to Square Accounts.

Sydney Barker, a young man 22 years of age, living on Mountain avenue, was arraigned before Justice Crosley, of the borough, Monday morning, on a State warrant issued at the request of Edward Perrin, of Grandview avenue. The complaint charged that Barker had effected an entrance into Mr. Perrin's house without cause. When the case was called Monday the complainant did not press the charge and the defendant was dismissed.

Some time ago Mrs. Barker borrowed 25 cents from Mr. Perrin, and last Thursday evening about 11 o'clock Mr. Barker took a notion that he wanted to pay the money back. Mr. Perrin told him from an upper window that he could pay the money back in the morning or leave it on the piazza. This proposition did not please Barker and he went to the back of the house and effected an entrance into the kitchen.

He had a warrant issued for Barker's arrest and he was arraigned. Mrs. Perrin, who has been at Asbury Park, but who has since returned, implored her husband not to press the charge and he did not.

Miss Evra Estelle Wilkins, of East Fifth street, has gone to Orange and Montclair to remain until the middle of August.

A THROUGH TROLLEY TO NEW BRUNSWICK.

Plainfield and Brunswick Traction Companies Agree to Terms.

A COMBINATION HINTED.

PLAINFIELD WILL SUPPLY POWER TO TAKE CARS THROUGH DUNELLEN.

Cars Will Be Running There in a Week—Cars Are to Be Run Direct to New Brunswick Soon—The Fare Will Be Forty Cents—The Route is to Be Extended to Somerville Also.

By next Sunday the residents of Plainfield will be able to take a trolley ride from this city through Dunellen to the western boundary line of that borough. The poles are now erected and in a few days the wires will be strung and the track at the terminus of the Plainfield tracks will be connected. All this will be done within a few days and everyone will feel happy. The result of a conference is that the Plainfield trolley cars are to run through without change with the power from the Plainfield electric light station. From the western boundary of Dunellen the cars will be run with power that is used to run the Brunswick Traction Company cars from Bound Brook to New Brunswick.

The agreement was settled yesterday after a consultation between the officials of the two companies, so called. People who ought to know have given it out that they do not believe there are two companies, but that the Plainfield Street Railway Company has been consolidated with the Brunswick Traction Company in fact if not in name.

The idea is to make a direct line between Plainfield and New Brunswick. The plan is to run every third car through to New Brunswick and the same from New Brunswick to Plainfield. This will give the residents good service and cheap transit. The round trip will be made from this city to New Brunswick for 40 cents, which is more perferable to paying $1.40 by steam cars.

If a person wants to go to Somerville by trolley they will transfer at Bound Brook to another line, owned by the Brunswick Traction Company. The trip to that place will be equally as cheap as the one to New Brunswick.

The Brunswick Traction Company is at present busily engaged in macadamizing North avenue, in Dunellen, and excellent progress is being made. The street is being macadamized from curb to curb and it will cost the company close to $9,000. A good job is being done and the officials are well pleased with it. Alvah Gray is furnishing the stone and a very large quantity is used. Stone is being used to fill in between the tracks, and this will give a good solid road-bed.

Just at present there is a little question as to where a turn out will be located. Dunellen people would like to have one in front of the railroad station, and the chances are that one will be placed there. Just outside of the borough on the west there is a turn out and the company is inclined to think that that one will answer, but it is barely possible. However, there will be no trouble over the matter for the company seems willing and have clearly shown a disposition to do everything that the borough officials have asked.

GUN CARRIAGE SHIPPED.

Work For the Government is Going Rapidly Forward at Pond's.

The work on the disappearing gun carriages at the Pond Machine Tool Works is progressing favorably. Saturday one of the carriages was shipped to Fort McRee, Pensacola, Fla., where it will be erected at once. Captain L. L. Bruff, of New York, was in Plainfield Friday inspecting the carriages, and in addition to the one shipped another carriage was accepted for the Government. The other carriages are being rapidly completed and it will not be very long before the full number is completed.

Visited Fort Hancock.

Miss Al. Grace Higgins, of West Fourth street, and her friend Miss Johnson, of Hopewell, spent Thursday at Fort Hancock. They went with the expectation of learning something of a soldier's life in camp and they were not disappointed. Capt. Wehrly, from whom they had received passes, treated them most politely, showing and explaining many points of interest. The order of discipline maintained is quite wonderful, and well worth the journey to see.

Quitely Married.

Clifford Applegate, a popular butcher, of Bound Brook, and Miss Anna Belle Dougherty, of South Bound Brook, came to Plainfield last Thursday evening and quitely drove to the home of a Plainfield clergyman and were married, after which they left for a short honeymoon. They will reside at Bound Brook.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards and family, of East Front street, are spending their summer at Chatham, Mass.

FAINTED IN A MANHOLE.

WORKMAN WAS OVERCOME BY GAS AND HEAT.

They Were Working in the Manhole Putting in Telephone Cables Friday—Druggist Armstrong Revived Him.

Peter Burick, of Newark, one of the three workmen putting the electric wires through the conduits on North avenue Friday, was overcome by gas and heat while in the manhole at the corner of Park and North avenues. He was drawn out of the manhole by John Barish and Mat Maddox, who were working with him, and taken in to Armstrong's pharmacy, where after fifteen minutes' work Mr. Armstrong succeeded in reviving him.

The manhole at the corner of Park and North avenues was a particularly hot spot Friday. All day the sun poured down on it, and down in its depths, with no air to breath, it was like and oven. Then the gas from some of the mains was escaping, and the combination made it almost impossible for the men to work in the hole for more than a few minutes at a time.

One would go into the opening and stay as long as human nature could endure the gas and heat, then come up, and his place would be taken by one of the others.

At 5 o'clock Burick's turn came, and he descended. He stayed a little longer than usual, when his fellow workmen, looking down into the manhole, saw that Burick was leaning up against the brick walls unconscious.

Jumping down one of the men lifted Burick out while the other dragged him into the shade, and with the help of some bystanders, got him into the drug store.

The workmen did not seem to think that it was anything of importance, and did not realize the danger that Burick was in. They say that it is no unusual occurrence for the men to give way to the heat in this way. When Burick recovered he was very weak.

NORTH PLAINFIELD TEACHERS.

Official List of Those Who Will Act in Borough School.

Below will be found the official list of the teachers for the Borough Public School for next year, including the new ones recently engaged: High School, Miss Susan D. Glass, Miss Grace Howard Perrie, Miss Luella A. Crowther, Miss Marion Bush, Charles Lewis, Miss Laura Sydenham; Grammar School, Miss Ida M. Horn, Miss Laura Walker, Miss Hattie Rockwell, Miss Cora Mooney, Miss Emma Tantum, Miss Alice Thompson; Primary School, Miss Maud Acock, Miss Elizabeth Kiernan, Miss Sarah Mackey, Miss Elizabeth L. Claypoole, Miss May Brown, Miss Edith Horton, Miss Minnie Filkins, Miss Anna Hetfield, Miss Mary Hart, Miss Florence Hart; Kindergarten, Miss Grace Bonney, Miss Blake Horton. A teacher for the mixed kindergarten has not yet been selected.

THE NEW ENGINE HOUSE.

Bids Received and Opened for Its Construction—The Lowest.

There was a meeting of the Fire and Building Committee of the City Council Friday evening at fire headquarters for the purpose of receiving and opening the bids for the construction of a new engine house in the West End. There were seven bids in all and the lowest bid was received from Wyman & Haberly. It was $4,775, being considerably less than $1,000 below the lowest bid received at a previous meeting when bids were received under different plans. The above bid includes all work of construction. All of the other bids were much higher and Arthur Bros., who were the lowest before were nearly the highest on this bid. The matter will be reported at the Council meeting Monday evening when the contract will probably be awarded.

SHE KNEW THE JUDGE

But It Did Not Save Her From the Course of the Law.

Mrs. Maggie McGuigan, of West Third street, and Mrs. Lizzie Ennis, who lives opposite, are not very good neighbors. One day last week, Mrs. Ennis says her neighbor over the way called her naughty names. Mrs. McGuigan was arraigned Saturday before the City Judge.

Maggie thought her long acquaintance with the Judge would enable her to get off with a light sentence. After telling her side of the case she finished with "Now, Judge, I know you; I knew you when you was a little boy," at the same time directing a stunning look upon His Honor. That didn't save her, however, and she was pronounced guilty, but allowed to go on her own parole.

A Missionary Tea.

The Christian Women's Board of Missions of the Christian church held a missionary tea last Thursday at the home of Mrs. H. W. McKane, of Pearl street, and, considering the night, the attendance was excellent. Members of the society had the affair in charge and a very pleasant social time was had by all. Plans for missionary work were talked over and in the early fall they will be put into execution. The tea was a social and financial success.

WANTED A HORSE; WISH WAS GRANTED.

Now Lawyer DeMeza Bemoans the Day He Bought It.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

PAID SEVEN DOLLARS FOR A MUSTANG WORTH ONE.

He Longed to Own a Horse and He Now Does—His Only Object in Life Now is to Get Rid Of It as Soon as Possible—How It All Occurred—Supposed to be a Good Judge of Horses.

William G. De Meza, a young lawyer having an office on East Front street, possesses a new horse. Just how he came to own the steed can be told in a few words, but what he will do with it remains to be seen.

Lawyer De Meza is a horseman, and knows a good steed when he sees one. Early this week he was attending the sale of horses at the Driving Park, and watching the speedy ones being knocked down to the prominent local horsemen.

Then the follower of Blackstone aspired to possess one of his own, and decided to make an attempt. He, too, would own a horse.

After the sale was over, De Meza walked up to Fred Rose, who was in charge of the sale, and holding out his hand said, "I'll give you what I have in my hand for a horse."

Mr. Rose hesitated a moment, then seeing the corner of a greenback peeping out of De Meza's hand, and knowing that it must be a one dollar bill at the least, said, "I'll take it," and taking the money dropped it in his pocket without even glancing at it.

"Catch the pony, boys," was the next order, and, while DeMeza stood not knowing what to do, a couple of men rode out into the corral and roped an old decrepit mustang which they led in and turned over to DeMeza.

The lawyer, not realizing that Rose meant what he had said and inclined to think it all a joke, took hold of the halter-strap, mechanically, and proceeded to walk off with his charge. No one stopped him. He continued to walk on until he had passed the gates. Then, seeing the crowd disappearing, did he realize the situation. There was nothing else to do, he could not go back, so he kept on towards home.

When DeMeza reached town he put the horse in Corie's livery stable, where it is now enjoying life. It can there be seen by would-be purchasers who are cautioned not to go too near the animal for fear that its propensity for wild-west tactics may lead it to strange and wierd antics.

When Rose looked at the money in his hand, he found that it was $7. He now feels that he has the best of the bargain. Meanwhile DeMeza would be obliged to anyone who will tell him what to do with his charge.

SPECIAL TRAIN TO CONVENTION.

Plans of Local Endeavorers for the State Convention at Asbury Park.

No pains are being spared to arrange a pleasant time for the delegation which the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Societies will send to the State Convention at Asbury Park in September. A special train will leave Plainfield Wednesday morning, September 23th, reaching Asbury Park in time for luncheon, so that the Endeavorers can attend the opening session of the convention in the afternoon. Probably praise and prayer services will be held in each car, en route, as they were on the special train that carried the Plainfielders to Atlantic City in '96.

At Asbury Park the Plainfield delegation will be all together in one of the most comfortable of the hotels, close to the Auditorium, in which the services are to be held. It is expected that the hotel will be the one next door to the one occupied by the State officers.

The special train will return Saturday morning, Oct. 1st.

TALKED ON MISSIONS.

Rev. Mr. Hathaway of Elizabeth Addressed the Meeting at Warren Chapel.

Considering the warm weather there was an excellent attendance at the missionary meeting held at Warren chapel Friday. The speaker of the evening was Rev. Mr. Hathaway, of Elizabeth, who gave a highly interesting and instructive talk on foreign missions. He related many incidents that had come under his own personal observation. The members of this chapel naturally feel a great interest in foreign missions owing to the fact that one of their number, Miss Rachel Maire, is now laboring in Africa. Mr. Hathaway told something of the work in that country, as well as in other missionary centres in foreign fields.

Ran Down a Trolley Car.

An out-of-town wheelwoman collided with a trolley car Saturday on Watchung avenue and sustained a slight scalp wound. She was taken in a carriage to Dr. J. T. Fritts, who pronounced the wound not serious, and she rode on.

ROSIE CELEBRATED HER OWN BIRTHDAY.

But the Police Came and Carried Away the Guests.

NINETY DAYS IN JAIL.

THE CELEBRATION AROUSED THE WHOLE NEIGHBORHOOD.

Police Raided the House and Captured Seven—Appeared In Court In Evening Dress—There Was a Cake Walk—White People There Also—Several Arrests to Follow These.

"It was a hot time in the old town" Thursday, when Mrs. Rosie Jackson, already famous on this side of the brook where her dusky face has frequently figured in the police court, celebrated the anniversary of her birthday. No one knew which anniversary it was, but that made little difference. The event came off in great style, and as a result seven dusky individuals were arraigned in the borough court Friday morning before Recorder Long and each one was given ninety days in the county jail to repent at leisure for his or her sins.

"Rosa" lives on Race street, in the borough, and she has a reputation for being a great entertainer. She limited her invitations, according to her story this morning, and only the select colored folk was present. She hired musicians for the night for $1.25 each, and they played until things got so warm that they agreed it would be better to depart while they could.

The celebration started in at an early hour, and it was not long before the "select crowd" was present. Dancing of course, was the feature, while there was plenty of liquid refreshment to make the affair a success.

Those who were allowed the privileges of the floor had to have on their finest. In honor of the affair "Rosa" wore a gaudy pink and lavender silk gown, trimed with a superabundance of lace and green ribbons. She appeared in court this morning in all her gorgeous attire as did her guests, just as they had been locked up.

It started in all right but soon the beer began to flow, the guests grew happy and the musicians fearful. There was dancing of all kinds, waltzes, two-steps, three-steps, pigeon-wings, chicken wings. There were shouts and screams and everybody within a radious of a block of the house heard the racket and could not sleep.

The evening dragged on and then Annie Bergan, one of the guests, told how she had never seen a "cake walk" So Andrew Oby, the bootblack at the City Hotel who had dropped in after the show, volunteered to show how it was done with the assistance of the daughter of the hostess, Maggie Belle Jackson. They began and the excitement reached fever heat. More bottles were opened, more beer disappeared and more noise was the result.

Outside the marshals heard the noise and wondered. They wondered when the time would come to end it all. It was the first good taste they had had of the never-to-be forgotten days in Dusky Flats. And they didn't like it.

The noise grew louder and louder until the peaceful borough citizen two blocks away rose out of his bed and swore. The participants thought that they were having a good time and probably they were. The musicians were not accustomed to such proceedings. Unable to to stand it, at last, they fled for their lives.

Midnight passed and there were no signs of any diminuition in the noise. Half an hour later, the marshals decided to raid the place. It was surrounded and they entered.

Nobody ever saw such a scattering. The officers jumped for the leaders, and the rest departed by any old way that came handy. Mary Lynn was just about to plunge out of a back window when the hand of one of the marshals rested heavily upon her sable shoulder. Seven were caught and locked up for the night.

"Rosa" was the first one on the stand last Friday. She was arrested by Marshals Wise and Schenck. She informed the court that she had planned to have a nice quiet birthday social. She said that no one made any disturbance in the house, and she saw no reason why arrests were made. Anna Bergen and Louisa Miller appeared in her behalf and told what a nice lady Mrs. Jackson was. Afterwards everyone of the prisoners called on Mrs. Bergen to help them out in proving what dear little innocent things they were.

Lottie Babbit was the next prisoner. She was arrested by Marshal Winn, who stated that he found her partially intoxicated. She entered a plea of not guilty.

Mary Lynn, Maggie Belle Jackson and Adeline Cuff all pleaded not guilty.

John Johnson said that he was on his way home and had only been at the party about twenty minutes when he was arrested. He said that he never drank anything stronger than tea and coffee. He and Andrew Oby pleaded not guilty.

It is said that there were some white people present, but fortunately for them, they succeeded in escaping. Warrants are now out for their arrest. Marshals Wise, Campbell, Schenck, Winn and Beglin made the arrests and they all gave the testimony Friday morning as to the bad character and name of the house raided.

After Recorder Long had heard all of the evidence he adjourned court for a half hour to give his decision. At the conclusion of that time he decided to send the seven prisoners to Somerville for 90 days. They were taken to their resting place that morning by the marshals. In the raiding of this place the marshals have no doubt brought to an end much disturbance that has from time to time given the neighbors no end of trouble.

TO WEAR A ROBE.

Justice Mosher Thinks of Following Example of Supreme Court Judges.

Justice Mosher, who is always planning some improvements in his courtroom, has had a small raised platform erected in one end of the court-room on which his honor will take his seat during the trial of cases. The Judge is thinking seriously of donning a black robe, thus copying after the custom of the Justices of the Supreme Court.

Blackford's Case Goes Over.

The suit for $200 brought by Detective John Blackford against Mrs. Harry Marshall, in Justice Nash's court, was adjourned Friday morning to the morning of August 16th at 10 o'clock.

JUDGE FINED WITNESS.

W. J. NELSON DISREGARDED A SUBPŒNA FOR FRITZ TRIAL.

Came to Court Half An Hour Late and Judge Fined Him $2—First Time Done in the City Court in Plainfield.

For the first time during the administration of City Judge DeMeza in his present capacity, a witness was fined Saturday for failing to obey a subpœna and appearing in court at the appointed time to give testimony in a case to be tried.

The offending witness was William J. Nelson, the well driver, of West Front street, and his disregard for that little slip of paper called a "subpœna," cost him a $2 bill.

Nelson was standing near Councilman Walter L. Hetfield and Adam Fritz last week, when the latter made use of the profane language for which he was fined $3 in the City Court this morning. When Mr. Hetfield made the charge against Adam Fritz he subpœnaed Nelson as a witness. The subpœna called for Nelson's presence at the station house this morning at 9 o'clock, but he failed to be present.

Had Fritz not pleaded guilty, the case would have gone over for a week. At 9:30 o'clock Nelson came rushing into the judge's office explaining that he had been down to the station-house, and found no one there. This was no excuse, so said the Judge, and ordered Nelson to pay a fine of $2 or go to jail for ten days. He paid the fine.

A warrant had been issued for Nelson's arrest, and the officer was about to go out in search of him when he made his appearance.

This is a warning to delinquent witnesses who are apt to think that the penalty attached to a subpœna for not obeying it is latent, and only put there "for fun."

RUNAWAY HORSE IN A CROWDED STREET

Frightened Equine Ran Through Busy Front Street.

RAN INTO AN OPEN WAGON.

WRECKED VEHICLE BELONGED TO W. O. BALDWIN.

Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin Were in the Wagon, But Escaped Injury—Took the Accident Coolly—Dayton Melick Was the Owner of the Runaway—Mr. Melick's Buggy Was Smashed.

Front street had just assumed its busiest appearance yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock when a runaway horse, with buggy attached, came down the thoroughfare toward the maze of vehicles and cyclists that crowd the street. There was a crash, a rush of pedestrians, and the unchecked career of the frightened horse was ended. Two wagons were wrecked but no other damage was done.

Dayton Melick is a milkman living near Avon Park. Yesterday he drove down to Plainfield in the afternoon and did some errands. He stopped on Church street and tied his horse with a strap while he went in. In some way the strap slipped down and tightened about the bottom of the post. The horse, feeling his head held down, gave a toss and the strap broke. Frightened at this unexpected freedom, the animal started down Church street to Front. A moment later the horse was in full gallop.

In some way, the runaway managed to avoid the passing carriages on East Front street. Several men ran out to catch the horse but failed. The animal passed Park avenue in safety.

Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Baldwin, of West Fourth street, were driving through town in their open wagon. They were going east. Just in front of J. A. Smith's grocery, Mr. Baldwin pulled out to the right to pass an ice wagon. Then the runaway appeared.

"There's a runaway," remarked Mrs. Baldwin, as the horse came plunging at them.

"Yes," replied Mr. Baldwin and he carefully turned his horse out of the path of the runaway equine. Then came the crash. The front wheel of Melick's buggy passed inside of the front wheel of Baldwin's wagon. Both wheels collapsed and the axle to Baldwin's wagon snapped.

Louis Darling and several other witnesses of the accident sprang to the head of the runaway. Baldwin's horse trembled but obeyed the word of his master and stood his ground. Mr. Baldwin jumped out, assisted his wife to clamber out of the careening vehicle and then led the horse and wreck out of the path of traffic.

Mr. Melick arrived on the scene shortly after and took charge of his horse. He will probably settle for the damage. The great wonder was that the results were not more serious owing to the heavy traffic in the street at the time.

DANCED ON THE LAWN.

Miss Brower Entertained a Large Number of Friends at Her Home.

Miss Brower, daughter of Aaron Brower, of Clinton avenue, gave a lawn party Thursday at her home, which was one of the most pleasant affairs of its kind this season. Guests were present to the number of 100, from Dunellen, New Market and this city, and passed an enjoyable evening, returning home soon after midnight.

The lawn had been rolled and levelled for the purpose and provided hammocks, swings, chairs and rustic seats for the accommodation of the young folks. Chinese and Japanese lanterns in great profusion were hung around, and made the lawn as light as day.

Dancing was the order of the evening and the young folks enjoyed the novelty of a dance on the lawn. Games were played and phonographic selections given. Toward the close of the evening songs were sung and refreshments served. The guests left, thanking their hostess for the pleasant evening.

FOUND THE MONEY.

His Whines Had no Effect on City Judge De Meza.

Michael Fleishman, a young lad from Newark, who has often been detected by the police of this city peddling without a license, was arrested Saturday by Patrolman Cash, who brought him before the City Judge. Mike was fined $1. With a whine, he complained that he didn't have it. He carried a large stock of "tangle-foot" flypaper, envelopes, paper and matches with him, but professed not to have any money. The Judge told him that he must either pay or go to jail. Then he paid.

Adam Blair Sells Out.

Adam Blair, who has been conducting a freight and express business for two years, has sold out to Henry Wierenga, who has been with Captain Hand for sometime. The deal was made through Judge G. W. DeMeza.

SEWER BEDS NEED CITY'S ATTENTION.

Generally Admitted That the Stench is Terrible.

MONEY AND MEN NEEDED.

OTHERWISE PRESENT CONDITIONS CANNOT BE AVERTED.

Residents Claim Brook is Polluted—Unprejudiced Observers All Agree That the Odor is Very Unpleasant—Suggestions of Prominent Clergymen—City Officials Cognizant of the Situation.

It might just as well be said, for the fact is generally known and admitted, that the city sewer beds are not the success as far as the stench is concerned that they were promised to be. Anybody who has visited that neighborhood cannot but admit that there is a stench and that it is not pleasant to the nostrils of anyone. There has been a great deal of talk on the subject since they were first inaugurated, and they have had to stand the criticism of many.

Of late, lime has been used about the edges of the beds to kill the odor coming from them, but during this spell of murky weather there does not seem to be anything that will stop the stench that constantly arises from the beds.

Street Commissioner Gavett is designated by the city to look after the sewer farm. As a result, he is an abused man. Now there is no more conscientious worker for the city's welfare than Mr. Gavett. He cannot accomplish anymore in that direction than he is doing. His powers there are limited by the help he is allowed by the city and also by the size of the appropriation for the care of the beds. He has done his best but the matter has passed beyond his limited means as provided by the city.

It has been said that it is possible to put the beds in such a condition that there will be little or no stench arising from them. It takes money and labor, though. That means that the Common Council will have to expend more money there if they wish to improve the beds.

It is said, and probably truly, that the city officials are cognizant with the situation. One is quoted as saying that he would not want the beds very near his property.

While one of the lower beds was being used last week, a neighbor who resides not far from there, requested the officials not to continue the use of that bed, as the smell therefrom was so bad that he could not endure it. Then there are a number of people residing in the vicinity who stoutly allege that Green brook is polluted with matter from the beds.

A short time ago a party of Plainfield people had occasion to walk through Rock avenue from Front street. In the party were several women, most of whom made use of their handkerchiefs while passing the beds. The men in the party were very glad that they happened to be smoking at the time. They all declared the stench very great and they were unprejudiced observers.

A prominent city clergyman, in speaking about the beds from a visit to them, recently remarked that it seemed a burning shame to ruin a portion of the city which seemed to be the only roomy part within the city limits. He spoke of how much better it would be if the city would do away with the beds, run the sewage matter to tide-water, and make a park in that section of the city. He claimed that the city would be the gainer by it, for as it is now, people are kept away from that part of the town and thus the money that might come to Plainfield goes elsewhere.

And so it goes. A hundred such cases might be quoted. A visit to that section, however, will be sufficient to convince any one of the real situation and the necessity of doing some thing.

ENTERTAINED FOR SON.

Mr. and Mrs. Bach Gave a Party to the Fresh Air Children.

Yesterday afternoon and evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bach, in the borough, all of the children who are now in Plainfield and are known as fresh-air children, sent from New York to families in this city and the borough, assembled and enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Bach. The occasion was the anniversary of the birthday of the young son of the host and hostess and the little boys and girls were invited to help make merry with the young celebrant. The time was passed in playing games and having a good social time, after which refreshments were served in abundance. Everyone present fully enjoyed themselves and were sorry to go home when the time for departure arrived.

To Close the Church.

August 7th and 14th there will be no evening service in the First M. E. church on account of repairs which are to be made to the organ. The morning service will be held in Vincent chapel.

ENDEAVORERS TO MEET BY THE SHORE.

Features of the State C. E. Convention This Fall.

TO MEET AT ASBURY PARK.

SERVICES WILL BE HELD IN THE BIG AUDITORIUM.

There Will Be Many of the Leading Endeavorers of the Eastern States Present—A Great Programme Has Been Arranged for the Occasion.—Special Features of the Convention.

The Christian Endeavorers of New Jersey are promised an unusual treat in their twelfth annual State convention, which will be held at Asbury Park Sept. 28th, 29th and 30th. Those who attended the State convention held at Atlantic City three years ago recall it as a unique and delightful experience, and in all probability this year's convention will be a very similar gathering. Even greater care has been used in the selection of speakers, and the programme is filled with good things.

The greater part of the meetings will be held in the Asbury Park auditorium, but the "quiet hour" service and department conferences on Thursday morning, the 29th, will take place in the First Presbyterian church; the Junior rally Friday afternoon will be held at the Ocean Grove auditorium, and the sunrise prayer meetings, always such a pleasant feature of conventions, will be held on the beach, as they were at Atlantic City.

Amos R. Wells, the "Caleb Cobweb" of The Christian Endeavor World, will deliver an address at the Thursday afternoon meeting, and will also speak at the Junior rally. The annual address of the State president, Rev. Cornelius Brett, of Jersey City, will be delivered Thursday evening, and the annual convention sermon at the closing service Friday night will be by Rev. R. S. McArthur, D. D., of New York. Among the other noted speakers will be Bishop Walters, of Jersey City; Rev. S. Parks Cadman, D. D., of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, New York; Rev. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, the well-known writer, and Rev. J. H. Owens, of Paterson.

Among the interesting features of the convention will be open parliaments, a missionary session, denominational rallies, and a reception and musical socialble.

SHOWERED WITH RICE.

Friends Played a Joke on Young People Bound for New York.

As one of the Jersey Central trains drew into the North Avenue station late Thursday afternoon, the passengers were treated to what they supposed was the departure of a newly married couple. Miss Mabelle Smith, of Westervelt avenue, and Louis Chase, of East Front street, were going to New York to join Miss Smith's brother and several other young people who were going to make up a party to go to Manhattan Beach.

A number of the friends of Miss Smith and Mr. Chase, knowing of their departure, determined to play a joke. Providing themselves with a large supply of rice they appeared at the station in time for the train and nearly drowned the couple with the shower of rice. The young men of the party cheered the departing couple right joyfully, and everybody in the train craned their necks to see the fun.

FUNERAL OF MISS AMERMEN.

It Was Held From Her Late Home in the Borough July 27th.

The funeral services of the late Miss Pearl A. Amermen were held July 27th, at 11 o'clock a. m., from the home of the parents on Stone street, in the borough. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends, including a number of the members of the Junior Epworth League of Grace M. E. church. The services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Gardner, pastor of Grace M. E. church. He spoke words of consolation and comfort to the bereaved ones and referred to the lovely Christian character of the departed.

During the service Miss Grace and Alice Carroll sang two favorite selections. The floral display was beautiful and many offerings were from the friends of the departed. Interment took place yesterday afternoon at New Vernon, N. J.

Cyclists to Camp Woolfe.

Quite a number of wheelmen and wheelwomen went from the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church Friday to attend the evening Gospel meeting at Camp Woolfe, Westfield. The society had entire charge of the meeting, and is spite of the heat and humidity the Endeavorers enjoyed a pleasant bicycle run and an interesting and helpful. The leader was A. C. LaBoyteaux, whose talk was earnest and practical.

Fred Rose, of Prospect place, has returned from his annual vacation.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT AT MT. ZION A. M. E. CHURCH THURSDAY.

There Were Two Scenes Showing the Members of the Household—Busy at Their Various Tasks—The Participants.

An entertainment in which domestic life and household duties were depicted, was given by the Helping Hand society of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church, on West Fourth street, Thursday. The entertainment was something of a novelty.

The first part opened with a chorus, "Jonah in the Sea," sung by the members of the household. The curtain rose and showed a kitchen in which men and women were busily engaged. Mrs. Abbie Peters was mixing up a savory mess to be placed in the oven; Mrs. Rebecca Voorhees was washing clothes; Mrs. Anna White was ironing, and Samuel Till was bending over the stove cooking the dinner.

After a vocal solo by Alfred White, the curtain was raised on the second scene. This represented the household, the members being busy with their daily tasks. William Grobes was dressed as a farmer, while Mrs. Grobes, his wife, was a nurse. Miss Ida Henry was just setting forth for a spin on her wheel, and Mrs. Laura Wilson stayed at home to wash the dishes. Mrs. Edward Maynard was a hair dresser. Mrs. Mary Lane and Mrs. Cecelia Peterson sat making clothes for the soldiers at the front, with Mrs. Matilda Dunham knitting socks to send to the miners in Alaska. Sylvester Lane was a carpenter and beside him stood Joseph Dunham, cutting wood.

"Roll, Jordan, Roll," by the members of the company, concluded the entertainment. The refreshments were served under the direction of a committee consisting of Mrs. Josephine Till, Mrs. Gussie Jones and Mrs. Laura Wilson. Samuel Till served the cream. Miss Bertha Biglow was cashier, Grant C. Cannon, the "only survivor of the Maine," as he was called, had a general supervision over the entertainment.

PLAINFIELD STILL LEADS.

Seven Y. M. C. A. Wheelmen Attend League Run to Newark.

Seven Y. M. C. A. wheelmen braved the threatened rain Thursday, and rode through the mud to Newark. Although there were only seven wheelmen there from this city, Plainfield still is far in the lead for the banner.

At the Newark association an interesting entertainment was provided which included recitations and readings by Harry M. Cobb, and selections by an orchestra.

When Plainfield was mentioned at the roll call, there was much applause, as it was the only club that had come from any distance on wheels. Montclair made the best showing with fourteen members out, but they came by trolley. Captain Thomas A. Cuming led the Plainfield squad.

FOUND HIS PAINTINGS.

They Were Recently Brought to Light in Vermont's Capitol.

An interesting item appeared in the Burlington, (Vt.) Daily News under date of July 25th, 1898, concerning Julian Scott, the famous war artist of this city. Mr. Scott is at present visiting in Vermont and on the above date he called at the capitol building in Montpelier. While there he discovered that a number of his paintings had been brought to light. Mr. Scott left the paintings in charge of one of the clerks several years ago, and since then he had given them very little attention or thought. The paintings were shown to Mr. Scott and he immediately recognized them as his own. The paintings are valuable and are prized very much by Mr. Scott.

FRIGHTENED AT TROLLEY.

Miss Bloom Just Escaped Serious Injury From Runaway Horse.

Miss Bloom, of Washington Valley, narrowly escaped serious if not fatal injury this morning on Somerset street near Summit avenue.

She had been in town stopping and was returning in her runabout wagon. Her horse became frightened at an approaching trolley and attempted to turn around across the tracks.

The wagon was upset by the car and Miss Bloom was thrown across the tracks in front of the car, which the motorman was only able to stop when about four feet from her.

The horse attempted to run away but was caught before he had gone far by persons who happened to be near at hand.

New Diving Dock at Boynton Beach.

A new diving dock has been erected at Boyton Beach which extends out with the channel, enabling swimmers to enjoy a bath here at extremely low tide as well as high tide. From the spring-board at the end, divers can have no end of fun. If you have not tried the new dock you must do so.

Putting in the Cables.

Workmen began Friday to put in the cables in the underground conduits for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company.

TEMPERANCE MEN OF JERSEY GATHER.

Quarterly Session of Grand Division, S. of T.

HELD HERE JULY 27TH.

A PUBLIC MEETING WAS HELD DURING THE EVENING.

Rev. Mr. Lawson Had to Return to Asbury Park in the Evening—There Were a Number of Other Speakers Present—Distinguished Visitors Were There Also—The Afternoon Session.

The quarterly meeting of the Grand Division, Sons of Temperance, which was held in this city July 27th came to a close that night with a public meeting in Reform Hall.

The afternoon session began soon after two o'clock, and was occupied with the transaction of routine business, and lasted until six o'clock. Several of the delegates stayed for the evening meeting, but most of them were obliged to go home.

The propagation committee reported a small fund in hand, and other money promised. The money will be used to reorganize the order in different parts of the state where it formerly existed, but has now been given up. It is the desire of the committee to make the order a power for good in New Jersey, and this can only be done, they think, by establishing new branches where they formerly existed as well as in places where the Sons of Temperance have never been.

There are now 600 members in the State, and a small increase was reported since the April meeting.

Rev. Mr. McKane and Elder Benjamin H. Hand, of the Christian church, were introduced, and made a few remarks. Mr. McKane is a member of Howell Division. Mrs. Hayward, of Newark, also spoke. The latter part of the session was given up to listening to remarks by different members of the organization. A vote of thanks was extended to Howell Division for the hospitable manner in which the Division had entertained the delegates. After deciding to meet in the fall at Metuchen, the business session was adjourned.

The attendance at the evening session was quite large. The original programme was so long that several numbers had to be omitted. Most Worthy Patriarch Rev. A. G. Lawson, of Camden, who was expected to talk, had to go to Asbury Park last night and speak there so was unable to be present at the meeting. The programme included talks by several members. Among the speakers was James Perrine, of Brooklyn, the first Worthy Patriarch of Howell Division, and the only charter member now living, or connected with the order.

Three pieces of music formed the orchestra. There were vocal selections by Mrs. Manley. The other speakers were Mr. Drake, who instituted Howell Division, and Right Grand Scribe Henry B. Howell, of Trenton, after whom Howell Division was named. Mr. McLeod, Mr. Murray and Mrs. Hayward, of Newark, also spoke.

The address of welcome was delivered by Worthy Patriarch M. Armstrong. Benjamin W. Hand offered prayer.

PEACH CROP SMALL.

Reports Regarding Crops Made By Nearby Weather Observers.

The climate and crop report of the weather bureau shows that the various crops in this section are doing well. Through this part of Jersey, however, the reports come in that the peach crop will be light.

The reports from this section for the last week are as follows:

Plainfield—The frequent heavy rains have done much good to all crops and pastures; corn and other crops now look well. Highest temperature, 94 degrees; lowest, 56 degrees. Rainfall, 2.66 inches. John Neagle.

Somerville—All crops now growing fast; the very heavy rains on the 19th and 21st were needed; pastures much improved. Rainfall, 3.76 inches. F. Hardenstin.

Somerville—Oats being cut; peaches in this vicinity were doing well, until their growth was blasted by the hail storm of June 22d; corn growing rapidly. H. V. N Garretson.

South Bound Brook—Oats nearly all cut; corn growing well; early potatoes being marketed, crop light. A. F. Randolph.

Peapack—All vegetation improved by the heavy rain of the 20th; cutting of oats commenced; peaches are not "forcing," but the crop will be light; corn looks well and is growing rapidly. Asher Fleming.

SECURED A PENSION.

Justice Nash Obtained One for Mrs. Goodwin in Short Order.

Justice Nash has just secured a pension for Mrs. George Goodwin, whose husband died about three months ago, and considers that he has secured it in less time than a pension was ever granted before under similar circumstances.

Mr. Goodwin was receiving a pension when he died, but upon his death it became necessary for Mrs. Goodwin to apply for her widow's pension, $8 a month. Less than a month ago Justice Nash made the application, and although ordinarily taking six months for the government to even consider the application, Mrs. Goodwin has received her pension besides $29.50 back pay.

PRESENT SEWAGE SYSTEM INADEQUATE.

No More Sewer Connections Are to Be Made Until the Present Difficulty Is Overcome.

THE CITY WILL PAY FOR THE LIBERTY POLE.

JAMES A. MARTIN WAS CHOSEN COLLECTOR AND AN ATTEMPT TO REDUCE HIS SALARY WAS DEFEATED.

The Trouble Over the Payment For the Liberty Pole Was Thoroughly Aired—W. W. Coriell, In a Letter to Councilman Runyon, Denies All Responsibility For the Popular Subscription—The Sewer Beds Sharply Criticized—Mr. Hetfield Thought Any Extra Money Should Be Spent With a View of Carrying the Sewage To Tide Water—Mr. Buckle Said That Plainfield Has the Beds On Her Hands and Must Make the Best of Them—Trolley Ordinance Next Monday—New Building Ordinance Introduced—Rules For Fire Department Made.

The city liberty pole, the sewage farm, the collectorship and its salary, all lent their share of interest to the proceedings of the Common Council at the regular August meeting held last Monday.

In the absence of President Baker, Councilman Moffett acted as president pro tem. All of the other members were present, and the business of the evening was transacted as expeditiously as possible. A communication was received from the Welsbach Light Company, in which they offered to quote a figure to the Council for one hundred or more lights the same as have been on exhibition on East Second street. The matter was referred to the proper committee.

Druggist R. J. Shaw and others, in a communication, petitioned the Council to take steps to put a check on the city newsboys. It is claimed that business people are much annoyed in the centre of the city; that they are unable to converse over a telephone; that the boys use bad language, and are in other ways a nuisance. The petition was referred to the proper committee with power.

Residents of East Third street petitioned the Council to repair their street between Richmond and Berckman streets. An electric light was petitioned for by the residents of North avenue, in the vicinity of Leland avenue. The residents of Albert street stated, in a communication, that they were willing to pay their share toward having the sidewalks flagged and curbed, and they petitioned to have the work done. Residents of Farragut avenue asked the Council for an electric light, and E. M. French and others asked for a fire hydrant to be located on West Third street.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company stated that new hydrants have been erected as ordered, making a total of 271 hydrants.

Residents in the eastern section of the city petitioned the Council to have a public drinking fountain erected in that part of the city, for man and beast. The Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company filed a bond, as required, for the faithful performance of the work of placing their wires underground, if their petition is granted. Charles Smith asked to have his liquor license transferred to J. A. Blatz, and the executors of the estate of Fred Caspar asked to have that license transferred to Hans Hansen. The requests were granted.

Building Inspector Doane reported the granting of twelve permits, and Street Commissioner Gavett reported that twenty sewer permits were granted during the past month. Overseer of Poor Hansen reported that during July five new applications for aid were received, and four were granted. During the past three months there was one death. There are at present twenty-two beneficiaries, of which number eight are at the Industrial Home.

At this time Mr. VanHerwerden reported that the finance committee had examined the books of Collector Bird and had found them correct. Mr. VanHerwerden offered a resolution to the effect that $1,000 be b rrowed for the fire fund, in anticipation of taxes. The same Councilman recommended the purchase of two new ballot boxes for the new election districts.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that C. M. Meeker, D. Bowden and Patsy Christmas be paid what is due them for work done for the city when they shall prove that their bills for labor for such work have been paid.

Mr. Runyon at this time brought up the matter regarding the balance to be paid on the liberty pole. He said that W. Wallace Coriell had informed Chief Doane that he would guarantee the amount of money necessary to purchase a longer pole than the one at first selected. Mr. Coriell appeared very enthusiastic over the idea and encouraged the committee to get a longer pole, remarked Mr. Runyon, but now he has changed his mind, as will be seen by the following letter received from Mr. Coriell:

Plainfield, N. J., June 20, 1896.

Hon. Wm. N. Runyon:

Dear Sir—Yours of the 19th at hand. In answer I assure you that I have no thought nor desire to offer so great an insult to our honorable Council, of which you are an honored member, as to circulate a subscription or in any way belittle their noble bursts of patriotism in throwing to the breeze in our beautiful city the beloved emblem of our country. And at the time when so many of our young men are laying down their lives to maintain our flag unsullied.

Now let the Council complete the work so nobly begun. Your committee will have in hand the work of securing to the city the beautiful staff that adorns the central business part of our city deserves a great deal of credit for the able manner in which they have done their work. Now let them complete their work and present the bills for the same in an honorable way and have them paid by the Council.

And save further disgrace by having the bills for work done on the flag pole for the committee sold on the street at a large discount, rather than wait for the money, which I have been informed has been done.

I would advise that you close your committee work in a business way.

With due respect for yourself and your honorable committee,

I am, very respectfully,

W. Wallace Coriell.

Mr. Runyon stated further that there is yet a balance of $125 to pay on the pole and he offered a resolution that that amount be appropriated. The resolution was adopted, after remarks were made by Mr. Newman, Mr. Hetfield and Mr. Buckle.

Mr. Newman said that Mr. Coriell informed him that he would guarantee the balance of money needed to buy a longer pole. Messrs. Hetfield and Buckle thought the committee should be granted the $125, but they thought that verbal promises could not, as a rule, be depended upon.

Mr. Runyon stated that the heating apparatus in the East Second street fire house required attention and after an inspection by G. J. Tobin it was learned that a new boiler was needed, and other repairs will have to be made. He then offered a resolution that an amount not to exceed $450 be appropriated and used to make such repairs as are needed, and that the fire and building committee be authorized to secure estimates for the work.

Mr. Hetfield was of the opinion that an entire new apparatus could be purchased for $450, and he amended the resolution so that the committee will report back in the matter when they have secured estimates of the work.

Mr. Runyon then reported on the bids received for the erection of an engine house in the West End, and offered a resolution to the effect that Wyman & Haberle, being the lowest bidders, they be awarded the contract. Their bid was $4,775, which includes all work.

Another resolution was offered by Mr. Runyon which provided that the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to make the necessary contract with Wyman & Haberle for the erection of the new house.

On a resolution offered by Mr. Newman four electric lights were ordered placed on East Front street between Leland avenue and Terrill road.

Mr. Runyon presented a voluminous set of rules and regulations to govern the fire department. They were read and adopted. The rules make every provision for the government of the department and protection of property in case of fire.

Mr. Barrows made a motion that when Council adjourn it be to meet next Monday evening when the application from the trolley company for an extension of their road would be received. He stated that the company had informed him that consents had been secured on Richmond street from the corner of Fifth street to the corner of Second street, and his motion for an adjournment was for the purpose of allowing the matter to come up.

Another resolution by Mr. Barrows provided for the sale at public auction the old carts and implements used in street work. He said that they were practically worn out and were of no use to the city. On Mr. Barrows' motion the action fixing the bond of George White in the sum of $1,000 for the purpose of keeping Sycamore avenue in repair until it was macadamized, was rescinded, and the amount of the bond was reduced to $500.

The sidewalk ordinance was enforced on a number of property-owners on a motion offered by Mr. Barrows.

Mr. Barrows then brought to the attention of the Council the matter concerning the system of sewage now used in the city. He stated that in November, 1895, a number of sewer pipes in the eastern section of the city were broken by an explosion, and it had thus far cost the city $500 for repairs. He said that the streets where the pipes were found to be broken were in terrible condition, and had to be attended to. From that subject Mr. Barrows passed on to that of the sewage beds and their present condition. He stated that at present there are seventeen beds that can be used, but they were not adequate to take the amount of sewage that passed through the pipes. He said that it was a great necessity to have two more beds in condition to use. He stated that the Dunellen people are cognizant of the fact and had of late kept remarkably quiet on the subject. He also spoke about the Board of Health requiring people to connect with the sewer, when it is impossible to take care of the sewage at present with the number of beds being used.

Mr. Hetfield stated that the remarks made by Mr. Barrows confirmed his ideas, that the system was wholly inadequate and useless. He also cited the fact that the Board of Health is working directly in contact with the Council, and he moved that it be the sense of the Council that the Board of Health require no more connections to the sewer, unless absolutely necessary, until the present difficulty is cleared away. This motion was adopted. Mr. Hetfield continued by saying that at the present rate it would require about one hundred beds to take the entire sewage of the city. At present only half of the city is using the sewer and seventeen beds are not sufficient. Increase the number of beds, and the stench will be increased also, remarked Mr. Hetfield.

Mr. Buckle made a few remarks in which he stated that inasmuch as Plainfield has got the sewer beds it will have to make the best of them until something else can be done.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that the sum of $1,500 be appropriated to place two more beds in condition for use. In addition to the resolution, Mr. Barrows said that the fair name of the city must be preserved if it cost $1,500 or $15,000. He spoke of the urgent necessity for such action. He then cited the fact that in a trip of four thousand miles recently taken through this country and Canada he saw only one place that equaled Plainfield, and that is Evanston, Ill., with a population of 25,000 and a tax rate of $6 on a hundred. He thought that Plainfield people are getting a good deal for their money.

Mr. Hetfield stated that he would not vote to expend one more penny on new beds, that it would be far better to take $15,000 and put it toward going toward tide water. All voted for the resolution for $1,500 except Mr. Hetfield. Mr. Newman voted against it at first, but in explanation, he stated that he thought the beds were a confounded nuisance, and that the pipes should be run to tide water, but until something else could be done he would vote for the extra money.

Another discussion arose over the collectorship. Mr. Runyon called for Mr. Bird's resignation, and it was read. Mr. Runyon then nominated James A. Martin for the position, and Mr. Hetfield nominated Eugene A. Laing. Messrs. Hetfield and Barrows were appointed tellers. Mr. Martin received seven votes, while Mr. Laing received three.

Mr. Hetfield then moved that the salary of the collector be reduced to $1,500. Mr. Runyon stated that he thought Mr. Hetfield was too late, he should have made his motion prior to the election. Mr. Hetfield remarked that it appeared ridiculous to him, such talk, that he never heard anything like it before.

"It is a new collector, and we have a right to change his salary," remarked Mr. Hetfield.

Mr. Barrows stated that he thought it would be unfair to change the salary at such a time when only about five months of the year remain, and the hardest months, too.

Mr. VanHerwerden said that he had received a letter from the Corporation Counsel in which he stated that the salary ought to be changed before the election.

To this Mr. Hetfield took exceptions, and thought there must be a mistake somewhere. He said that the Council could fix the salary after or before as well as not, and sympathy should not enter into the action. The motion to cut the salary to $1,500 was defeated by a vote of 6 to 4. Messrs. Moffett, Lietke, Hetfield and VanHerwerden voted in the affirmative, while Messrs. Barrows, Andrews, Homan, Buckle, Runyon and Newman voted in the negative.

The resignation of James Martin, as first assistant chief of the fire department, was then received and accepted, after which Mr. Bird's resignation was accepted.

Mr. Runyon introduced an ordinance relative to the building ordinances, and on motion the reading of it was dispensed with and copies of it were ordered sent to the members. Mr. Runyon voted against this action, but the other members were anxious to get home and the meeting then adjourned.

WERE WEDDED AT HIGH NOON

Charming Mid-Summer Marriage of New Market Belle.

CEREMONY AT THE CHURCH

THE GROOM IS A PROFESSOR AT ALFRED UNIVERSITY.

Miss Hannah L. Larkin United in Marriage to Prof. Jay William Crofoot, of Alfred—Reception at Bride's Home Followed the Ceremony—Valuable Gifts Received—The Guests Present.

One of the prettiest weddings of the summer season took place Tuesday noon at the Seventh-day Baptist church, when Miss Hannah Lillian Larkin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Larkin, of this place, was united in marriage to Jay William Crofoot, a professor in Alfred University, of Alfred, N. Y., in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends.

The church decorations were very attractive, and consisted of palms, ferns and roses, and were arranged by Mrs. W. J. Davis, of this place.

Precisely at 12 o'clock the bridal party entered the church while the wedding march was played. The bride entered the edifice leaning on the arm of her father. They were preceded by the maid-of-honor, Miss Mildred Titsworth, of Dunellen, and the ushers, Alexander Vars, Ralph Titsworth, Charles Titsworth, of Dunellen, and Waldo Titsworth, of New Brunswick. At the altar the party was met by the groom and his best man, Isaac E. Titsworth, of Dunellen, who entered from the front of the church.

When the party had formed about the altar the ceremony was performed by Rev. A. G. Crofoot, of Jackson Centre, Ohio, father of the groom, assisted by Rev. F. E. Peterson, pastor of the church. The service was a pretty one.

The bride was charmingly gowned in Persian lawn trimmed with valenciennes lace, and she carried a bouquet of bridal roses. The maid-of-honor was attractively gowned in organdie over yellow.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents at 12:30. During the reception hours refreshments were served by the Misses Lulu Davis, Lizzie Boice, Laura Satterlee and Ellen Palmborg, of this place, who are intimate friends of the bride.

The presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Crofoot are all of a very practical nature, as well as ornamental, and grave evidence of the popularity of the couple.

During the afternoon the bride and groom left to enjoy a honeymoon, a part of which will be passed at the seashore. They will return to this place in a short time, after which they will go to Alfred, N. Y., where they will take up their residence.

Among those who were present as guests at the wedding were: Dr. and Mrs. O. E. Larkin, of Chicago; Miss Grace Crandall, of Ashaway, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Prentice, of New York; Mrs. Clark, of Eelair, Wis.; Prof. and Mrs. Frank L. Green, of Brooklyn; Mrs. D. I. Green, of Hartford, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Cortez Clawson, of Salem, W. V.; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Rogers, of Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Larkin, Stelle Larkin, George Larkin, Jr., Mrs. Lucy Titsworth, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Titsworth, Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Titsworth, Ferdinand Titsworth, Arthur Titsworth, Miss Elmina Titsworth, Mr. and Mrs. Sampson, of Dunellen; Prof. Alfred Titsworth and wife, of New Brunswick; Rev. and Mrs. F. E. Peterson, Dr. and Mrs. Whitford, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dunn, Martin Dunn, Jennie Dunn and Margaret Dunn, of New Market.

FUNERAL OF MRS. TITSWORTH.

Rev. Dr. Lewis and Rev. Mr. Main Conducted the Services.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Edward Titsworth was held Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock from the house. Interment was in the Methodist cemetery.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and Rev. A. E. Main were both in charge of the services. Two hymns were sung by a quartette composed of Miss Nan Randolph, Miss Elizabeth Allis, A. L. Titsworth and Elmer E. Runyon. The bearers were David Titsworth, David Moore, from Orange, Jeremiah Moore and Mr. Green. A handsome floral piece from the G. A. R., a pillow from the children and other floral offerings were given.

CARRYING THE PORT GRAPES TO THE WINERY, ON THE HEADS OF MEN AND WOMEN, NEAR THE VALLE DE MENETIE WHERE THEY ARE DUMPED IN THE MASHING VATS TO BE TRODDEN FOR PORT WINE.

The rugged hills with projecting rocks of brown stone and shale containing a large quantity of iron, make it impossible to use wagons here hence the grapes have to be carried to the treading vat or larger as they are called, and some are large enough for twenty persons to tread, which they do dancing to music furnished by the proprietor.

are situated in the Passaic valley below the mountain range and the grapes are carted to the winery in the town of Passaic where they are mashed between rollers made of rubber, which do not break the seeds, and made into wine.

These grand wines of Speer's that have mellowed in flavor in the course of years of ripening, are the choicest wines in this country and can only be obtained by paying a price that is higher than new wines from western vineyards. Mr. Speer deems it necessary for a healthy wine that it be allowed years to mature in wood to get rid of its coarse parts; with this object he keeps his wines several years in fumigated cellars and frequently racks before bottling or offering for sale. The reputation of Speer's wines as a valuable medicinal and family wine extends around the world.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due equally to the influence of the character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the best advertisement of the advertised. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but found that time obtained great beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were at a half dollar." At the time of this interview there was present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should purport to be in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling them to one case in a thousand may be the means of saving some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

RIPANS
ONE CENT

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES (the family remedy) is now placed in our sale at many drug stores—FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical, who can not afford to buy the dearer kind. The RIPANS TABULES are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (60 cents per dozen packets) is sent to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (10 cents) will be sent for examination. Ripans Tabules are the best blood purifier, nerve tonic and all round higher standard health giver. The great RIPANS.

AGED AND DESTITUTE WON'T LIVE APART.

Old Jim Clark and Wife Go Back To Their Ramshackle Hut.

MORE LIKE HOME TO THEM.

SNEAK THIEVES HAD STOLEN ALMOST ALL THEIR BELONGINGS.

The Old Couple Were Not Contented to Live Separate From One Another —Now Domiciled in the Shanty at Stony Hill Where They are Trying to Get Some Few Joys Out of Life.

"We hain't got long to live and we want to live together as long as we can." The bent and feeble form of the old man straightened up for the moment as he said it, facing his visitor from the doorsill of his shaky board shanty. Then he hobbled away leaving the stranger to wonder at old "Jim" Clark, who would rather live with his aged wife in their delapidated shanty in the woods than away from her in a far more comfortable home.

Several weeks ago, this paper told of the extreme destitution of James Clark, an aged fish peddler, and his wife who lived all alone in a little board shanty near Stony Hill. Both were ill and then Clark fell down stairs and badly injured himself while his wife was too weak to relieve him. A well-known Plainfielder, who interested himself in the case and drove up there, said that the destitution of the elderly couple was even worse than had been described.

The popular feeling in the vicinity of Stony Hill was so strong that the poor authorities of New Providence township agreed to look after Clark and his wife. Clark was taken home by his son Elias, who has a small farm in Morris county. Clark's raw-boned horse and peddler's wagon accompanied him. Then the township authorities provided a home with a family in Stony Hill for Mrs. Clark. That happened a month ago.

Since then Clark has driven over to see his wife several times. He was not comfortable as to her health. It did not seem like HOME to him. He wanted a home of his own, no matter how small it might be. Mrs. Clark was miserable. The family with whom she lived paid little attention to her, she said, and that they drank and went on in terrible fashion.

Saturday afternoon Clark appeared in Stony Hill with his horse and wagon. Mrs. Clark was waiting, her little bundle of clothing in her hand. She climbed in and away they went.

They drove at once to their little home in the woods, which had been locked up during their absence to protect it as far as possible from the weather. They had decided that their present mode of living was not a success and that they were going back to the old way.

When they arrived at the shanty in the woods, they found that some one had been there before them. Some dastardly thief had pried off the boards that covered one of the front windows, entered the house and robbed the old couple of almost everything worth taking. They are now destitute, indeed.

The bed clothing was gone. So were two feather pillows with cases, a relic of former greatness. Three sheets were missing. Several stone jars filled with preserves, which Mrs. Clark had laboriously put up, were taken. The cups, saucers, plates, knives, forks, spoons and tumblers, although but worth little, had been stolen. Even the basket with the clothes pins in it was missing.

Berries and a little bread constituted the main portion of the menu for the first meal. A few old dishes were found and the old couple had to get along without knives or forks. It was not an elaborate meal, nor was it elaborately served, but it was in their own home and they felt happy again.

They have now resumed life out there in the shanty, and the rain beats in the cracks in the wall as it used to do. The wind howls mournfully about the eaves and the "katy-did" in the woods keeps up its monotonous call. They are together once more, and all the loneliness of the place, the rustling of the branches, and the mournful sounds on every side affect them little. As the great gray owl down by the spring hoots sorrowfully at twilight, they sit on the steps to the shanty and feel that they are content.

Perhaps, at times, Mrs. Clark thinks of the days long ago when as the wife of her first husband, a letter carrier in the capital city of Washington, she took part in the gaiety of life at the National Capital. She may even think of that eventful night when she attended the inaugural ball of Presi-

COURT WON'T INTERFERE

JUDGE VANSYCKEL DECLINES TO STOP SALE OF TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

Opponents of the Bergen Plan in Cranford are Defeated in Their First Attempt to Prevent the Great Improvement. Elizabeth, August 10.—Judge VanSyckel yesterday refused to grant a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the Union County Board of Freeholders in the matter of the disposal of the franchise to construct a trolley line over the County Boulevard between Elizabeth and Plainfield. He also refused to issue an order to show cause why a writ should not issue, and plainly intimated that he would do nothing to obstruct the efforts that were being made to obtain rapid transit between Plainfield and Elizabeth, and the towns that lie on the line of the proposed boulevard and between the two cities.

The application was made in the name of Hannah Randolph and William M. Deutsche, and was argued before Judge VanSyckel yesterday at his summer home at Mantaukling, Ocean County, by Mr. Depue, for the applicants, and was opposed by Frank Bergen, who appeared for the Elizabeth Horse Railroad Company, which has made an offer of $250,000 for the franchise.

It is said that the real applicants for the writ of delay was probably the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railroad Company, which has been trying for over a year to get a franchise from Elizabeth to Plainfield, on the old terms.

Mr. Bergen felt elated over the action of Judge VanSyckel, which, he declared, now leaves the way clear for the Freeholders to go ahead and award the franchise at their meeting tomorrow afternoon.

FORMER PLAINFIELDER SHOT TWICE BY THE SPANIARDS.

George A. Monckton Joined Teddy's Terrors and Was Among the Wounded—Won't be Able to Fight For Some Time.

The friends of George A. Monckton, formerly of this city, who soon enlisted in the regular army, will be pleased to learn that he is all right. For a long time no word could be obtained of his whereabouts and it was thought that he had been killed. Late information says that he enlisted in the southwest with the first troop of Rough Riders. While in battle in Santiago he was shot in the left arm and in the right leg.

He was picked up on the battle field and taken to a hospital within a mile of Morro Castle, and in a letter that he wrote recently to his mother, he says that he can plainly see the Castle. He does not think that he will be able to resume fighting very soon, although he would like to recover quick enough to continue fighing against the Spaniards.

CONUNDRUM SUPPER.

An Affair That Mr. Olive Church is Planning to Give.

Mt. Olive church people are making great preparations for the concert and conundrum supper August 25th, at Washington Hall. This entertainment bids fair to surpass any in the history of the church.

There will be contest drills between the companies of boys and girls, now in charge of Arthur Venable. Excellent music will be rendered by the choir of the church, and Black Hattie, who charms her hearers, will appear. She is styled "The African Mocking Bird."

The colored societies of the city will be out to listen to a twenty-minute address from Rev. E. E. Jackson, pastor of the church. There will be duets, quartettes, dialogues and other features, after which there will be refreshments. There will be a prize presented to the person who explains the bill of fare; also a cake containing the prodigal son's jewelry. Admission will be 35 cents, supper free. Mrs. Rosa Venable is manager of this affair.

Grace M. E. Parsonage.

The board of trustees of Grace M. E. church met last Monday evening and heard the report of the building committee regarding the erection of a parsonage on the same property that the church is located. The Board adopted the plans offered by the committee, and as soon as the detail work can be arranged the work of building the parsonage will be started.

Collector Martin's Bond.

The bond of Collector J. A. Martin was filed with the City Council last Monday evening. The bondsmen are Dr. O. L. Jenkins, L. B. Woolston, C. M. Raybert and Andrew Love, Sr. The amount of the bond is $25,000.

Mrs. Adam Fritz and daughter Miss Lucilla, have returned from Flagtown.

FACTORY EMPLOYING 150 MEN COMING HERE

Industry to Move From Connecticut to This City.

WORK OF BOARD OF TRADE.

PARKER-WISHART-HALL COMPANY EMPLOY 150 MEN.

They Will Consolidate Their Plant With the Aluminum Plate and Press Company—They Manufacture Machine Tools and Special Machinery—Works Now Located at Stamford, Conn.

Another industry is to be located in this city at an early date. It is The Parker-Wishart-Hall Company, manufacturers of machine tools and special machinery, whose present location is Stamford, Conn. They employ about 150 men and do a fine class of work.

The Board of Trade has for sometime past been endeavoring to get this company to come to Plainfield, but seemed unable to get a suitable place where they could erect a factory that would be convenient for the company. The efforts of the Board of Trade have been rewarded, however, and the company has decided to come to this city, as the following letter sent to the Board will show:

Stamford, Conn., Aug. 8th, 1898.

Dear Sir:—Owing to pending matters we have been unable to answer your letter of July 30th, until today, and regarding the same we would say we have consolidated our plant with the Aluminum Plate and Press Company, of your city, and will join our plant with theirs.

Please accept our thanks for the interest you have taken in this matter, and we trust we may be able sometime to return the compliment.

Yours truly.

The Parker-Wishart-Hall Co.

Now that the consolidation has been effected it is expected that the new company will come to this city in a short time, in fact arrangements are now being made for the change.

CAUGHT IN A CORNFIELD.

George O. Stevens Saw the Stalks Waving When There Was No Wind.

There was a waving among the corn that the blacksmith could see was not caused by any gentle zephyr. So he spoke to his employer, George O. Stevens, who was hard at work in his coal office on West Front street, near Grant avenue. Now Stevens owns a plot of ground in the rear of his coal yard and blacksmith shop which he devotes to the raising of corn fodder.

When the blacksmith notified Stevens Tuesday afternoon that there were visitors in the corn field, Stevens armed himself with an order book and seven pencils and started forth. There was a great agitation in the far corner of the field of waving corn and then two boys dashed over the railway embankment. Then the genial coal dealer and corn grower caught sight of a small boy approaching with a large bag slung over his shoulder. Stevens captured the boy.

The small boy was Bennie Blood, good, twelve years old. Acting Boundsman Mattox was sent for and took the lad before City Judge DeMeza. John Adelmann gave bonds for the appearance of the youngster this morning.

Next morning he came and told the City Judge how he had been called into the field by two other boys to hold a bag for them. Then they suddenly departed without warning, and he decided to take possession. He then started off and walked directly into the arms of George O. Stevens.

Judge DeMeza reprimanded the youngster and told him to be careful in the future how he visited other people's cornfields. Sentence was suspended.

Street Work.

Former Street Commissioner R. M. Meeker is repairing the road bed of Crescent avenue, which street has had but little work done on it since the sewer was put through. The property owners have been repeatedly promised that it would be macadamized, Mr. Meeker will attend to any work requiring immediate attention while the street commissioner is taking his vacation.

To Organize a Quartette.

Clifford Braider, of Manning avenue, is organizing a quartette, to be composed of Horace J. Martin, Jr., first tenor; Clifford Braider, second tenor; Charles Dolliver, first bass, and Oscar Moore, second bass. The quartette met last night at Braider's house to organize.

J. C. MacClymont and family, of Washington avenue, have returned from a three weeks' vacation spent at Fairport, N. Y.

DEFEAT WAS UNEXPECTED.

Spanish In Manila Demoralized By Our Victory.

THOUGHT MERRITT WEAK

EXPECTED THAT INVADERS WOULD BE DRIVEN IN SEA.

Manila Papers Gave Out Lying Reports of American Army and Raised False Hopes Among Soldiers and Spanish Residents.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Manila, August 8, via Hong Kong, August 10, 12:15 p. m.—The Spaniards are stunned and demoralized by the great victory won by the Americans against such overwhelming odds on the night of the thirty-first.

According to the reports brought in by the refugees from the Spanish lines, all the advantages were so clearly on the side of the Spanish that the soldiers and residents of Manila expected nothing less than the driving of the Americans into the sea.

Their hopes have been buried that were raised so high by the Spanish press of Manila which published such lying reports as to the woeful condition and weakness of numbers of the Americans.

The Spanish loss was very heavy, including several officers of high rank. The exact number is not known.

The Spanish plan was to turn the American flank. They were to make a joint attack on the front and right of the American line of intrenchments with the intention of killing as many as possible and demoralizing the American force before the general advance on Manila.

They fought doggedly to this end, but the steady fire of the American rifles and batteries was so utterly unexpected that the Spaniards were forced to withdraw into the forests and trenches at Malate.

PEACE CONFERENCE.

Day and Cambon Met This Morning to Settle Certain Details.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 10, 1:10 p. m. A meeting was held this morning between Secretary of State Day and the French Ambassador at the State Department.

The meeting was to consider certain details of the Spanish reply, left open from yesterday's conference at the White House.

There is reason to believe that the Spanish Government is about to recede from certain conditions which were sought to be imposed yesterday and that the result will be an agreement upon the basis of the terms of peace.

The French Ambassador, accompanied by M. Thiebaut, arrived at the State department shortly after eleven o'clock this morning.

After a conference of fifteen minutes, Secretary Day drove to the White House to confer with President McKinley. Cambon awaited Day's return in the diplomatic room of the State department.

EARLY PEACE EXPECTED.

PLAINFIELD TO HAVE GOOD BALL TEAM AGAIN

Riverdale Field Club Has Secured the Crescent Oval.

HEADQUARTERS TO BE HERE

NEW YORK ATHLETES TO HAVE PERMANENT GROUNDS.

First Contest Will be Played Next Saturday Afternoon Between the Riverdales and the Town of the Montclair Athletic Club—Rivalry is Great Between Them Just Now.

After nearly two months of idleness the Crescent Oval will on Saturday resume its wonted activity. Baseball is coming to Plainfield again. Two of the strongest teams of this section of New Jersey are to meet here on a neutral ground and settle the question of supremacy. It will mark the reopening of the baseball season in Plainfield under entire new management and with a new team.

Twice have the nines of the Montclair Athletic Club and the Riverdale Field Club met. The Montclair boys won the first game. Last Saturday the second game was played at Montclair and lasted for eleven innings. Then the Riverdales won 11 to 6. Saturday of this week the deciding game will be played at the Crescent Oval, beginning at 3:30 o'clock. The grounds will be put in good shape and everything will be done for the convenience of the patrons, local and visiting.

There are a number of nines that hail from New York but have no grounds of their own. Of them, there is none better known than the Riverdale Field Club. It is largely composed of college men and crack players drawn from the principal athletic clubs of the neighborhood. The Riverdale team has been very successful this season but they have been without a home. Discovering that Plainfield had no baseball team, the management decided to find a home for themselves and a team for Plainfield at the same time. Hereafter, the Riverdales will play in Plainfield and in baseball circles, will hail from Plainfield. The name will also be changed after the completion of this series with the Montclairs.

The Riverdale Field Club has a mighty strong team this year. Harry Westervelt, the phenominon from Englewood, is the box. Hayes, of Fordham College, catches him. Woods, the well-known Riverdale man, is at first. Fred Smith, an old Princeton man, covers second while Romig, who made his reputation on the New Jersey Athletic Club team when it played championship ball, will look after third. Reinecker, an old Orange Athletic Club player, will be at short. Easton, the great Princeton 'varsity left fielder, will play the same position for the Riverdales. Wm. Smith is down for centre field and Hardy for right.

Montclair has Teddy Smith, captain of the Wesleyan team, at second, and Wheeler, of Princeton, at short. Harrison, the well-known Princeton pitcher, will be in the box for Montclair. Their other men are all well known.

W. S. Haley, manager of the Riverdales, has the lease of the Crescent Oval for the remainder of the season and for next year. It is his intention to give Plainfield baseball at popular prices. Stages are to be run to the grounds from the station, and the wheels of the patrons will be checked free at the Oval if they prefer to come awheel.

Games will be played every Saturday afternoon for the remainder of the season and some of the best of the nines in the Metropolitan district will be here to meet the Riverdales, who will then go under the name of the Plainfield Baseball Club.

Severe Case of Gastritis.

Robert H. Rushton has returned home from the Presbyterian Hospital in New York, where he has been undergoing treatment for stomach trouble. Mr. Rushton thought at first that there was a growth of some kind inside his stomach and had himself examined carefully by means of the X-rays. The examination lasted ten hours and was complete and thorough. It was found that Mr. Rushton's fears were unfounded, but that he had a severe case of gastritis. His health is much improved.

Star Course Entertainments.

The Star Course entertainments to be given at the Y. M. C. A. this season, have about been arranged for. The first one will be given October 31st, the entertainer being J. Williams Macy, of New York. Mr. Macy's entertainment consists of story-telling and songs.

DON'T LIKE DIRT PILES.

ALBURTUS SWALM AND JOHN HAVILAND INCENSED AT THE CITY.

Earth Excavated for a Sewer Has Been Thrown Up Alongside Their Land—Back Yards Only Way to Enter.

If there are two indignant people in Plainfield they are Alburtus Swalm and John Haviland, of West Front street, near Plainfield avenue. For some time past the work of laying surface drainage pipes through Plainfield avenue has been going steadily along. All went smooth until Front street was reached and the turn was made. The trench was run from the corner of Plainfield avenue down Front street as far as Gleaner avenue. The side of the street chosen for it was alongside of Messrs. Swalm and Haviland's property. The trench was deep and dirt was thrown up on the sidewalk in front of the two properties mentioned to a height of several feet. As a result people were unable to walk along that side of the street, the grass in front of the properties has been practically ruined, and the whole affair has been a source of annoyance. Last Monday Mr. Swalm had company and they were unable to reach the house from the front entrance, but were obliged to walk down Plainfield avenue and go in from the rear.

Mr. Swalm told a newspaper reporter that he thought it was a very cheeky piece of business. He said the dirt could have been thrown on the right hand side of the trench, inasmuch as the trolley company were unable to use one track. It is quite likely that Messrs. Swalm and Haviland will make a complaint about the matter and ask the city to settle with them for damages to the property.

WENT IN SPITE OF STORM

ST. MARY'S T. A. B. EXCURSION GOES TO HIGHLAND BEACH.

A Good Many of the Prospective Excursionists, Though, Stayed at Home When They Saw the Rain Falling Thus Morning.

There was not a very encouraging prospect when the special train, intended to carry the excursion of St. Mary's T. A. B. Society of this city, lined up on the siding just west of the North avenue station. Some of the would be excursionists would not allow such a little thing as a storm spoil their pleasure and showed up at the station at the appointed hour, ready to go if the committee should so decide.

There was a hurried gathering of the committee at an early hour. When it rained aboard, the committee had about decided to stay put up but a cessation of the pattering rain drops and an apparent breaking of the clouds persuaded them to hold the excursion after all.

Thirteen cars had been provided but the crowd that turned out would only fill five or six. Five cars were then left on the siding. It began to mist as the time to start drew near but it did not amount to much and the excursionists clambered aboard.

The start was delayed until 8:20 o'clock, following out the rapides. By that time, the mist had turned to a rain that was falling quite heavily. The train started, however, with the prospect of a wet time. The destination was Highland Beach, a resort near Sandy Hook, lying between the Shrewsbury River and the Atlantic Ocean.

Executive Incensed.

New Market, N. J., August 10.—Attorney Irving L. Brady, of Plainfield, has secured an execution from the Court of Chancery in a foreclosure suit for Mary E. Holton against the Alberti property on Prospect avenue. The decree is for $3,700.

Water Growing High.

The water is now growing so high on the sidewalk on the southern side of South avenue, between Berckman and Richmond streets, that it makes walking unpleaseant, especially in wet weather, when a person's clothes would be drenched by coming in contact with the wet weeds.

Five New Members.

At a regular meeting of Plainfield Council, O. C. F., Tuesday, one candidate was initiated and five propositions for membership were received. The initiation was in charge of P. G., S. Reid, of Jersey City, assisted by F. C. Reid and D. P., G. C. Hopkins, also of Jersey City.

Extending the Mains.

Work was started this morning by the Plainfield Water Supply Company to extend their mains up Somerset street toward Johnston's Drive, so that a water pipe can be laid to the new clubhouse of the Park Golf Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Mosher, of New street, have gone to Unionville, N. Y., for ten days.

SOMERSET CHARGES BAD FAITH TO MIDDLESEX

Somerset Freeholders Had an Exciting Session Yesterday

ABOUT BUILDING A BRIDGE.

IT IS IMPORTANT TO BRUNSWICK TRACTION COMPANY'S PLANS.

A Hitch About Building the Span Over Green Brook at Union Avenue in Bound Brook—Middlesex Shows a Disposition to Back Out of the Plan for Its Share Part of the Expense.

Somerville, August 10.—The regular meeting of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders was held at this place yesterday afternoon. It was one of the most exciting in the history of the Board. An exciting controversy arose over the construction of a bridge over Green brook on Union avenue. It will be remembered that the Middlesex County Board of Freeholders, together with the Somerset County Board, the Brunswick Traction Company and the Philadelphia Traction Company, agreed to erect a bridge on Union avenue, and each one was to pay one quarter of the cost. That plan seemed to satisfy all parties concerned when proposed a month ago.

Great was the surprise yesterday when the Somerset county members learned from the Middlesex County Board that the latter had backed down and refused to pay their share. It seemed to be generally talked about that some of the members of the Middlesex County Board are interested in the Brunswick Traction Company, and, therefore, do not care to put up the price.

The members of the Somerset County Board told Mr. Radel, of the Brunswick Traction Company, yesterday, that he owned the Middlesex County Board, according to his own words, and that he could go back and tell that Board that they can build that bridge if they want such a structure. The members from Somerset have decided to let the matter rest where it is, and they say that they will have no more trouble over the matter.

During the discussion some of the members became exasperated over the action of the members from Middlesex and some of them showed a disposition to withdraw from the plan entirely. Just how the matter will terminate is a question. It is evident that the trolley company would like to get out of erecting a bridge or paying their proportionate share.

Another important matter that came up for a lively discussion was that concerning the fact that Somerset County is now paying $3,000 more school tax than it should by rights. This matter was aired in the Legislative chamber by Senator Reed at the last session, and the Board decided yesterday to take some action.

It seems that Ocean county is not paying its proportionate share, and as Senator Reed stated at Trenton, there are wealthy people in that county who are not assessed within many hundred dollars of what they should. It was stated that one property owner alone in Ocean county was assessed for $2,000,000 when he claimed to be worth $10,000,000.

As a result of the discussion on the subject the director of the board appointed County Attorney Frecht, Freeholders Andrew Lutkins and Erasmus Ballentine a committee to go to Ocean county on August 22d and thoroughly investigate the matter, and report back to the board.

The attention of the Board was also called to the fact that seven colored people residing in North Plainfield had been committed to the County Jail for ninety days, without having an opportunity of paying a fine for their violation of the borough ordinance. The director appointed Erasmus Ballentine and William Logan a committee to ascertain whether it is the duty of the county to keep the seven prisoners for ninety days.

Stopped a Runaway.

A horse belonging to a grocer in Metuchen stumbled Wednesday on West Third street, and, as soon as he recovered himself, set off on a run. One of the reins broke, and the driver was unable to do anything to stop the animal until Samuel Strong, of that street, ran out and caught the horse.

Miss Katie MacLaughlin, of Belvidere avenue, will leave Monday next to spend a few weeks at Troy, N. Y.

Andrew R. Stevens and family have returned to their home on Myrtle avenue after spending a month at the Neptune House, Belmar.

NEW CANDIDATES IN LOCAL STABLES

Made Good Showing at Saturday's Matinee Races.

WOVEN WIND'S VICTORY.

IT WAS RATHER LATE WHEN THE HORSES WERE STARTED.

Judge Coddington's New Gelding Did Some Fast Work, But Was Beaten by a Nose by Osborn's Charge—Three-Minute Event Postponed a Week—Fast Horses and Some Close Finishes.

The prospect of something new in the contests between the local horses brought out a large attendance at the matinee races at the Gentlemen's Driving Park. The event announced for the day, the contest in which the different horsemen were to see who could drive the mile nearest to three minutes, was postponed a week on account of the absence of J. W. Johnson, president of the Driving Club. Instead, there were a number of matches arranged that furnished plenty of excitement.

There was some delay in starting the racing and it was 3:30 o'clock before the horses were out on the track warming up preliminary to the fast work. W. F. Williams, secretary of the Driving Club, acted as starter, Thomas Brantingham and Bert Darby were the judges.

There were a number out exercising during the afternoon before and while the matches were in progress. Robert Fairbairn's fast pacer, "Paul," 2:07, was out warming up under the guidance of Blume. C. C. Brower had Will Thiers' trotter out for an exercise mile that was made in 2:47. Frank Edwards drove "Mollie Prince" for several turns but took no part in the contests of the day.

Former Judge W. A. Coddington had his new brown gelding, "Sam B," out on the track, Brower up. He was matched against Douglass Darby's "Sunday." It was evident that the Judge's horse outclassed Darby's for Brower obtained a lead early in the heat and had to hold "Sam B" most of the time. He won easily in 2:28. In the next heat, the Judge substituted "Belle" for "Sam B." "Belle" won in 2:32½. In the next heat, "Belle" broke constantly and Darby won in 2:33.

One of the closest finishes of the day was seen in a heat between N. B. Smalley's recent purchase, "Katie Rue," a pacer, and Woodbrook Farm's "Woven Wind," driven by John Osborne. All the way around the track they kept together, most of the time neck and neck. Osborne drew a little in advance on the last half but Smalley came up on the turn and they came down the stretch, "Katie Rue's" nose at the throat latch of her opponent. "Woven Wind" took the heat in 2:29¼.

Another new horse, John G. MacLaughlin's "Charles Tammany," driven by "Jersey" Campbell, and Judge Coddington's new trotter, "Sam B," started with those two horses in the next heat. It was another close finish but this time "Woven Wind" and "Sam B" were in the lead. They came down the stretch in great shape, Osborne's charge winning by a head. MacLaughlin's horse took third after a dash with "Kitie Rue." The time was 2:28½. That ended the racing for the afternoon. Next week, unless something unforseen happens, the three-minute contest will be held. Already there is a prospect of a large number of contestants, a prize has been offered by President Johnson who is also expected to drive one of his own horses.

It has been decided to have the three-minute contest next Saturday afternoon. The event will be open only to horses owned by members of the Plainfield Driving Club, owners to drive.

All who wish to take part in the event are requested to send their entries to W. F. Williams, secretary, corner of Somerset street and Jackson avenue before Friday.

No entries will be received after that time, and no one will be allowed to contest who has not duly entered.

Enjoyed Fifty Years of Married Life.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. William Rebmann, of South Stirling, were held at the Mt. Horeb Congregational church Sunday afternoon. They were largely attended by friends from all that section. Mrs. Rebmann was seventy-nine years of age. Last year Mr. and Mrs. Rebmann celebrated their golden wedding which was made the occasion for a great gathering of relatives and friends.

Y. M. C. A. Gym to Closed

During the month of September the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium will be closed to permit some necessary repairs to be made. The apparatus in the gymnasium will need tightening and overhauling, and the swimming tank is to be painted. This alone will take a month, one week for the tank to dry another to paint it and two weeks more to let the paint thoroughly dry.

3,000 AT CAMP MEETING.

BIG ATTENDANCE AT RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN HYDE'S GROVE.

Biggest Portion of the Audience Made Up of White People—The Meetings to Continue for Another Week Yet.

Out in the grove at Netherwood there was a great gathering of people Sunday to attend the camp meeting. Services morning, afternoon and evening attracted many, and nearly three thousand people visited the camp during the day. It was not only the colored people who came. They were a small majority, while the white folks turned out in a crowd.

Rev. Dr. Coster, the pastor of St. Peter's A. M. E. Zion church, under whose auspices the meetings are being held, spoke at all the meetings yesterday. He was assisted by Rev. Dr. Carpenter, of Brooklyn, an eloquent speaker. They were aided by a male quartette in the leading of the singing.

The services will be continued until after next Sunday evening, at least. At that time a Grand Army service will be held. During the week services will be held every evening. All of the local colored pastors have been invited to participate, without reference to creed or belief. Wednesday night Miss Lizzie Babbitt, the great colored woman evangelist, will speak. She will be present the rest of the week and assist in the services. Several of the leading preachers in the New York and Brooklyn A. M. E. Zion church have promised to speak during the week.

So far the camp meeting has been a great success. The attendance has been remarkably large; five have professed conversion and eight asked for prayers. The collections taken, which are for the benefit of the new church, have been very good, and a large portion of the debt has been paid off.

Pastor Coster says that in all his experience in camp meetings he never saw one so orderly as this one There has been no trouble so far with any disturbing element.

WHAT THE WAR SHOWS.

AMERICAN CITIZENSH P IN THE LIGHT OF THE PRESENT TIME.

It is the Same in the Millionaire as in the Artizan—One Blessing is the Closer Unity of the Anglo-Saxon Race.

Considering the warm weather there was a good congregation present at Trinity Reformed church last Sunday to hear Rev. Dr. Carlos Martyn, of New York, deliver a discourse on the subject "American Citizenship in the Light of Spanish War." A display of a large American flag around the pulpit and of two smaller ones over the organ locked appropriate. Arthur Titsworth played patriotic airs on the organ.

The speaker cited some of the great blessings to be derived from the present war, and among them were a closer unity of the Anglo-Saxon race, a stronger fraternity of the north and south. He said that it is surprising to see the strong expression of affection for Old Glory on the part of southern boys when an opportunity was given for them to put on a suit of blue and fight side by side with their northern brothers.

The great point made by Dr. Martyn was that American citizenship is just the same, whether uncovered in the millionaire or the artisan, and that this country is the envy of the greatest ors ever known. "Let us make our country great," continued the speaker, "and lose no opportunities God has given us. We have shown that we are descendants of worthy heroes, and I believe that we can do even better than the heroes of old."

WORKED TOO HARD FOR UNCLE SAM.

Arthur Jackson Broke Down Under Too Hard Work at Newport News.

Arthur Jackson, a middle-aged man, whose residence was formerly in this city, was brought home Monday a. m. by his wife from Newport News, Va., where he has been employed as a machinist for the Government. The rush of work has kept Jackson busy and his health broke down. His wife has been living at Newport with her husband and when the crisis came she nursed him and finally decided that it would be better for him to come north. The couple arrived in Plainfield this morning on the 8:44 Philadelphia train from New York. It was with difficulty that Mrs. Jackson was able to get her husband from the train to the waiting room at the station.

She decided to have him removed to Muhlenberg Hospital, where he is now being cared for. There is a suspicion that Jackson has typhoid fever, but the physicians in charge have not yet determined that to be a fact. The case will have to be watched for a few days to await developments. Jackson is a large man and looks as though sickness had considerably reduced his weight.

Fell and Fractured Her Arm.

Miss Phillips, the young daughter of Richard Phillips, of West Front street, fell from the roof of a small out building in a neighbor's yard Saturday and fractured her arm. She is doing as well as could be expected.

A WOUNDED SOLDIER TOLD OF HIS BATTLE.

Member of the Seventy-first Heard at the Y. M. C. A.

HIS ARM CARRIED IN A SLING

PRIVATE KEUHNLE A BRAVE AND CHRISTIAN FELLOW.

He Was in the Assault on San Juan and Underwent a Thrilling Experience, Which Resulted in His Crippling From the Battlefield With the Bone in One of His Arms Shattered by a Mauser.

Fresh from the stirring scenes in Cuba, Private Fred Keuhnle, of Co. D, Seventy-first Regiment N. Y. Volunteers, has taken up the work of saving souls which he laid down to go to the front at his country's call. Private Keuhnle was a worker in the Christian Mission, in New York, and at the request of the Y. M. C. A. came to this city Sunday afternoon and addressed the young men's meeting.

The message he brought with him was sincere and from his heart. While relating his experiences at the battle of San Juan Hill, in which he received a bad wound, Private Keuhnle deeply interested his hearers, and urged them to prepare their hearts so that they would not be afraid to meet death, whether it comes on the battlefield or elsewhere.

The speaker is rather tall and as he addressed the meeting, clad in the army uniform, with his right arm in a sling, his soft and well-modulated voice made a deep impression. He told about his experiences on June 30th which was the day before the memorable battle. He and several other privates went away from camp to Siboney early in the day, on special duty, and upon their return found the camp in a turmoil, each soldier packing up three days' rations, a piece of bacon, forty two hardtack and some coffee, and preparing to take the field.

Early the next morning, the speaker said, they were on the way to San Juan Hill. After a march of ten miles over a rough country, the Seventy-first reached the scene of battle. Private Kuehnle was deployed in the skirmish line, and some part of his person was struck by the Spanish bullets three times.

The first was only a flesh wound on one of his lower limbs; the second bullet went through his hat, narrowly missing his head, and the third struck the bone in his right arm, shattering it and giving him intense pain. Through a boggy country, his whole body aching and paining from his wound, Kuehnle made his way back to Siboney, where his arm was dressed by surgeons on the hospital ship in the harbor. Later he was sent home to New York.

The attendance at the meeting was very large, and close attention was paid to the speaker. At the request of F. H. Martin, who led the meeting, Kuehnle made a few supplementary remarks after he had given his address, and described at length the famous battle. He also showed a handful of Mauser cartridges, and compared them with one of those used by the Volunteers. The latter are much the larger and more deadly.

War is a terrible thing, he said, but the hand of God is in it as well as in times of peace. He said that many of the boys who formerly spurned religion, were only too glad to listen to him in camp as he read from his little Bible, stained with his own blood from his wound, and which was more precious to him than gold because of its associations. He said that his miraculous escape from death, when men were falling all around him, was due to God's care over him.

Camp Life is Easy;

Private George Bolsterli, of Company K, Third New Jersey Volunteers, returned to duty at Fort Wadsworth Monday a. m. after a forty-eight hour furlough. He says that camp life, at present, is comparatively easy. They have plenty to eat and it is pretty good. At first, when the cooks were not accustomed to the work, the meals were not very pleasant, but they have greatly improved and are all that can be expected in army life.

Complaints About a Street.

The bad condition of West Fourth, from New street to Liberty, is becoming a common cause of complaint of the property holders along that thoroughfare, particularly now that the street has been macadamized from New street east. The gutters are filled with water continually, and the street is scarcely passable for a wheel except between the car tracks where the ground is hard.

Judgment for a Plumber.

Justice Nash this morning rendered his verdict in the Galbraith & Walsh against Barrett case which was tried last week, and gave judgment to the plaintiff for $8.88. The sum sued for was $17.75, money due on a mutual bill of exchanges. Irving L. Brady, represented the plaintiff and W. S. Angleman was for the defense.

RICHTER IN FIRST PLACE

THE JUDGES COULD NOT GO BACK OF CHECKER'S REPORTS.

Other Contestants, However, Claimed That Richter Never Passed Them, But He Insisted That He Did So.

Eugene Richter has been officially announced as the winner of Harry K. Lister's fifteen-mile road race, held Thursday evening. The protests of the other riders that he never made the last turn at Pumptown were not sustained. According to the record of the checker at that point, Vernon Waters, he turned around the pump twice as did the other riders. He was also checked at Campbell's. Under the circumstances there was nothing for the judges to do but award him first prize.

A meeting of the judges was held last Friday at The Daily Press office and the protests duly considered. Waters was very sure that Richter made the two turns, so was Richter. The riders of the bunch were very sure that Richter had never passed them. The evidence of the checker was there, however, and left only one course open to the judges.

The prizes were awarded last Friday after the meeting of the judges.

HONORS INSTEAD OF PAY

QUEER 'ARRANGEMENT PROPOSED FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Suggested That J. W. Murray, Jr., be Made First Assistant, but That Andrew Jennings, as Second, Receive Next Pay.

Now that there is a vacancy in the fire department in the office of first assistant chief there is considerable guessing as to how the vacancy will be filled. The friends of J. W. Murray, Jr., who is second assistant chief, claim that it would be an insult to appoint anyone else to take the position except Mr. Murray. They claim that he has served the city well in the department and is entitled to the position.

In view of these facts it seems that Mr. Murray will be promoted to the position. The plan is to give him the place and increase his pay from $100 per year to $200. The additional $100 will come out of the $600 which was paid to James Martin when he was first assistant chief.

This will leave a vacancy in the office of second assistant chief, and the plan is to appoint Andrew Jennings to that position at a salary of $500 per year, which means that he is to do the work of the first assistant, receive the largest part of the salary, while Mr. Murray is to have the honors of being first assistant chief.

This seems to satisfy most of those interested, and it is quite likely that the plan will go through without any trouble. The matter is, however, in the hands of Mayor Fisk and he will probably make the appointments at the next regular meeting of the Council.

HORSE THRUST HIS HEAD IN A HOUSE

Fractious Steed Frightened Charles Lippincott's Family.

A lively runaway occurred Sunday afternoon about 3:45 o'clock on Elm place, when a horse owned by Policeman Patrick Kanan, of Woodbridge, broke his tie strap and ran through the above street into Chatham. When the animal reached the corner of Watchung avenue and Chatham street, he ran into a fence surrounding the house occupied by Charles Lippincott. A number of the pickets were broken and the animal's head was thrust inside of the back door of the house. The family inside were greatly frightened, thinking that the horse was coming all the way in the room. Mr. Lippencott caught the horse just in time to save further trouble. The wagon shafts were broken and that was all the damage. Shortly afterward the owner appeared and took charge of the rig.

Mr. Kanan was visiting Jeremiah Conners, of Elm place, and he tied his horse in front of the house. It is thought that some dogs in the neighborhood were tantalizing the horse and caused him to run away. Mr. Kanan was able to return home in safety.

LITTLE HOPE OF LIBERTY.

Maggie Bellis and Her Mother Will Have to Raise $200 to Get Out of Jail.

Mrs. Ross Jackson, Maggie Belle Jackson and the half-dozen other colored folks, who were committed to the Somerville County Jail recently by Recorder Long, of the borough, on charges of disorderly conduct, may secure their release if they can raise the necessary money.

While on the train enroute to Somerville that day they met Lawyer Robert M. Clark, to whom Mrs. Jackson related the trouble and expressed a desire to obtain her release from imprisonment.

Mr. Clark said that if she could raise $50 he would get them all out on habeas corpus proceedings, claiming that the commitments at the trial were illegal. So far Mr. Clark has received $15 and is waiting for the remaining $35 before beginning proceedings.

BRIEF WORK OF THE BOROUGH SOLONS.

Nothing But Routine Matters Brought Up for Consideration.

THE COLLECTOR'S REPORT.

SEVERAL PETITIONS RECEIVED ON DIFFERENT SUBJECTS.

Fire Department Reported to Be in First-class Condition—Special Marshal Appointed for Park Golf Club—A Request That Somerset Place Be Accepted as a Public Street of the Borough.

One of the shortest meetings ever held by the Borough Council was the regular August session held Friday Councilmen Valiant and Burtis were among the missing, and no doubt were enjoying a much cooler atmosphere. The Mayor and the rest of the members were present and quickly transacted the small amount of business on hand.

Clerk Arnold reported a cash balance of $355.30, and the sum of $3,030.-09 paid county and State. He also reported the collection of $27.60 from fines, licenses, etc.

The report of Collector Brown showed that since the last report the sum of $1,329.58 had been collected as back taxes, making the total collections to be $4,974.58. The disbursements were $3,920.49, and there is a balance of $1,054.09. In the borough fund there is $687.88, and $366.21 in the Watchung avenue improvement fund.

The members of West End Hose Company reported that Charles Hummer had resigned from the company and that the resignation had been accepted. The members of Warren Engine Company reported that David C. Allen and Z. Conover had served seven years in the company and are therefore entitled to exemption papers. This company also reported the election of J. W. Bamberger and R. Schenck to membership, and asked the Council to confirm the election.

In a communication, E. E. Marshall, of Fairview avenue, stated that he had been assessed for two properties, one of which is owned by Mary Leland, and in order to be released and secure his property he was obliged to pay the entire assessment. He asked the Council to deduct the amount on the property which he does not own. The matter was referred with power. A. E. Faber asked the Council to repair Grove street north of Greenbrook road. A. V. Searing and others petitioned the Council to lay a sidewalk at the corner of Grandview and Westervelt avenues. This matter was referred with power.

Mr. Woolston, of the street committee, reported that during the month of July the sum of $509.39 was expended on streets. He also stated that it would require about $200 to complete the work of repair on Greenbrook road.

Mr. Rogers, of the fire, water and lamps committee, reported everything pertaining to the fire department to be in first-class condition. Mr. Rogers also offered a resolution accepting a fire hydrant which has been located at the corner of Mountain and Westervelt avenues by the Plainfield Water Supply Company.

At the solicitation of the members of the Park Golf Club, through B. A. Hegeman, Jr., the Mayor appointed Fred Coverly as special marshal at the club's house.

A petition was received from W. L. Smalley, Sr., of Craig place, asking the Council to accept Somerset place as a borough street. The Mayor stated that the street should be accepted as the borough has been keeping it in repair and furnishing water and light on the street. The matter was then referred. There is no doubt but what the street will be accepted, but the usual legal course will have to be taken. This concluded the regular business of the evening and the Council went into executive session for the purpose of examining the books of the assessor. It is the intention of the Mayor to refer the books to a special committee and to have them devote a number of evenings in the examination. It is expected that at the next meeting the tax rate for the borough for next year will be announced.

Dogs Were a Nuisance.

Harry Bennett, of the borough, was arraigned Saturday in the borough court and sentenced to ten days or fined $10 for violating a section of the health ordinance, in keeping dogs at his place which proved to be a nuisance. Mrs. Utzinger, a neighbor, made the complaint against Bennett. As the defendant failed to pay the money he was taken to Somerville to serve ten days.

Fell From a Building.

Charles Wilson, of West Sixth street, the young son of Charles M. Wilson, the builder, fell from a scaffold while working on the Hygeia Ice Company's new plant Friday and injured his hand. Wilson fell fifteen feet, and cannot raise his hand on account of its being badly sprained.

CONTRACTS GIVEN OUT.

CARPENTERING AND PAINTING FOR NEW BOROUGH SCHOOL.

G. and C. W. Hummer and Woolston & Buckle the Successful Bidders—Other Contracts Awarded This Week.

The Borough Board of Education met Saturday in adjourned session and considered the bids for the construction of the new public schoolhouse to be erected in the borough. The contract for mason work was not awarded, as the Board think it desirable, if not too expensive, to make some changes in the original plans and specifications, and to ask each of the bidders for the mason work to submit an estimate for the cost of the additional work as soon as the specifications for the changes are prepared by the architect.

The Board will not formally enter into any contracts until such time as the purchasers' attorneys, who are passing upon the validity of the school bonds, make their report, which will be within a few days.

The contract for the carpenter work was awarded to G. and C. W. Hummer. The bid was $4,680. Woolston & Buckle secured the contract for the painting. Their bid was $475.

The contracts for heating, plumbing and ventilating will be awarded at a meeting to be held next week some time. Mr. Wells presided at the meeting last evening and all the members were present except President McCutchen and A. V. D. Honeyman.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN DEAD

MRS. W. C. BURT PASSES AWAY AFTER A TEDIOUS ILLNESS.

Death of Her Husband Was a Shock From Which She Never Fully Recovered—She Was Active in Church Work.

After a prolonged illness, Mrs. Sarah Maria Burt, widow of the late Wm. C Burt, passed away Monday morning at her home on West Seventh street. The end came very quietly and peaceably. Mr. Burt died a little over a year ago. His death was a great shock to his wife who never fully recovered. She has been confined to her home for several months.

Mrs. Burt was born in 1845 in New York. She was the only child of the late Chauncey Shaffer, one of the best known criminal lawyers of his time. She was married to Wm. C. Burt, who held the position of teller in the Seaman's National Bank in New York up to the time of his death. They moved to this city twenty years ago and have lived at their present residence, 912 West Seventh street, ever since.

Mrs. Burt was one of the prominent workers in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church and took an active interest in the growth of the church from the gospel tent until her ill health prevented. Before the chapel was started she was a regular attendant at the First M. E. church. Her membership was afterwards transferred to the Monroe Avenue church.

Mrs. Burt leaves eight children, Warren S., of New York, Clara M., Florence G., Chauncey H., Edith L., Amy G., Jessie A., and Charles C., of this city.

Mrs. Burt has a large circle of friends in this city, among whom she will always be remembered as a Christian woman, a true wife and a kind and loving mother.

USED A HORSEWHIP.

McCann Became Exasperated at the Conduct of Waldron.

Lewis McCann and a young man named Waldron, both residents of Lincoln place, engaged in a quarrel last Saturday afternoon which resulted in McCann using a horsewhip to advantage on Waldron. The latter had been continually causing a disturbance around McCann's home and patience ceased to be a virtue, so says McCann. Saturday Waldron resumed his practice and annoyed his neighbors. McCann appeared and attacked Waldron. The young man related what had happened to his father, who appeared before Justice Mattison and made a complaint. McCann appeared in court and after a discussion the matter was settled amicably with the understanding that Waldron is in the future to keep away from his neighbors.

Oil Stove Exploded.

Last Saturday afternoon at 3:45 o'clock an oil stove exploded in the house of Charles Zimmer, corner of Pearl street and Watchung avenue. The fire was discovered by George Smith, who was working on the street near by. Mr. Powers' drug store and secured the fire alarm key, and sent in an alarm from Box 141 corner of Somerset and Pearl streets. Before the department arrived the fire was out and the firemen were not needed. The fire damaged the woodwork in the kitchen and scorched a blind on the outside of a near-by window. The stove was thrown out doors and thus further damage was prevented.

Joseph A. Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Hubbard, Miss Ethel L. Titsworth, Miss Cora Tomlinson and Miss Lena Tomlinson, of this city, are registered at the Samoset House, Plymouth, Mass.

COLORED PREACHER EXHORTS TOO LOUDLY

Demonstrative Services in Calvary Baptist Church.

NEIGHBORS ARE DISTURBED

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH SERVICES ALSO INTERRUPTED.

Colored Minister Uses a High Voice When Preaching and He Can be Heard a Block Away—Informal Complaint to City Authorities to Have Less Noise Made by Colored Brethren.

People who happen to be in the vicinity of West Front street and Central avenue Sunday evenings, have been able to hear the preacher in the room over Manning's marble works, where the Calvary Colored Baptist church has been holding services. Sometimes the preacher raises his voice. In fact, he does so quite frequently. Now these warm nights, nobody can sit with the windows closed. The consequence is that the exhortations of the colored parson are to be heard by everybody within a radius of a block.

Right across the street from the place where the colored Baptists worship is the home of the largest Baptist congregation in the city, the First Baptist church. There Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes speaks earnest words to the members of his flock. The windows are open and he has just reached an impressive point in his discourse when, of a sudden, the edifice is filled with the shouts of the colored brethern from across the way.

Such incidents are unpleasant particularly when they are frequent. On one occasion, word was sent to the colored worshippers to kindly refrain from too loud demonstrations. Not only does the preaching frequently take on a loud tone but the singing is sometimes remarkably demonstrative.

It is an understood fact that everybody has a right to worship as they please, provided, however, they do not disturb those around them. Now some of the neighbors of the colored church are not pleased with the situation. They feel that the colored brethern should put some check to their enthusiasm if only for the sake of those living in the neighborhood. These people have consequently appealed to the city authorities, only informally as yet, to see if the trouble cannot be peaceably settled.

Up to the present time no formal complaint has been made. If, however, there is not a cessation of the noise in the future, one will be made and the city authorities will be asked to step in and look after the interests of the neighbors.

WHISKEY MADE HIM ROAR YEOW!

Sad Fight That a Young Farm Hand Got Himself Into.

"Yeow!" he yelled as he ran down North avenue from the freighthouse in the direction of Netherwood Friday afternoon. Children fled, women looked alarmed and men wondered what had happened.

Richard Ayres is a young man who has been employed at Milkman Terry's farm. He was perfectly harmless and had a good reputation. Friday afternoon he was sent to unload a wagon filled with beer-grains at the Plainfield freighthouse. It was a pretty warm day and the violent exertion made the prespiration run freely.

Now to brace himself up, it is said that Dick provided himself with some whiskey and water, of which he partook at stated intervals, which, it is feared, were too close to each other for the good of the young man. Some of those who saw him say that he put too much water in the whiskey and that it went to his head.

At any rate, he suddenly quit work, left his horses standing there and went forth roaring along the street. Thus it was that Roundsman Frederickson found him near Netherwood yesterday afternoon, and locked him up for the night.

When Ayres was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza Saturday the Judge heard his story and suspended sentence.

DIED AS HE REACHED MANHOOD.

Max Miln, a Promising Young Fellow, Couldn't Survive Appendicitis.

Max Miln, grandson of E. V. Shotwell and nephew of J. J. Shotwell, of this city, died at his home in New York yesterday. His death was caused by appendicitis. He was just of age.

He lived here for a number of years, residing on Central avenue. Five years ago he, his mother and two sisters, moved to New York. His mother died in New York two months ago and was buried in this city. His sisters are still living. Both are unmarried.

Max Miln was well-known here and had a large circle of acquaintances among the Plainfield young people. He attended the Plainfield High School while living here.

Miss M. M. McKissick, of Manning avenue, is at Rocky Hill.

HARD LIFE WITH THE AMBULANCE TRAIN.

Daniel C. Main Tells of Army Tribulations in Cuba.

STALLED BY RAIN AND MUD.

MULE CARRIED HIM ACROSS STREAM IN A HEROIC MANNER.

Took a Ten-mile Drive After General Chaffee, But Latter Decided Not to Use the Ambulance After All—Without Food All Day He Underwent Privations, Bringing on Malarial Fever.

Daniel C. Main, who is with the ambulance train with Shafter's army in Cuba, has written the following very interesting letter of his experiences to his father, Rev. A. E. Main, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church:

Am just now rearing from a few days' attack of fever, but am nearly well, so that I can eat heartily and do considerable work. We are hearing all sorts of reports about this part of the army; that it has done its share of the fighting; that we are soon to go home; that we are to draw double pay; and so on. For one thing I should like a permanent camp. One night we are in the mud, the next on a mountain; one day we have three full meals of beans, bacon, hard tack and coffee, the next day but one meal.

Our ambulances are busier carrying sick than they were when we were with wounded men during the fighting, excepting that we do not have to work nights. What brought my fever on was being sent out one morning before breakfast with my ambulance on a ten-mile drive after Gen. Chaffee. The roads were muddy and it took us till 11 a. m. to reach his headquarters. He kept us till 1:30 p. m., and then decided not to return with us. In the meantime it had begun to rain, and at 5 o'clock we were still five or six miles from camp. You know nothing of mud; when four mules are pulling an ambulance through mud three or four inches deep, they are working. At 5 o'clock we crossed one creek, and it was dangerous there; but one-hundred yards further on there was a larger stream so swollen that an army wagon was stalled, and men on horse and mule back had to start away up stream on the opposite bank, in order to reach the place in the bank on our side where the road was.

We picked up three patients on the way; and six of us, the colored driver, the patients, the civilian doctor who had been sent to care for the General on the trip, and myself, made ourselves as comfortable as possible with a night before us, minus food and bedding. About 7:30 I had grown pretty hungry, having had nothing all day, so I took one of the mules, managed to cross the stream which was running at terrible speed, and started in for our camp. I crossed three more creeks about as bad as the first, swimming the mule each time. At one place the only road was down the creek bed about 100 yards. The water had never been over two or three feet deep before, with a good gravel bottom, but then it was from four to six. How the mule found the landing I do not know, but find it he did, and, getting on his back again, I proceeded. The best of the road was at least knee-deep with mud, and I nearly lit 5 o'clock p. m. when I reached camp. I expected to carry food right back to the ambulance, but our doctor said I must not do that as wet as I was, but go to bed, and early in the morning return to the ambulance with the mule. This I did, and we got in with the ambulance about noon. The creeks were still high, but had gone down enough so we could cross them. That afternoon I had a high fever.

Am hoping we shall move nearer Santiago, now that it has surrendered; and we may come home by fall. Have received the first mail for over a month, I believe.

Now that the fighting is over, our camp has been made a medical distributing station as well as an ambulance station, and two of us, on account of our knowledge of drugs, have been placed in charge. For a few days we worked ourselves nearly to death, then we protested and a third man was added, one that I knew in New York. We handle the medicines, dressings and delicacies for the whole army. Each brigade surgeon sends a requisition to us for what he wants, and we put it up. Some orders are large, some are small, and they keep us hustling mornings, but we do not have much to do afternoons.

We get up about 5 o'clock a. m., build a fire out of doors whether it rains or not, go to a side of bacon that hangs on a tree limb and cut off what we want, and fry it in one-half of one's cooking kit, which consists of two oblong pans, one having a handle. If you prefer your hardtacks toasted, put them into a frying pan, which, of course, is half full of grease. They are much better this way than dry. You are given enough coffee for one cup, which is on the fire while the bacon is frying. If we get canned tomatoes I put in broken hardtack and cook them in the frying pan. Roast and corned beef we eat cold, or warm or cooked up with tomatoes. If we get potatoes, which we have not had for a long time, or onions, we cook them with the beef and tomatoes and call it "slum." We had a bag of oatmeal and one of corn meal given us, and this we cooked in our tin cups.

When I get home I want nothing but mince pie, lemon pie, pumpkin pie, cream hot biscuit and butter, with a little steak and chicken thrown in.

From where I sit, in front of the supply tent, I look upon a scene truly tropical; reeds from four to six inches through and 50 to to 90 feet tall; immense palms; high cocoanut trees; cacti a foot through and 50 feet tall; and all sorts of tropical trees that I do not know the names of. Guanos grow wild all through the woods, mangoes and other tropical fruits. Some of the roads made by the engineer corps are through veritable jungles, and are very rough, too. But it is not easy to be painstaking when constructing roads over which a whole army is waiting to march to the front.

Besides putting up the orders from the surgeons, we prescribe for some, mostly men from the pack trains and who have no regular doctors to look after them.

INITIATED BY VISITING TEAM.

Four New Members Conducted Into Norah Dove Encampment.

Noah Dove Encampment, No. 28, I. O. O. F., had a big time last Thursday, when four members were initiated into the order by the crack team from the Encampment from South Trenton. The team consisted of twenty-six members and they won admiration from all present for the way in which they did their work.

After the business of the evening all adjourned to Washington Hall, where a bountiful repast was served by a committee in charge. At the banquet there were a number of members from Queen City and Plainfield Lodges, I. O. O. F. Excellent speeches were made and several vocal solos were given by the visiting members. The visitors left town on the 1:17 Philadelphia train.

A Pleasant Affair.

Marshal William Campbell and wife, of Summit avenue, entertained a few friends at their home Friday evening, and an evening of music and sociability was enjoyed by all. Those present included Mrs. Windham, Miss Windham, Mrs. Sheritt, Miss Sheritt, Mrs. Tucker, Mrs. Campbell, A. Campbell, Mr. Dentz, Frank Dentz, Miss Carrie Dentz, O. Phillip, Mrs. Phillip, Miss Bertha Phillip, Miss Mamie Phillip, Miss Jennie Clawson, Miss Flora Bilyeau, Edward Smalley, Irving Mills, Mr and Mrs. Mills, Ira Faun, Miss Mair and Oscar Vaughn.

Dance at Catholic Club.

One of the regular midsummer night dances was held at the Catholic Club Friday and was well attended. The hall was decorated with the National colors, and to music furnished by Prof. O'Reilly the merry dance was kept up until a late hour. The handsome new Steck concert grand piano, which was recently purchased by the club, was used Friday night for the first time. The house committee had charge of the dance.

A TINY "R" CAUSED DETECTION OF THIEF.

A Servant Girl Succeeded In Stealing $110.

HER EMPLOYER THE VICTIM.

MARKED BILLS WERE DISCOVERED IN HER POCKETBOOK

Annie Price, Colored, Who Worked for C. T. Rogers, of New Market, Confessed to Having Regularly Taken Money From Her Boss—$75 Found in Her Trunk—Was Not Arrested.

C. T. Rogers, a clothing manufacturer, having a shop and place of business near the lake, has been missing sums of money during the past few months. The losses became so frequent that Mr. Rogers sought counsel from Lawyer William Newcorn; of Plainfield, who suggested that a colored servant, Annie Price, employed about the house, was the thief. A plot was laid to catch her, and Friday afternoon the girl was detected and forced into a confession. The aggregate amount stolen is $110.

Mr. Rogers hired Annie Price about last fall, and soon after her installation in the household the thefts began to be noticed. Mr. Rogers employs a large force of hands, and each week goes to Plainfield and draws $200 or $300. The money comes tied up in packages of $25 each, which were placed in Mr. Rogers' desk and locked up.

When Mr. Rogers would go to his desk he would find that some of the bills had been extricated from the packages. One time he missed $15, another time $30; although the amount generally taken was only $6 or $8.

Last spring Mr. Rogers changed the lock of the desk, but the thefts continued, and later he bought a safe. He noticed that the packages of money were always unbroken after this, and the mystery was deeper than ever.

What first drew Mr. Rogers' attention to the girl was a sudden determination on her part to go to her home in Martinsville, Va. Mr. Rogers knew that her railroad fare would be $20, and that she had sent several registered letters containing money home, and he couldn't understand how it was that she had the means to go.

Thursday, Mr. Rogers consulted Lawyer Newcorn, and acting on his advice placed two packages of bills in the desk. Each package contained bills marked with a small "R" in the corner. In an offhand way Mr. Rogers let Annie know that the money was there.

Before breakfast Friday Mr. Rogers looked in his desk and found the money all right. After breakfast $9 were gone. Annie suddenly determined to go to Plainfield.

After her departure Mr. Rogers went to Plainfield and got Mr. Newcorn. Together they returned to the house, and getting a search warrant from Justice Storms, Mr. Newcorn, Mr. Rogers, Justice Storms and Constable Luther Mundy proceeded to Annie's room and broke open her trunk.

There, lying hidden under fine dresses, dainty underwear and soft linen of the very best kind, the searching party found $75. None of the marked money was there, however. While busy with the girl's things, Annie appeared on the scene. In her fright at what she saw she laid down her pocketbook, which she carried, and Mr. Newcorn, slipping over to it, seized it, and opening it found $4 there. Two of the bills bore the fatal "R" and Annie's guilt was established.

The girl at first stoutly denied taking anything, but through Mr. Newcorn's adroit cross-questioning she at last admitted taking the $9. At last she said that she had been taking small sums ever since last November, until the purchase of the safe prevented her taking any for a time. While in Plainfield she bought a plain gold ring for $6.

Annie begged so hard for mercy, and promised faithfully to work hard and pay back all she had taken, that Mr. Rogers took only $55 of the $75, thus leaving her $20 with which to get home. She promised to leave town at once and was placed on a train soon afterwards.

Annie absolutely refused to tell how she succeeded in getting in the desk, saying that she always found the drawer open.

In Honor of Guests

Miss Gertrude Tier, of Bank place, gave a party last Friday in honor of her cousins, the Misses Madge and Victoria Martin, of New York, and entertained many of her friends. Music and dancing was the feature of the evening. At a late hour refreshments were served.

To Start the Work Soon.

SAT IN A CHAIR AND DIED

SUDDEN DEATH OF FRANCIS J. DOREMUS LAST NIGHT.

Retired in Apparent Good Health, But Soon After Felt Distressed—Was a Former Morris County Assemblyman.

Hon. Francis J. Doremus, aged 82 years, a resident of the borough for the past eleven years, died very suddenly Thursday at 10:20 p. m. at his home on Prospect place. Previous to that time Mr. Doremus was apparently in the best of health, and his death, due to apoplexy, was a terrible shock to his wife, who was alone with him. He had been to bed, but awoke with a feeling of distress. He got up and took a chair for awhile. He had not been sitting there very long when he dropped out of the chair, dead. Mrs. Doremus was nearly prostrated, as she had not the slightest intimation of his condition.

Miss Teeple, who resides in the house, was awakened and she at once told Edward Ross, who lives next door, to go for Dr. Adams and for W. C. Townsend, son-in-law of the deceased. By the time Dr. Adams arrived life was extinct, and the doctor pronounced death due to apoplexy.

Word was sent to County Physician Wagoner, of Somerville, and this morning he gave a certificate for burial after satisfying himself as to the cause of death.

Mr. Doremus was born at Madison, Morris county, and spent most of his younger days in that vicinity. Later in life he engaged in the contract business and travelled extensively in attending to the erection of large buildings. He was at one time elected Assemblyman from Morris county, and represented his constituents in an able manner. He owned considerable property throughout the State and was considered to be a well-to-do man.

Fifty-nine years ago he was married to Miss Rhoda Bonnell, of Chatham, this State, and she survives him, as do also four children. One son, Jefferson Doremus, lives at Spring Valley, this State, while another son, Monroe Doremus, lives at Genesee, Ill. One daughter, Mrs. Fred Treat, lives at South Orange, and the other daughter, Mrs. W. C. Townsend, resides at 430 West Sixth street, this city.

Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made, but the interment will be at Chatham.

LOST! A KEG OF BEER.

One Fell Out of Frank Linke's Beer Wagon—Found by Officer Flanagan.

Lying under the Liberty street railroad bridge Thursday afternoon, Officer Flanagan found a keg full of liquid and labeled "Pale Beer." By marks on the keg it was found to belong to Frank Linke, and it probably dropped off one of the wagons as it drove through that part of the city.

Officer Flanagan loaded the keg on a truck that was passing, and the truckman took it to Linke's. The officer expressed great surprise that someone had not found the beer, for a crowd of young men and boys had been hanging around the corner of Third and Liberty streets all the morning, and would have no doubt made short work of the contents of the keg had they found it.

RUN INTO FIGHTING DOGS.

Thrilling Experience a Plainfield Cyclist Underwent.

William A. Leland, of Plainfield, collided with two dogs while wheeling through the village Friday afternoon, bent his bicycle and cut his arm and leg. Leland was riding quite fast when a wagon turned out directly in front of him. Between the wagon and the gutter two dogs were fighting.

Leland had to choose which to run down, and chose the dogs. He struck them both, was thrown, and struck the hard roadbed. He was helped to his feet and his cuts bound up. One of the pedals was bent all out of shape, but it was put back in shape again, and Leland was able to ride home.

EARTH DIDN'T SETTLE ENOUGH.

Telephone Company Must Level Off Trenches Made by Them.

Manager Runyon, of the N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Company, met with the members of the street committee Thursday and talked with them about leveling the ditches in the various streets where the telephone conduits were laid.

The earth thrown in over the conduits is packed so well, even better than the telephone company expected, and so far has refused to settle as much as was expected. Mr. Runyon promised to make the work satisfactory.

KEAN BIDS $250,000 FOR COUNTY TROLLEY

Offer for Franchise Submitted to Freeholders Yesterday.

PREVIOUS OFFER $100,000.

DETAILS OF THE PLAN TO CONNECT PLAINFIELD AND ELIZABETH.

The Bid Laid on the Table Till August 10th—Union County League Prepared to Fight the Scheme With Best Legal Talent—The Rates of Fare and Other Conditions are Made Plain.

The Board of Freeholders held a meeting Thursday to receive bids for the franchise for a trolley road between Elizabeth and Plainfield. Only one bid was received, and this was an entirely new one from ex-Congressman John Kean. His previous offer was $100,000, but today he offered $250,000. Mr. Kean's bid was laid on the table until August 10, when a special meeting will be held to consider it.

The Union County League, of which the leading spirits are Alden B. Bigelow and William Drysdale, of Cranford, together with Wright Babcock, of Fanwood, are opposed to Mr. Kean's proposition, and will fight it to the matter comes up for a hearing. They have retained Richard V. Lindabury, ex-Senator F. C. Marsh and Paul Q. Oliver as their counsel.

Mr. Kean's offer is as follows:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

The Elizabeth City Horse Railroad Company hereby proposes to construct, maintain and operate a street railroad on Westfield or North avenue, from Orchard street to the city of Elizabeth, to Richmond street in the city of Plainfield; also on Orchard street in the city of Elizabeth, from Westfield or North avenue to Morris avenue; also on Richmond street in the city of Plainfield, from North avenue to Third street, and thence on Third street to Watchung avenue.

If this proposition is accepted it is the intention of said company to construct a double track street railroad on North or Westfield avenue, from Orchard street in the city of Elizabeth to Richmond street in the city of Plainfield, as the same appears widened and straightened on a certain map, adopted by your honorable body and filed in the county Clerk's office, July 14th last; a double track street railroad on Orchard street in the city of Elizabeth, from Westfield or North avenue to Morris avenue, and a single track street railroad on Richmond street in the city of Plainfield, from North avenue to Third street, and thence on Third street to Watchung avenue, with a siding on Third street for a track extending easterly from Watchung avenue.

The motive power to be used on said railroad is electricity.

The rates of fare to be charged on said street railroad are as follows:

Between points east of the township of Cranford on the lines of railroad above mentioned, and points in the city of Elizabeth on any line owned or controled by said company, or with which the same may be connected, five cents.

Between points in the townships of Cranford and Westfield, five cents.

Between points west of Westfield, five cents.

Between points in Cranford and Plainfield, seven cents.

Between points in Westfield and Elizabeth, eight cents.

Between other points not above mentioned and not exceeding five miles apart, five cents.

Commutation tickets between points in Elizabeth and Plainfield, twenty-five cents.

Thirty-three school tickets to be sold for $1, to be good between points where a 5-cent fare is charged for adults, and twenty-five school tickets to be sold for $1, to be good between points where more than 5 cents for a single trip is charged for adults; provided such school tickets are offered between the hours of 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. on days when schools are in session, and when presented by a scholar going to and coming from school, such tickets to be void if detached.

The amount of money to be contributed by said company for defraying the cost of improving the said public highways, or any of them, as indicated in part on the said map adopted by your honorable body on the 14th of July last, is $250,000, and interest at 4 per cent. for five years on whatever sum, if any, said improvement shall cost in excess of said sum of $250,000. Payment of said sum to be made by instalments as required by your honorable body as the construction of the street railroad proceeds in each municipality.

The amount to be paid annually for the franchise is $100,00.

If this proposition shall be accepted, it is the purpose of this company to connect the street railroad proposed to be built with the road now owned and operated in the city of Elizabeth by the Elizabeth Street Railroad Company, said street railroad to be constructed and equipped for operation by electricity, thus forming a direct route from the ferry at the foot of East Jersey street to the centre of the city of Plainfield; such connection to be made as far as practicable by means of street railroads already existing, and if reasonable terms for that purpose cannot be made without delay, application will be made to your honorable body and to the council of the city of Elizabeth for a franchise to construct a street railroad from the junction of Morris avenue and Union street to Broad street by way of Union street and West Grand street.

The company will also agree to sprinkle its roadbed when dusty at its own expense.

The material to be used in the construction of the street railroad shall be of standard quality, and shall be located on such parts of the said highways as may be designated by your honorable body. The cars to be used by the company shall be provided with fenders of approved design, and shall be run on an average headway of at least fifteen minutes between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 10 o'clock p. m., and at other hours according to the needs of travel.

This proposition is made in the expectation that the franchise, if granted, will be for the term of 75 years.

Sealed and respectfully submitted by order of the board of directors of the Elizabeth City Horse Railroad Company, August fourth, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight.

The Elizabeth City Horse Railroad Company.

By John Kean, President.

Attest:
J. W. Whelan, Secretary.

VALUABLE RELIC.

Section of Colon's Flag Sent Home by Plainfield Boy.

J. B. Bennett, of the borough, is in receipt of a very valuable relic from the naval battle fought off Santiago July 3d, when the entire Spanish fleet was destroyed.

It is a large piece of the signal flag that was flying on the Christobal Colon.

It was sent by Mr. Bennett's son, Frank, who is a member of the crew of the New York, Admiral Sampson's flagship.

The strip of yellow, red and white, the colors of Spain, does not show any evidence of the terrible rain of shot and shell through which it went.

Considering the fact that there are several hundred of the crew on the New York it is somewhat remarkable that young Bennett should have secured so large a piece of the flag.

It is probable toat the young man helped pull it down.

MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S FESTIVAL.

Successful Affair Carried Out by Daughters of America.

A mid-summer night's festival was held in the Cycle Academy last Thursday under the auspices of Martha Washington Council, No. 23, Daughters of America, and the affair was highly successful. Music for dancing was furnished by Nathan Guttman, and was a feature. The committee in charge consisted of Gilbert Sutphen Martin, chairman; Mrs. T. S. Riker, secretary; George Allen, treasurer; Fred Walsh, Mrs. Fred Walsh, Garret Mattis, Mrs. George Allen, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Thompson, and they did all in their power to make the evening one of pleasure for those who attended.

Great Day for the Juniors.

The annual excursion of the Jr. O. U. A. M., to Asbury Park, August 18th, will go rain or shine. It is expected that there will be twenty thousand Juniors in the parade that is to take place on that day. The committee has arranged with the Central Railroad Company to leave the Park at 9:15 in the evening. There will be twenty-two excursions to the Park that day and they will all leave at 9 o'clock except the Plainfield one. This arrangement was made so that the Plainfielders can leave in comfort.

His Ninth Birthday.

Master Walter Scriven, of the Babcock building, entertained a number of his young friends Thursday afternoon in honor of the anniversary of his ninth birthday. The afternoon was passed in playing games, after which refreshments were served. Those present were: Edna and Walter Kennedy, Sadie and Phillip Leinchentritt, Roy Titsworth, Florence Scriven, Phillip and Boardman Moeher, Ethel Rogers, Jessie Smith, Walter and Elmer Scriven.

RAY POOLE WINS FRESH LAURELS.

Finished Second in Harry Lister's Road Race.

HE WON FIRST TIME PRIZE.

RICHTER, WHO FINISHED FIRST, IS PROTESTED BY OTHERS.

Claimed He Did Not Make Last Turn—Checker's Record Shows He Did—Winner of Irvington-Milburn Race Took Second Time Prize—Many Witnessed the Race—Twenty-two Starters.

The second of Harry K. Lister's road races took place Thursday and, like the first, was decidedly successful. It was held early in the evening ever a course of 15 miles laid out Park avenue between Plainfield and Pumptown.

There is just a shadow of doubt as to the winner of the race, and the judges are still withholding their official report, but there seems little doubt but that Eugene Richter, of Netherwood, will be declared the victor. The time prize unquestionably goes to Ray Poole.

The race lay between the men with the low handicaps. Fifteen miles with the heavy wind of last night was too strong a pull for the limit men and they succumbed one after another.

There were twenty-two men who faced the starter, Lewis Peterson and Clarence McMurtry were the first to start with four minutes handicap. McMurtry punctured his tire at Holly's Corners. Peterson gave out after riding seven miles. H. Rathjen and M. Owens also quit.

The race sarted on Park avenue, just north of Randolph road. The course was out to Pumptown and return to Avon Park turning about Campbell's road house, to Pumptown again and back finishing where they started.

When they reached Campbell's after covering half the distance, Clarence Bittenhouse was well in the lead, riding all alone. Then came a bunch of the 1 minute, 30 seconds men who had held together and after them the scratch men. Jorden Hanson and John Cunningham, of Perth Amboy, and Ray Poole, of this city, were the scratch men. While crossing Avon bridge the bridge tumbled into the path of Cunningham, throwing him. He mounted again and caught the bunch only to puncture his tire on the long hill to Pumptown. Richter was with them.

The scratch men overhauled the bunch and went on, accompanied by Harry Cuming, Joseph Burke and Charles Dodd. Richter says that he ran away from that bunch on the Oak Tree hill and came on alone. At any rate he came flying over the tape, a hundred yards in advance of the bunch, riding hard. His tire was nearly flat.

There was a pretty sprint by the men in the bunch. Poole jumped out and led over the tape with Dodd second, Cuming third and Hanson half a wheel behind him. Burke was pushing the Perth Amboy man closely. Sorensen and Westerfield came in together with Rittenhouse not far behind. Then the crowd broke ranks and the other riders who finished had to dodge pedestrians and carriages to cross the tape. The crowd finally became so great in the roadway that the stragglers, knowing that they were not placed, made no attempt to pass the judges.

A protest was made against Richter by several riders, the claim being made that he did not make the last turn at Pumptown. Vernie Waters, the checker there, however, had checked him all right on the last turn. It was claimed that Richter had said that he did not make the turn. When interviewed by one of the judges, he declared that he had completed the entire course. With the evidence of the checker, it looks as if Richter would receive first.

First time prize went to Poole. Hanson, the Irvington-Milburn winner, was three-fifths of a second behind him and received second time prize. The order of finish of the first thirteen men, with their corrected time, was as follows:

ORDER OF FINISH.

Name and Residence.	Hand.	Time. Minutes.
Eugene Richter, Netherwood	1	59:03
Ray Poole, Plainfield	1	57:30
Charles Dodd, Elizabeth	1½	59:29 1-5
Harry Cuming, Plainfield	1	59:29 1-5

Harry Lister, Plainfield	3	61:34

Fred. Kroaner, of Plainfield, was next, but his time was not caught.

Harry K. Lister acted as clerk of the course and starter. The judges were Thomas A. Cuming, Charles B. Morse, H. I. VanEmburgh and Emanuel Stout. The timers were F. W. VanSicklen, Lindley M. Hillman and Clarence Rogers.

Washout on West Third Street.

The heavy rain Thursday caused another washout on West Third street, near Clinton avenue. The soil is soft and porous there and the washout is only a repetition of what has occurred in that locality before. It will be repaired as soon as possible.

"Don't Forget Your Parcels."

The habit of carrying bundles containing anything from a bunch of roses to shad roe is such a distinctive one of the suburban resident leaving New York that it is seldom that a true blue commuter trods a ferryboat homeward bound without his accompaniment of packages. While hurrying through a crowded street of the metropolis in the endeavor to catch a train that leaves in a half minute and being yet four blocks away from the ferry slip it is the aggressive duty of the commuter to hold fast to his bundles as though they were his last earthly possession. But once ensconced in a seat on the train and deeply engaged in the columns of an afternoon paper the commuter as suddenly becomes oblivious of the existence of the heretofore precious packages as he was conscious of their seeming inestimable value but a few minutes before. By just what process of mental cogitation this change of mind is brought about has defied all students of human nature, but it is an historical fact that if the commuter acts as if his life depends upon the safety of his packages while rushing for the train he loses all such senses when he arrives at his destination.

And thereby hangs a world of trouble for the train crews of the various roads over which the commuter seeks rapid transit to his residential elysium. Cars strewn with packages of various sizes, containing most everything that the suburban homes may need, are left to be cleared at the terminal. Then the next morning a torrent of enquiries greet the train men from the disgruntled passengers who the night before have encountered the wrath of their better-halves for not having brought home the articles that were ordered a twelve hour before. Sometimes the packages are recovered and sometimes they are not, but at all events it is certain that the railroad company is not pleased with the fact that the missing articles are left to their care by the capricious commuter.

How to overcome the forgetfulness of the commuter has been a problem long debated in official railroad circles, but until very recently the matter has not been successfully coped with by any railroad company. Now, however, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad seems to have struck a solution—except for those commuters who are hard of hearing. Besides calling out the name of the station it is the duty of trainmen on that road to add:

"Don't forget your parcels."

There you have it in a nutshell—simple enough, it appears, but quite effective. The Lackawanna has set a pattern and at no distant day the timely admonition quoted above may be added to the cirriculum of the trainmen's duties on all railroads running out of New York.

The County Trolley.

A quarter of a million dollars sounds like a big sum of money for a privileges that heretofore has been usually given away. But John Kean's offer of $250,000 for the franchise to build and operate a trolley road between Elizabeth and Plainfield, as provided for under the Squire law, demonstrates what values the existing transit companies in this section have received for almost nothing as much as it shows the bigness of the bid of Mr. Kean.

John Kean's reputation as a shrewd business man compels the belief that the franchise is actually worth more than what is offered, but if that sum will be sufficient to pay the expenses of the changes that it will be necessary to make along the proposed route of the county boulevard the majority of taxpayers will doubtless be satisfied if Mr. Kean is granted the franchise and the boulevard scheme is consummated.

But there is one factor which must be reckoned with as boding serious obstacles to the scheme. That is the disposition of the people of Cranford to fight the matter. From what we can learn sentiment in Cranford seems strongly against the plan to widen the county road. And since the Squire law embodies a clause making it necessary to have the consent of each municipality through which the proposed widening is to be made, there is prospect of plenty of delay. Especially is this so since the objectionists have employed high priced legal talent to put up a defense for them.

Undoubtedly in time there will be trolley connections between Plainfield and Elizabeth and when there are it will be for the benefit of the people at large, but whether the improvement will come through a movement like the Bergen scheme or result from the endeavors of private capitalists is still an open question.

An Enterprise Not Appreciated.

The hundreds of people living in Plainfield who seek a summer resort where quietude, cooling breezes and excellent service are attributive to the visit seem to be unconscious of the fact that on the summit of the Watchung mountains the Mountain Park Inn furnishes all these things and many more pleasant ones.

Mountain Park Inn is an enterprise that is not appreciated as well as it ought to be by Plainfielders. The Inn was built to cater to local citizens who had long bemoaned the lack of such a resort in our midst when the natural surroundings were so appropriate to its establishment, yet now that it is here dependent upon public favor the prospective guests from Plainfield do not constitute in such numbers as was anticipated.

Such an enterprise as Mountain Park Inn adds to the attractiveness and worth of Plainfield as a residential place and is an important factor in the aggregate of beautiful things which we have to offer the advantage of to prospective residents. We believe that it is to the best interests of Plainfield that all such establishments as Mountain Park Inn should succeed. It may sound like free advertising, but we do not hesitate to speak a good word for its success.

The Attack on Mr. Clark.

The editor of The Somerset Democrat views the recent attack on the party fealty of Alvah Clark, a prominent Somerset county Democrat, in the following light:

As everyone knows, leadership comes of itself. No man can make himself a leader unless the people push him there by reason of his capacity to lead, which manifests itself in such way as to inspire confidence in those who the people choose as guides.

The personal bagging such items as that of The World are not prompted by good motives, nor have they the best interests of the party at heart. The columns of Somerset have not a vote to spare, much less the host of friends of any prominent man.

With a united front this fall, we might carry the county, but such items will not tend to unify the party. The proclaimers of such a scheme are either prompted by jealousy or wish to create dissension and make confusion in the ranks another instead of less. If we win in Somerset this fall we want all of our votes. In fact, we have not one vote to spare, and we don't want any such misrepresentations as have been imposed on The World correspondent.

Kean's Offer.

To the ordinary mind reading the terms with which John Kean surrounds his offer of $250,000 for the county trolley franchise, the proposed agreement seems to be fair and just for both Kean and the public. Yet when the offer is thoroughly dissected by those who may understand trolley franchises and their actual worth better than the everyday citizen, who only looks casually at the proposition, it will probably be seen that in many instances Kean has kept the best end of the bargain for himself. This is very natural and to be expected, however.

An interesting observation on the offer is made by The Newark Advertiser as follows:

The terms offered as to rates of fare are not as favorable as those obtained by Newark and Hudson county franchises from the Consolidated Traction Company, and there is nothing said about a tax on the gross income.

The form of revenue obtained by Newark from its trolley franchises represents an annual interest of four per cent. on nearly two million dollars.

Want Voorhees to Stay in Senate.

A prophecy is ventured that the next Legislature will be very close. In view of that result many Republicans are opposing the nomination of Foster Voorhees for Governor, because in the event of his election as Governor his party would lose a vote for United States Senator. He would then be forced to resign his seat as Senator from Union County. The vacancy could not be filled until after the election for Senator.

In 1877 the Democrats had a majority of only one in the Legislature, when John R. McPherson, for the first time, was chosen United States Senator. And that majority of one was brought about by the election of J. Vance Powers to the Assembly in the Third district of Mercer county by a majority also of one. Some Republicans fear that the next Legislature may be as close, and consequently they believe that if Mr. Voorhees had better hold on to his position as State Senator from Union county, he having one more year of his term to serve.

Watch New Brunswick.

Here and there once in awhile we hear of women being given the advantage of the ballot in school elections. Usually the privilege is accepted and fulfilled in a thoroughly conscientious way by the fair ones, who, if they are capable of management of any sort of public affairs, certainly should show their ability in school matters.

Strange as it may seem we hear of women's emancipation over in New Brunswick—a place with a reputation for political ways that are as dark and as crooked as any section in New Jersey. Woman's influence is not generally welcomed in public affairs where politicians of the Brunswick stripe hold forth, but however their recognition may have taken place it is a fact that H. Brewster Willis, County Superintendent of Public Schools, has decreed that the women have a perfect right to participate in the action of choosing a site for the new public school building to be erected in that city.

The decision of Superintendent Willis has aroused considerable interest. We doubt not but what the women will acquit themselves at the election in a way that will show that they have got more gumption than a good many of the men whose right to a vote has never been questioned.

Predicament for the Freeholders.

The proposed widening of the county road and the construction of a trolley road thereon has already developed contrary phases in two communities whose interests in the proposed improvement would seem to be identical. While in Cranford the citizens are bitterly opposed to the widening of the thoroughfare, on the ground that the damages will exceed the benefits, in Westfield an opposite condition of the public mind prevails. Westfield is just as bitterly opposed to the plan which leaves North avenue at its present width through that town as Cranford is opposed to the project of widening the same street through that place.

The opponents in both towns are prepared to fight the scheme on their own lines of argument, and thus it would seem that the Board of Freeholders are between the devil and the deep sea.

As Citizen and Capitalist.

John Kean is a shrewd business man if he is anything, but that trait does not of necessity mean that in his remonstrance in driving a bargain with the people in acquiring public franchises or using his wealth for the advantage of the community in which he lives. At least that bright writer who conducts the "Freeholder" column in the New York Press doesn't think so. Here is what he says of Mr. Kean as a citizen and a capitalist:

Union county is playing in great luck to have John Kean as a citizen. Offering a fortune for a trolley franchise is not the first specimen of Mr. Kean's generosity toward his native heath. When he took the Elizabeth lands into a 2 per cent. urban other capitalists wanted more, he exhibited his practical goodwill and helped to place the old town on her feet again.

Fiery Emma at Summit.

The weavers in the silk factory at Summit, who are dissatisfied with the treatment of a couple of their coworkers, and are becoming agitated in a way that threatens trouble for the proprietors of the mills, have resorted to the poorest plan that we know of to have the matter adjusted amicably and in their favor. That is by the invitation of the notorious Emma Goldman to address them. The anarchistic harangue which the fiery Emma is capable of delivering bodes no good to laborers who are inclined to be dissatisfied with their present conditions.

What Fame Can Do.

Lieut. Hobson has secured everything in the way of fame. Having won the admiration of the wide world for his heroism in the sinking of the Merrimac, he has lately been kissed, the smack of which was heard at least half way around the world, and now, to cap the climax, we have the chance to drink a foaming glass of soda water known as "Hobson's Kiss." Indeed, fame brings with it many tribulations.

Not For Rent Receipts.

Receipts for money paid for rent which were supposed to require a 25-cent revenue stamp, it is now stated will not require stamping. This matter has caused considerable anxiety.

The New Trolley Franchise.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company has finally found a successful route for its eastern extension. Since it acquired considerable more than the number of feet of right of way needed along the proposed route, and the protests were neither aggressive nor so very well founded, the Common Council viewed the interests of the city in a good light when it granted the franchise and advised the ordinance so that the improvement can be made as early as possible.

But in the light of recent developments in extension of trolley systems in this section the granting of this franchise takes on a new phase which heretofore has been shrouded in uncertainty. The offer of $250,000 by John Kean for the franchise between Elizabeth and Plainfield certainly makes an entering wedge for the question "Is not the franchise granted last night worth not much, in proportion, to the Plainfield Street Railway Company as the franchise across the county is regarded by the shrewd business intellect of John Kean?" We think it is.

But perhaps in view of the fact that these public transit franchises in this section have only lately come to be regarded as something more valuable than to be given away and the public in official minds have not yet thoroughly appreciated the new principle, it would not be fair to criticise the Council for not having secured a liberal cash bonus for the franchise.

We have not yet seen the ordinance granting the rights to the trolley company, but a knowledge of the makeup of the street committee, which has the matter in charge, suggests that the city has not been entirely left out in the cold in the matter of gaining advantage by the deal.

The Glory of the Naval Reserves.

The State Legislature has always been parsimonious in providing for the Naval Reserve, as it has generally considered the Jackies as sort a side show to the land forces. But the irony of war has shown the difference in the two forces to have been falsely viewed by the legislators.

Though the Jersey guardsmen were ready and anxious to go to the front in Cuba they have been kept back until now there seems a strong likelihood that the only taste of war which they will get is that to be found in the irksome and disagreeable duties abounding in camp. Not so with the Naval Reserve, however. They were put aboard of an auxiliary cruiser which has been ploughing through the waters that wash the shores of Cuba, here and there experiencing incidents of actual warfare though not having been under direct fire from the enemy. Yet they have met a boat load of Spanish soldiers and gathered them in as cleverly as if the navy had been their field of effort for years.

The Badger boys are entitled to the credit of bringing the only real glory to New Jersey during the war. Considering this it is gratifying to know that there are a number of Plainfield boys on the vessel.

Two Interesting Facts.

A State insurance inspector recently visited this city to inspect the properties that are mortgaged in the Mutual Life Insurance Company. He says that in all his official work he has never before come across properties which averaged as well in actual value as those in Plainfield.

Usually, he finds it necessary to go over every property thoroughly to determine if it is worth the value of the mortgage, but here he was relieved of that irksome duty. A casual sight told him that they were all worth more than the face value of the mortgage.

The inspector's trip, however, disclosed some rather surprising facts among men who are supposed to be very wealthy. Some of houses owned and occupied by Plainfielders who maintain fine establishments, with plenty of horses, servants and other details of luxurious living, are blanketed with heavy mortgages.

The Great Asiatic Problem.

The fact is curiously interesting that the oldest and most densely populated empire in the world, which is also highly civilized in its way, is becoming as much of a cockpit for the rival aggressions of Europe as if it were a region occupied by savages. Whatever else may be said of China, the gorgeous Cathay of Marco Polo, she is the inheritrix of an ancient and once amazing culture. That she has remained petrified in that culture, indifferent to the strides of the rest of humanity, makes her now the victim of the powers, which have long beaten at her doors and now burst them in. At least five centuries behind every other great nation in all the arts and sciences which constitute power, she may be compared to a whale stranded on the beach. Her future now promises to be just what half a dozen powerful and ambitious governments hungry for extension of commerce and influence permit it to be. The grip they already have will be relentlessly extended at every opening and under every pretense.

That aspect of the problem which is found in the question, "What will become of China?" is not more interesting, however, than speculation as to what the apple of discord will evolve in the mind to quarrels among the powers of the west. The old eastern question which kept European civilization wrangling and on the perpetual verge of war centered in Turkey and the Danubian principalities. The new eastern question, even more rife with explosive possibilities, has traveled 5,000 miles eastward. We can scarcely believe that the lions snarling over this immeasurably tempting prey will long keep their powerful fangs from each other. No division of spheres of influence, mapped out as in Africa, will make them contented any more than it has done on the dark continent. History will inevitably repeat itself. England's extraordinary naval estimate for the next five years indicates her lucid forecast of the forthcoming. Is America to be drawn into the terrific armed scramble which is to come or later will come? Should we become an oriental power as owner of the Philippines it will make our interest in the struggle directly personal. However tempting the thought of extending our possessions to the remote eastern seas, the imminent risk of entanglement in that mighty world quarrel beginning to mutter is one to be very seriously considered.

Commercial Battle.

The United States are not looking for any open rupture with Germany. We do not anticipate the mustering of serried battalions and of battleships to meet those of the kaiser in armed conflict, but Germany has none the less been waging a species of war on us which is mischievous and persistent. This war, a commercial one, has been in operation for a good while in spite of all our reasonable protests. The prohibition of our food products on the most frivolous pretexts and in open face of the true facts of official inspection would be ludicrous if the financial side were less momentous. France's edicts against American pork and dressed beef were revoked several years ago, but kaiserland has obeyed the agrarian demands, wherein the junkers go hand in hand with the peasants, and more enlightened opinion makes but little headway against the tide. Our own government has at last lost patience and now proposes retaliation based on similar pretexts. Official chemists in Germany persist that American food products threaten public health and interest. Our agricultural department chemists are now busy analyzing the paints and colors on German toys, as there is an impression that there is poison in these compounds. If it is proved that German toys are liable to injure children from such a reason, our government will find one Roland for the Tentonic Oliver by prohibiting German toys, and thereby give great joy to American manufacturers. The American prohibition will affect very large class in Germany, and Berlin will hear trumpet blasts from Nuremberg and other manufacturing cities. Similar investigations may be expected to follow in good time if the first hint is not taken.

Po Mun, the editor of Mun Kee, a Chinese paper of San Francisco, is credited with having perpetrated a "beat" on all other newspapers in having published the first cable news of the battle of Manila. It was only ten words long and sent as a piece of guesswork from Hongkong by another Chinaman, but it smote the nail square on the head. Now Po Mun has retired on his laurels and will print no more cable news.

Professor Charles Eliot Norton, the pro-Spanish apostle, has written a letter of bitter reproach for his severe castigation to Senator Hoar. The senator's vigorous reply ended with a model of satiric apology: "I should be sorry to do you any injustice. Indeed it is not in anybody's power to do you injustice but your own." This is a neat argumentum ad hominem.

"All here," wrote a correspondent of the London Times from Havana, a few weeks ago, "eagerly desire to see an American force land on the Cuban coast and very anxious for a fair fight with the troops of Spain." Well, this desire of the Spanish eyes has been satisfied in full now.

ROBBED THE RETREAT.

JAMES LOUGHLIN'S ENTERPRISE ATTRACTS SNEAK THIEVES.

Theft Was Committed Sometime During Monday—Borough Police Notified and Try to Find Out the Depredators.

Sometime during Monday thieves looted the Mountainside Park Grove retreat and carried away everything of any value, consisting of soft drinks, a rifle, tables, chairs, tubs, etc. The theft was not discovered until late in the afternoon when Manager James Loughlin and some friends went to the place.

The retreat is located in North Plainfield township not far from the trolley line, but its position is such that depredations can be committed without the knowledge of anyone. Mr. Loughlin has no idea as to who paid a visit to the retreat, and he has little hope of recovering his lost articles.

It is not so much the value of the articles taken that Mr. Loughlin objects to, but they were just what he needed for the place, and he will now have to secure new furnishings. The matter has been placed in the hands of the police and an effort will be made to discover who the thieves are.

Life on Home Boat.

Miss Ethel Green, of Mercer avenue, and Meredith Dryden, of Watchung avenue, returned Saturday afternoon after spending two weeks on a house boat on the Chesapeake river. They attended a house party given by friends and cruised along the shores of the Chesapeake. It was delightfully cool there and they had a very enjoyable trip.

The Consents Are All Right

The consents obtained by the Plainfield Street Railway for the right of way through Richmond street, which were filed at the meeting of the City Council Monday evening, were attested correct by H. C. Van Emburgh, who has examined each consent and found that they are all right.

Cut by a Scythe.

The little son of Walter Freeman, of First place, was badly cut with a scythe Monday afternoon. The man employed to cut the lawn had just completed his work and was dragging away the scythe while the lad was playing about it. The wounds, while serious, are not dangerous.

RICHTER WINNER IN TWO EVENTS.

Carried Off Honors at Kenyon's Race Meet Saturday.

FOUR EVENTS WERE HELD.

SIMS, THE COLORED RIDER, MADE A GOOD SHOWING.

The Burkes Carried Off Coveted Prizes in Two-Mile Handicap — Westerfield Disqualified in Last Race—Bunch Finished Just Inside the Time Limit—Big Crowd Present—No Accidents.

Eugene Richter, the winner of Lister's last road race, carried off the honors in G. H. Kenyon's race meet, held at Maltby's track Saturday afternoon. He won the principal events of the afternoon, and might have won another but for a mistake on his part regarding the number of laps.

There was an audience numbering several hundred people who gathered to see the races. It was very decided evidence that the interest in bicycle racing is not dead by any means. Both sexes were well represented and everybody yelled and cheered at the finish as at any crack meet. The events were closely contested, and the rivalry among the contestants was sufficient to make the interest in the events intense. A dispute and a protest in the last race was the only unpleasant feature to mar the success of the day.

The first event was a one-mile open for boys under sixteen years. There were five starters and they plugged away from the very start in most delightful fashion. Of course, they did not make any startling time, but they rode hard, and that was what the crowd wanted to see. Ed Duck made a pretty little sprint and won by two lengths, while inches separated Arthur Chapman and Harry Condit. Chapman won second and Condit third. Joe Harkins fourth and Paul Otto fifth. The time was 3:04 1-5.

Then came a one-mile open with five starters. Unusual interest was shown, for it was the first meeting in a race of Peter Sims and Richter. Richter took the pace and held it most of the way as none of the other riders would come up and relieve him. As they neared the last turn, one of the Burkes went out. Then Sims jumped with Richter close behind. On the turn the white rider passed Sims and won by a length with Sims second, Charles Westerfield third, M. Burke fourth and Joseph Burke fifth. The time was 2:45.

There were nine starters in the two-mile handicap, with Richter, Sims, M. Burke, Charles Dodd and J. Burke at scratch. The race was well ridden and there was no loafing. The limit men set a hot pace to keep away from the scratch bunch, and the latter chased them in great shape. It was not until riding almost a mile and a half that the riders were bunched.

Richter misunderstood the signal for the last lap and spurted on the wrong lap. That left him out of the race. Joseph Burke won in a pretty finish, with his brother, M. Burke, close second, and Westerfield, 125 yards, third. Charles Dodd beaten by Sims on the spurt and Richter finished behind them. The time was 2:57 2-5.

None of the riders would take their handicaps in the five-mile handicap, but all seven gathered at scratch. To prevent a regular loafing match Mr. Kenyon put a time limit of 15 minutes on the event. Nobody would pace for the first few laps and the pace dragged on slower and slower until the officials told the riders that they would far exceed the time limit if they did not wake up, then Richter, Sims and the Burkes jumped in and alternated the pace. The Dodd brothers also assisted. Westerfield would not pace.

The last few laps were taken at a rattling pace, but still the bunch hung well together. On the far side of the last lap they began to string out. Richter came right to the front at once with Sims and William Dodd close behind. They came down the finish in great shape with Richter forged ahead and won by nearly a length. It came near being a dead heat between Dodd and Sims, but the judges decided that Dodd crossed the line first. Westerfield finished fourth. The time was 14:56 3-5

Charles Dodd immediately entered a protest against Westerfield, claiming that Westerfield pushed him as they were coming down the stretch together. One of the other riders saw it as did three small boys in the crowd. Westerfield vigorously denied it. The judges allowed the protest and disqualified Westerfield. There was much rivalry between Westerfield and Dodd.

Lindley M. Hillman acted as starter. The judges were Dr. Luckey, Chauncey M. Stout, Charles B. Morse and Edgar I. Serrell. The timers were Charles E. Vail, J. H. Green, Dr. Pocock, and R. P. McCullough.

At the conclusion of the races it was decided to settle the dispute between Dodd and Westerfield by allowing them to ride a lap together. Westerfield happened to be first and tried to get out of it. Dodd would not take the lead and they rode slower and slower until Westerfield turned to one side. Then Dodd passed him in a rush and secured a big lead. Westerfield never caught him until they reached the last turn and then Dodd ran away from him. The fourth prize for the five-mile race was then given to Dodd.

CAR STRUCK A WAGON.

Horse's Shoulder Dislocated, but Occupants of Carriage Uninjured.

A trolley accident occurred last Saturday evening on West Front street in the neighborhood of the eight row, when a car collided with a wagon in which Mrs. Earl and her daughter, Miss Gypsy Earl, together with the coachman, were seated. The wagon was on the tracks and the driver says that he did not hear the motorman ring his bell.

The wheels of the wagon were spread apart, and the horse dislocated a shoulder. Fortunately, the occupants of the wagon were not injured. The Earls live at Dunellen and they were on their way home. The accident happened about 9:15. It is said that the trolley company will settle all damages satisfactorily.

To Attend the Convention.

It is the intention of Mrs. W. S. Lowry, president of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church, to induce as many members of her society to attend the State convention in Asbury Park this fall as possible. It is probably that a large number will go, as the entire cost of the trip will be only $5.50, including board.

Councilman Moffett Presided.

President John T. Baker of the City Council, was not present at the meeting last Monday and Councilman Moffett filled the position pro tem with ability and credit. Mr. Buckle was the only other member absent, but as there was more than a quorum present there was no difficulty in considering the business of the evening.

Frank Fulton Writes Home.

Druggist J. H. Legg has received a letter from Frank Fulton, who is on board the Badger off Havana harbor, the first he has received for three weeks. Fulton tells of blockading life and describes it in all its phases, and speaks particularly of the joy at the arrival of the boxes from home gives the boys.

CENTRAL MEN SAY THAT TRAINS ARE TOO HEAVY

Railroad Employes Talk Over Their Differences.

NO LIKELIHOOD OF STRIKE.

DISPUTED MATTER WILL BE ADJUSTED SATISFACTORY TO ALL.

Past Grand-Master Wilson, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Discusses the Matter and Does Not Apprehend Any Serious Trouble—What Legislation is Wanted for Laboring Men.

Another meeting of the New Jersey Central Railroad men was held at Ashley Sunday night, and, after a public entertainment, the members of the five orders met in secret session. The members will say little as to what was done, beyond the fact that the object of the meeting was to talk over the differences that now exist between the Central and its employes, and to arrange matters for the acceptance of a plan to support men for the Legislature and Congress who will legislate in favor of the laboring men.

C. H. Wilson, Past Grand-Master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and chairman of the general grievance committee, expressed himself as feeling confident that the differences between the Central Railroad Company and the railroad men would soon be adjusted in a manner satisfactory to all concerned. Referring to the troubles now existing, he said: "Of course we do not wish to dictate to the company just how many cars it shall put on a train, but we do say if the company wants big trains hauled it should put enough men on to protect the employes. Trains have been leaving Penobscot for tidewater with 22 cars, with an aggregate weight of 2,100 tons. With a train of this kind the employe must assume too much responsibility, and, besides, it makes his occupation more hazardous. I understand the company has in the last few days reduced the weight of these trains to 2,000 tons, but this is still too much for the crew. There should be a brakeman for every twenty-five cars."

In answer to a question as to what the present policy and object of the organization which he represent is, he said: "There are three bills which we want passed: First, to create railroad commissioners, the injury bill, and limiting a certain number of cars for each train. The injury bill provides that in the event an employe is hurt while in the service and should suffer the loss of a limb he shall receive a monthly salary of $50. We also want ten hours to constitute a day's work."

WANT A STREET MACADAMIZED.

West Fourth Street Residents Prepared to Petition the Council.

Residents and property-holders on West Fourth street, between New and Liberty streets, are circulating a petition, which will be presented to the Common Council, asking that that portion of the street be macadamized. Jeremiah VanWinkle is obtaining signatures, and has already secured the names of all except six property-holders. The petition was submitted to the Street Commissioner last month, but as there were only a majority of the owners' names signed to it, the Commissioner suggested that the others be asked to sign, thus making the petition unanimous and entitled to more consideration.

Biggest Meeting Yet.

Sunday afternoon's meeting for young men, at the Y. M. C. A., was the largest meeting of its kind held in the Y. M. C. A. since those services were instituted. According to actual count there were 243 present. This is considered a very good attendance, especially as it occurred in the month of August, the worst month in the whole year for churches and religious organizations.

Speakers at the Y. M. C. A.

Next Sunday afternoon Rev. Dr. Carlos Martyn, of New York, who is occupying the pulpit in the Trinity Reformed church during the summer, will address the young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. The following Sunday Robert E. Speer will speak.

SPANISH UNIFORM HERE

DR. SIMPSON SENDS HOME SEVERAL INTERESTING RELICS.

A Token of the Appreciation Presented by a Spanish Captain—A Number of Other Interesting Relics on Exhibition.

It brings the war much nearer home when various articles from the battlefield arrive here. A package from Dr. M. S. Simpson, surgeon of the U. S. S. Badger, was received by Druggist T. S. Armstrong Tuesday, containing a Spanish uniform, and a number of other articles of interest.

The uniform is one of a captain of infantry in the "Regimente de Alfonso XIII," who was a patient of Dr. Simpson, being captured by the Americans on that ship after he was shot. The uniform, which is now to be seen in the window of Armstrong's Pharmacy, is composed of a blue coat, resplendent with brass buttons and lots of braid, and red trousers with blue stripe. It is of cloth, the heaviest uniform in the Spanish army. It was presented to Dr. Simpson by its owner who felt very grateful to the doctor for his care and treatment. The Spaniard was shot right through the body with a Remington ball.

The Doctor also sent the answering pennant of the International signal code, captured on the Spanish brig, "Safe," of which Dr. Simpson was one of the boarding officers.

The package included a piece of Spanish hardtack, labeled "La-Canonera." It was of the best quality like that furnished the officers. The men get a very inferior article. It has not a particularly inviting appearance however. There was also a Mauser cartridge, the kind used by the Spaniards, also some black beans, "faijoles," which form the main food of the Spanish and Cuban people.

These curios are now to be seen in the window of Armstrong's Pharmacy.

LAWYER TALKED FIVE HOURS.

Exhaustive Appeal that Lawyer Swackhamer Made in a Divorce Case.

The argument in the Corey divorce suit before Advisory Master Washington B. Williams in Vice-Chancellor Stevens' chambers in Newark, was continued Saturday, but was still not finished. The argument will be continued next Saturday.

A week ago Saturday Lawyer Wm. Newcorn opened the argument for the petitioner, Henry B. Corey, and last Saturday S. S. Swackhamer summed up the case for the defendant. Mr. Swackhamer began his argument at 9:30 o'clock in the morning, and with a short intermission at lunch time, talked continuously until 3 o'clock.

Those who heard Mr. Swackhamer's speech were emphatic in their praise of his powers of oratory. He referred to his notes but seldom.

Ex-Judge W. R. Codington followed Mr. Swackhamer, and in a few concise sentences completed the testimony in one of the most able speeches, it is said, that was ever delivered before the Master.

Lawyer William Newcorn started his argument and spoke for over three hours. He will continue his argument Saturday.

Feared the Policeman.

Last Sunday afternoon, Mr. Angleman, of West Front street, found a lot of young loafers congregated back of his house near the brook and they were using indecent language. He asked them to desist and to move, but they refused. Finally, Mr. Angleman was obliged to call the services of Patrolman Flanagan. When the latter arrived the boys were missing. Mr. Angleman is determined to break up the daily occurrence.

Wheelmen Were Mixed-up.

Before the race meet at Maltby's track Saturday afternoon, there were a number of riders out on the track. Owing to some careless riding of the men in front of the bunch, there was a collision on the far-stretch and Lindley M. Hillman, of Sherman avenue, was thrown heavily from his wheel. He struck on his head, but was not seriously injured.

A Day on the Yacht.

Richard P. Simpson, Carroll L. Runyon, Albert Pinch, Roy T. Phillips and Carl L. Walz, of this city, rode to Porth Amboy on their wheels Saturday and spent the day in a yacht there sailing about Raritan Bay. They met with sundry adventures that were sufficiently exciting to satisfy them.

THE BIG FAIR.

Inter-State Exhibition Will be Opened September 20th.

Trenton, August 10.—In a few days more the big fair will again be with us, and the management guarantees that this, its eleventh annual exhibition, will be one that cannot fail to be attractive to exhibitors and satisfactory to a patronage educated to expect more from the great Inter-State than from any other fair. It will open September 20th and close September 30th. The Trenton fair has come to be looked upon all over the country as the greatest carnival in the Eastern portion of the United States. It has been, without any question, a great institution. One of the secrets of its greatness is its up-to-dateness. Every year something entirely new is introduced, and what were features last year are brought right up-to date for this.

While the fair is, of course, intended as a comprehensive exposition of everything pertaining to the farm and the farmer, there is no end of high class special attractions in the way of sporting events and entertainment—vaudeville and otherwise, during the week.

Death of a Faithful Servant.

Miss Kate A. Walsh, aged 36 years, died Tuesday afternoon at the home of her sister, Mrs. Samuel J. Robinson, 744 West Third street, after an illness lasting eight weeks. When Miss Walsh was taken ill she was in the employ of Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred MacDonald, of East Front street, as a domestic. She had been with this family for sixteen years, and was employed by them in the day they commenced housekeeping. They feel deeply grieved over the death of such a faithful servant and friend. The funeral service will be held this morning from St. Mary's church at 8 o'clock and friends and relatives are respectfully invited. The interment will be at Elizabeth.

Chief Doane Helped the Council.

At the solicitation of the fire and building committee of the City Council, Building Inspector Doane was present last Monday at the meeting and was given the courtesy of floor to assist in explaining some of the amendments made to the building ordinance by the committee.

A STRANGE WOMAN.

BY PAUL PHODEN.

I had sold my mill, and was on my way home. It was evening when I reached Granville, where I took the stage. An old woman was my sole companion. She appeared to be one who had seen much trouble in life, and at the present time she seemed weighed down by some special care.

She was rather a large woman somewhat bent, and quite unwieldly in her movements. She was evidently used to hard work, for when I took her arm to help her in, although it was under her shawl, I could feel the strength of one well used to the labor of house and farm, so common with women of that region. Her dress was shabby, and her face was covered by a black veil, which was disturbed but once to my knowledge, and that was when I had been looking out into the darkness, and saw it drop when I turned back my head. She was very hoarse, and any attempt to respond to some passing remark from me would set her into a violent fit of coughing. Weighed down by her troubles as she was, I saw that she should be left to herself, and so I said but little.

The country through which we were riding was a dreary one, and pictures of road-agents, and the cleaning out of my five thousand dollars, not to speak of a worse fate than robbery, would occasionally come up to my imagination. I wasn't nervous, but the consciousness of the tempting bait I carried with me was sufficient to awaken certain apprehensions in spite of myself.

Three months before this, a stage had been stopped some twenty miles from here, and one of the passengers who had attempted resistance was shot. Why might not this one be the next to take its turn?

I could but wish that a vigorous man was sitting in the seat opposite in place of that helpless old woman. As far as I could learn, she was to stop at a crossing two miles this side of my destination, where her son was to take her home in his wagon. I should have four miles of the lonely road, though, to tell the truth, I felt more lonely with such company as this than if I had been by myself.

Finally she appeared to fall into a doze, her bowed head and swaying body indicating a long flight into dreamland. She had been watching at the bedside of a consumptive daughter, and now must go home to tend a grand child that was suddenly stricken down with diphtheria.

"You need your sleep, my good soul," I thought. "We know not who have the greatest trials in life. Mine is at present an imagined evil, yours is in the real."

As the stage rumbled over the uneven road in the gloom of that wild and swampy country, the spectral pines retreated endlessly to the rear, revealing an occasional star appearing in the north, that seemed to gaze in admonitory silence upon me.

My eyes had got so used to the growing darkness that I could make out objects near me with some distinctness. At one time I noticed that the old woman was uneasy in her sleep; the action of her hands indicated something exciting. They were under her shawl, but the movement was very perceptible. She had been looking out the window, and I observed this uneasiness when I turned my glance inside the stage.

I was gazing curiously on the shabby figure when a suspicion darted through my mind that sent the blood to my heart. I had read of such things, and why was this not—but—pshaw! my money was simply a magician conjuring up visions and spectres of the night.

The stage slackened up, and then it stopped. The slumberer started and awoke. For an instant the entire figure seemed to change in its aspect. Every line of the cumbrous body was full of vigor that ill-compared with the air of decrepitude which had previously characterized it.

I was interrupted in my observations by the entrance of a fresh passenger, whose deep, heavy voice had already indicated a powerful physique. He was a formidable looking customer. His great height compelled him to stoop considerably as he entered, and when he took his seat by the side of the old woman, the stage appeared to settle on his side.

I could make out but little in the gloom, but this man's face was sufficiently distinct to show a resolute character, fearless and ready in an emergency. He had an aggressive air, and the reserve of a man who was not to be made free with. He peered into my face from under his heavy brows, and then glanced at the sleeper by his side.

I couldn't quite analyze my feelings when I found this third passenger thus suddenly added to me. I was a man not unused to violence was supposed. As a bravado or the leader of a vigilance committee he could readily act his part. Which role would he incline to? There were still several miles to ride, and I was interested.

I did not like the way he had of turning his eyes on that old woman. I couldn't make out in the dark just their expression. What struck me as being rather singular was her utter stillness after the ruffian-like start she had given. She couldn't have fallen again into a sleep as quick as that. I confess to a creepy sensation as I viewed the pair opposite me.

"This is a dreary ride for any one who has reason to wish his journey over," said the new passenger, at last, in his bass voice.

What did he mean? Did he know about my money? Here was a deepening of the mystery. It certainly was becoming a dreary ride to me. I controlled myself, and pointing to the woman, said,—

"One like her might well call it so."

"How's that?"

"Sickness at her home—perhaps death!"

"Ah!" and he turned a look upon the unconscious subject of our remarks, the meaning of which I could hardly fathom.

The northern lights were now shooting up in the heavens, reflecting a dim light in the stage.

A vision of my cheery home rose to my mind. Mother and children were pictured in that pleasant sitting-room, talking perhaps of father and his return.

Should I ever see those dear ones again? What if—But my meditations were interrupted by the heavy voice of the passenger.

"Returning home, I take it, sir?"

"I am."

"You consider this a safe road, do you not?"

"Never heard of any trouble here." It's going on around us, though. Heard of the pull last night?"

"The pull?"

"The robbery on the Hanson road, I mean."

"Robbery!" I gasped. "I did not hear of it."

"Oh, yes; it's getting pretty near."

"Nothing worse, I hope."

"Murder!" and the speaker's voice sank to a still deeper tone.

The old woman started in the corner, as if disturbed in her dreams.

He glanced meaningly at her, and then directing his thumb that way, he said,—

"An uncommon sleeper."

"Tired out."

"We'll not disturb her."

"The murderer has a devilish name," he said, after a brief silence.

"Which?"

"The last robber—no, not the last, exactly, for the robber and murderer of all is one man."

The stage entered a gully thickly shaded with trees, and when the passenger said this in his abysmal voice, my scalp crept over my head. It was so dark that not even his herculean form could be seen.

"What was the name?" I asked, in a hush.

"Left-handed Dick."

The stage went very slowly at this point, and my ear caught a movement as if the sleeper was again uneasy, and was adjusting her shawl.

"Why that?"

"He lost his right hand in a fight, and he is a demon with his left."

"I'd rather tackle a dozen than a left-hander."

"This man is equal to a dozen. I know he has murdered as many as that."

The impression was gaining on me that the man before me was honest. He struck me, moreover, as having a purpose here in this stage known only to himself, but which I began to suspect. He acted like one that had serious business in hand.

"Is there no way of trapping the fiend? I think if he could come into your grip, sir, he would fetch up pretty quick."

"Size doesn't always tell," he returned. This fellow is like a madman. He is neither afraid nor shot."

"How does he keep it up?"

"He's cunning as the devil. He goes disguised."

"How!" I exclaimed. "Disguised. But his handless arm—"

"Why, that's easily fixed. If he's a man he has it in his pocket—"

"If he's a man! How else does he go?"

The stage emerged into the open country. The aurora was at its height, and threw its pale light into the stage. The passenger sleeping woman was suddenly twitched at the hands, and I noticed that the old black veil was somewhat awry. I also noticed that her neighbor had changed his position.

"My good woman, I hope your sleep has rested you," I slowly uttered, sharply eyeing her shawl in the gloom.

Her answer was a violent fit of coughing.

The stage was moving rapidly, and it rocked us to and fro. The coughing ceased, and a startling transformation followed.

By an instantaneous movement the shawl and skirt, the veil and bonnet were thrown aside, and a man was revealed, in right arm a stump, in his left a long-bladed knife.

As I pronounced this dreaded name, I threw myself into a position of defense. I was not the object of attack, however. Like a flash of light the villain struck at the breast of the man he feared. As the deadly knife descended, the arm was caught in a human vise. With fearful oaths he struggled to free himself, but the giant was on the alert, and bore down on the assassin with all his weight and power.

The outlaw was not to be easily overcome. He was truly a madman in spirit and strength. I now took part in the struggle, and the fellow was soon to be secured. His arms were pinioned behind him, and the driver, who had stopped his horses, was directed to move on.

The road-agent was duly disposed of by his captor, who proved to be the most dangerous and formidable sheriff in that part of the country.

I reached my home in good spirits, and my arrival was a glad surprise. I said nothing of my adventure till the next day. You may well imagine that there was thanksgiving in that house.

AN INFORMAL PRAYER.

"The proper way for a man to pray,"
Said Deacon Lemuel Keys,
"And the only proper attitude,
Is down upon his knees."
"Nor; I should say I love to pray,"
Said Rev. Dr. Wise,
"Is standing straight, with outstretched arms
And rapt and upturned eyes."

"Oh, no, no, no!" said Elder Sloan
"Such posture is too proud.
A man should pray with eyes fast closed
And head contrite and bowed."
"It seems to me his hands should be
Austerely clasped in front,
With both thumbs pointed toward the ground,"
Said Rev. Dr. Hunt.

"Las' year I fell in Hedgkin's well
Head first," said Cyrus Brown,
"With both my heels a-stickin' up,
An' my head a-hangin' down,
An' I made a prayer right then and there—
Best prayer I ever said—
The prayin'est prayer I ever prayed,
A-standin' on my head."

A DINNER DIALOGUE.

When I entered the drawing-room Mrs. Tregunter smiled on me quite amiably.

"I want you to take down Molly," she said, graciously.

I crossed to Molly at once, but she would not look at me. I ventured to remind her of my presence.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" she remarked pensively.

"Yes, you've got to go down to dinner with me."

She heaved a sigh.

"Is that quite polite?" I asked reproachfully.

She flashed a glance at me.

"Life is a continual pairing," she observed, standing up and shaking her draperies into becoming folds; "and so seldom with the right man."

"That is the comedy of life," I remarked.

"And what is the tragedy?"

"Having no partner at all."

I indicated Miss Allemand, the governess, who was following alone.

"Poor dear!" said Mollie. "I will relinquish you to her."

But I declined firmly.

"I am afraid of governesses," I said explanitorily. "It was a governess who wrecked my young life."

"What did she do?" asked Molly, seriously.

"She declined to elope with me." Molly withdrew her arm.

"I fear you are a dreadful person."

"I was only fourteen," I put in, hastily.

We had taken our places at the table. I like a white shoulder, but white shoulder for two courses is too much.

"Is it quite fair to devote yourself solely to Thomas!" I ventured to ask.

"He says such clever things."

She flung the words beamingly over her sleeve.

"A woman to insinuate——" I began crossly.

"Nothing at all."

"I don't think Miss Allemand has brought you up at all nicely."

"What do you mean!" she said, turning to me suddenly with a very severe face.

"Oh, nothing at all."

"You are very stupid."

"That isn't the way to speak to your ma's guests."

She scrutinized me.

"I don't see what that girl could see in you," she murmured.

"What girl?" I queried eagerly.

She shook her head.

"I ought not to have said that."

"But you did say it! And I insist on hearing to whom you referred."

She pouted.

"Will you promise not to tell?" she replied, after a little pause, her face suddenly lighting up with a roguish smile.

"I promise."

I watched the dimple growing on her cheek. She gave a little burst of laughter.

"Molly, you know I love you."

"Hush!" she whispered.

"Won't you Molly—Oh, Molly, you must."

She turned and smiled.

"What a silly boy it is!"

"I consider we are engaged."

By great luck I caught one of her hands beneath the tablecloth.

"That is signal. I must go," said Molly, hastily.

"Say just one word," I urged.

"Do you know the little conservatory?" she murmured, pushing back her chair.

I opened the door. As she went out I caught her eye; she blushed divinely.

Horse That Wears Specs.

Among the wonders of Surrey, which is a suburb of Londontown, is a horse that wears spectacles, says an exchange. He wears them for a purpose, too, for the sight is so dim that he can't see a yard in front of his nose unless he has on his "specs." Queer sight, a horse with nose glasses. But Toby—that's what they christened him —takes his affliction and his spectacles as a very matter of fact thing, and goes about his daily duties calmly. He has suffered from myopia for two years. Veterinary surgeons recommended some kind of glasses. Toby got them and wears them. He owns the unique distinction of being the only four-footed animal in the world equipped with spectacles.

She laughed again. It was strange that a weak woman should rejoice in a strong man's agony.

"Of course I don't care for her," I said boldly, trying to make a stand.

Molly pursed her lips.

"Of course I don't believe that."

"But you must believe it," I cried desperately. "I only flirted a little with her because——"

"Because?"

"Well, you weren't there, you know."

"Oh, indeed!" She looked at me severely. You mean you would have flirted with me instead if I had been there?"

"Not flirted," I said, weakly.

"What do you mean?"

"If you had been there, I wouldn't have looked at her."

"Oh, indeed," repeated Molly.

"It was only in fun. She knew it was only in fun."

The dimple began to dawn again.

"Oh, no, she doesn't," she responded, gaily. "She thinks you are in earnest."

"Nonsense," I cried.

"She told me so. She told me you had actually proposed."

"You are teasing me," I said crossly.

"Am I indeed? Wait and see."

"It can't be true. Say it isn't true!"

She gave another little burst of laughter.

"Of course you don't mind," I said, bitterly; "though it was all your fault."

"My fault!" cried Molly. "Well, of all the——"

"Why weren't you at the regatta, then?" I asked. "You see what you have done."

"I take no responsibility," said Mollie hotly. "Good gracious; if I had to be responsible to you!"

"I wish you would," I said, earnestly.

"It's no use talking," said Molly. "You must face the music."

"Why didn't you tell her I was engaged?"

"What, another of them!" cried Molly, looking serious.

"You know what I mean. From the way you speak, one might imagine I was a flirt."

"Um—yes," murmured Molly.

The truth is there wasn't a decent looking girl there except——"

"Except Mary," echoed Molly sarcastically.

"Well, she isn't bad looking in the moonlight."

Molly turned her head away a trifle disdainfully.

"You must save me from her," I said after a pause.

"How can I do that?"

"You must tell her I am already engaged."

"To whom?" asked Molly, her color rising slightly.

"To—to only girl I love."

Molly's eyes were fixed on her plate.

"Her name?" she asked in a low voice.

"Surely you can guess," I whispered.

Her color deepened.

"Please don't be absurd."

"It is the only way."

"Nonsense!"

"But I tell you it is. I won't marry her."

"Perhaps she wouldn't have you," she said with a mischievous look in her eyes.

"But you said——"

"I was only teasing you."

Really?" I cried with a sudden sense of relief.

Molly toyed with a grape.

"She came to me to say that somebody else had proposed to her and to ask my advice."

"Well?"

"I advised her to——"

"Yes?"

"Accept the other man."

"Molly, you dear girl!"

"So it won't be necessary for you to get engaged to any one else," she went on, looking down.

"Molly, you know I love you."

"Hush!" she whispered.

"Won't you Molly—Oh, Molly, you must."

She turned and smiled.

"What a silly boy it is!"

"I consider we are engaged."

By great luck I caught one of her hands beneath the tablecloth.

"That is signal. I must go," said Molly, hastily.

THE ELDER'S CHOICE.

BY SUSIE M. LORD.

Greenwood was in a flutter of excitement, and any one at all acquainted with the quiet town would not have wondered at it. The little white church, with its green blinds and tall belfry, had been closed for more than a year, except on rare occasions when old Deacon Ramsey conducted a meeting, or a few devoted members joined in holding an evening service. Since good Elder Dow had passed to his reward no one had been called to fill his place. But now the new minister, Elder Pottle, had come, and this was his first Sabbath among the people of Greenwood since his installation.

The congregation had listened devoutly to the sermon, and as the people wended their way homeward, the theme of their conversation was the ladies' sewing circle, which, as the new minister had announced, would meet the following Tuesday with Miss Abby Brown.

Miss Abby Brown, or "Aunt Nabby," as she was familiarly known, lived in an old farmhouse not far from the center of the town; many a sewing circle had been held there, a quilting party had been held there, and it was with great delight that the people anticipated a renewal of these festivities.

The following day was a busy one for Greenwood. Hurried calls, savored with bits of gossip, were in order, and kitchens steamed with the fragrance of pies and cake. The season of sewing bees was to be inaugurated in a bounteous manner, and Aunt Nabby declared that she would not share if she had to sit up all night to do it.

"But I tell you what, Aunt Nabby," remarked Sister Simpkins, who had just stepped in to rest a minute on her way to the village store, "as new minister preached a powerful sermon last Sunday. Some folks say they don't believe he can be beat in this part of the country. I thought his sermon was real smart myself, but I couldn't help noticin' how often he looked toward the Widder Hopkins' pew. It seems to me she's pretty pert for a woman of her years, and Elder Pottle ain't the first man she's set her cap for since the deacon died."

"Mercy sakes, Sister Simpkins," returned Aunt Nabby, "the widow's old enough to be the elder's mother, allowing he is a widower; and then, again, just as if he had any such thoughts, and his wife not dead a year!"

"Well, mebbe I'm mistaken, but stranger things than that have happened. I, for one, am sorry the elder's wife couldn't have lived to come to Greenwood with him."

"Sakes alive!" repeated Aunt Nabby, when his visitor had departed. "Just as if the new minister was thinking of Mis' Deacon Hopkins when he preached that beautiful sermon! I do hope Sister Simpkins won't tell it anywhere else. She always was dreadful newsy."

The eventful Tuesday dawned bright and clear, a typical New England autumn day. The early frost had tinted the leaves of the maple trees in front of the old farmhouse, and in a blaze of yellow and gold they rustled musically over the heads of merry maids and sedate matrons as they wended their way to Aunt Nabby's hospitable door.

Within the large and homelike rooms Aunt Nabby bustled about greeting her friends with a kindly smile and the injunction to "put your cake and pies right in on the pantry shelves," which they did, until the shelves fairly groaned with their weight.

Truly the sewing circle had opened auspiciously. Nimble fingers kept time with busy tongues as the women plied their needles and thread.

"I declare it does beat all, the way some people act," exclaimed Miss Simpkins, looking over her spectacles. "Making so bold to attract attention, and they old enough to know better!"

"Why, what do you mean, Sister Simpkins?" inquired Aunt Nabby in surprise.

"I mean just what I say. Are you stone blind that you don't see the way Widder Hopkins is carrying on? 'Twas only this morning that I saw her go way across the street to speak to our new minister, and all the afternoon pretty nigh gone, and she ain't been here to set a stitch yet, and she a church member."

"Oh, probably something's hindered her. I've no doubt she'll come by-and-by."

"Yes, this evenin', mebbe, about the time he gets here."

"Oh, well, Sister Simpkins, I really think it will turn out all right, and I wouldn't mind if we were you."

"Wouldn't mind!" exclaimed Miss Simpkins, indignantly. "Why, Abby Brown, I hope you don't think I care! No, indeed, not I! It's nothin's to me, too, that I'm a member of the church I can't approve of all I see." And the speaker bent to her work with so much energy that she put the needle through her finger instead of the cloth, and she turned with a snap, while poor Aunt Nabby looked distressed as she saw how vain had been her effort to soothe her troubled spirit.

Meanwhile the Widow Hopkins was in a distant part of the town, kindly ministering to poor old Mrs. Smith, who had been confined to her bed for months. Indeed, it was in her behalf that Mrs. Hopkins had crossed the street that morning to speak to the minister. And when, as he entered Mrs. Smith's cottage, bringing the medicine which she had asked him to procure, a bright smile lighted up her face.

"So very kind of you, Elder Pottle, to get this for me, and saving me such a long walk."

"Yes, Elder Pottle," faintly added poor Mrs. Smith, "beside giving Mrs. Hopkins so much extra time with me. Oh, I know the Lord will be good to her, for she has been good to me. All day she has staid here, and this the afternoon of the sewing circle, too, and I'm sure they are looking for her there this very minute."

The conversation then turned to the sewing circle, Elder Pottle remarking that he did not remember having met Miss Abby Brown, although her name sounded very familiar to him.

"I have heard my sister say," said he, "that several years ago, when she was teaching school in some New England town, she fell ill at the house of a Mrs. Brown, with whom she was boarding, and to the untiring care of Mrs. Brown and her daughter Abby, to whom she became very much attached, she owed her recovery. The friendship was continued, I think, until the death of my sister in the West, two years ago. I have been thinking that the Miss Brown who lives here may be the same Abby for whom my sister entertained such strong regard."

"Several of our village school teachers boarded with Mrs. Brown previous to her death," said Mrs. Hopkins, "and I have no doubt that 'Aunt Nabby' as we call her, is the lady to call her, is the lady of whom you speak. Are you going to her house to tea?"

"Yes, such is my intention, for I am desirous of making her acquaintance."

"Then I'll introduce you this very evening," said Mrs. Hopkins. She is one of the dearest old maids you ever saw, Elder Pottle, and I know you'll like her."

It was late in the afternoon when Mrs. Hopkins started in the direction of Aunt Nabby's, accompanied by the minister, who remarked as he bade her adieu at the village post-office,—

"I will surely call this evening, Mrs. Hopkins. Do not forget your promise."

"Oh, never fear! I'll keep my word, Elder Pottle."

Hurrying on her way she met little Elsie Jones, who greeted her with,—

"Mamma is real sick and I've just been after the doctor, Mrs. Hopkins. Won't you come in and see her just a minute?"

Taking the child's hand the kindly widow went on her errand of mercy, little thinking that the words which passed between her and Elder Pottle had been overheard by one of the "society," and were now being carried without delay to the sewing circle.

"What do you think?" breathlessly exclaimed Mrs. Roberts, as she rushed into the presence of the "sisters." "As I was coming my way here I overtook Mrs. Hopkins and our new minister, and when she left him at the post-office I heard him say he would call on her to-night, and that she must not forget her promise!"

"There! I told you so!" shrieked Miss Simpkins, while several women inquired,—

"What did she say, Mrs. Roberts?"

"Why, that she would surely keep her word, and that she'd come off up Oak Street with little Elsie Jones, and I came right over here. Should have been earlier, but I have had company all the afternoon. But I'm beat about Widow Hopkins."

"Beat about nothing! and she nigh on to fifty if she is a day!" spitefully remarked Miss Simpkins.

As darkness approached the sewing circle broke up and disbanded, and the young people and some of the male members of the society began to arrive among them the new minister.

The widow kept her word and introduced Elder Pottle to Aunt Nabby, and as soon as the opportunity came she brought them together in a corner and related the story of Elder Pottle's stay at sea told to her by him.

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed Aunt Nabby, while her face beamed with astonishment. "Is it possible that you are James Pottle? I have heard Harriet speak so many times of her brother James, who was studying for the ministry, that I know you were he. And poor, dear Harriet! I heard of her death, but tell me all about her, Elder Pottle."

When the evening was over Elder Pottle declared that Aunt Nabby Brown was really the dearest old maid he ever saw, and to show his gratitude to Mrs. Hopkins for her part in the affair, he escorted her home, which so enraged Miss Simpkins that she vowed vengeance on the widow, and made up her mind that matters had gone far enough, and that she would tell the elder the very next day just what she thought of it.

Soon it was noised that Elder Pottle called very often on Aunt Nabby—in fact, as Miss Simpkins expressed it, a great deal oftener than he did on anybody else. And indeed those were happy evenings which he spent during the winter at the old farmhouse. And when summer came, and it was announced, that there would be a wedding at Miss Abby Brown's, Miss Simpkins declared that it was simply scandalous, while Mrs. Widow Hopkins laughingly maintained that it was she who made the match.

Aunt Nabby's step grew lighter and her smile brighter, and one day, in conversation with the Widow Hopkins, she exclaimed,—

"And to think that I should meet Harriet Pottle's brother James and settle right down here in Greenwood! I declare, it does beat all!"

Jan Szczepanik's wonderful invention, the telectroscope, will, if all accounts be true, realize all that Edward Bellamy predicts about twentieth century entertainments in his latest book, "Equality." Szczepanik is a Galician schoolmaster turned inventor. The wonders of his telectroscope are to be fully brought out at the Paris exposition of 1900. Meanwhile the now distinguished Pole can look back upon the few years of his past life in which he was heroically struggling to win an education. He was fortunate enough to get into the University of Cracow, where he spent three years. Lack of funds compelled him to retire before he had finished his education. His new invention, he says, will take the place of the post, or the mail, of the future. By it any scene can be perfectly reproduced, pictorially, at any desired distance. For example, one can sit in Chicago and have a fine view of San Francisco or New York bay, with all its brilliant colors, moving and anchored ships and water sparkling in the sun. Mountains and cities, in fact, any natural or artificially arranged scene can be reproduced true to life at a distance. All that is needed is to suggest the improvement certain to come in telephonic communication and the imagination can do the rest. Herr Szczepanik says his machine will reproduce letters perfectly, thereby taking the place of the post and the telegraph. Roughly speaking, the picture is broken up into a number of points. Each point is reflected in mirrors, and the reflected ray of light is converted into an electric current, which can be transmitted any distance. At the receiving end the current is again transformed into the corresponding ray of light. This ray of light is reflected in mirrors and the reflection thrown upon a screen. Now it follows that if all the points of a picture are taken in very rapid succession the resultant reflection on the screen will be the entire picture. There are many ways of converting light rays into electric currents already known to men of science. The electric light selenium cell is used. The battery is connected by wire with an electro-magnet at the receiving end, where the currents are to be reconverted into light rays. The electro-magnet will move in sympathy with the current sent out from the transmitting apparatus, and its movements will correspond with the nature of the ray reflected. The magnet will move a prism placed in front of a strong white light—either electric or sunlight. The prism will resolve the white light into its primary colors. The primary colors spread out into a spectrum and the prism responding to the movements of the magnet will bring the required color into view. Szczepanik has made arrangements with a syndicate to exhibit the telectroscope at the Paris exposition. The syndicate will build an annex to the exposition with a 10,000 seating capacity. The admission will be 2 francs. The inventor will get 60 per cent. and his backers 40 per cent. of the gross receipts. Szczepanik will not sell the telectroscope until after the close of the exposition.—Chicago Times Herald.

WHEN WOMEN VOTED.

Privilege Extended to Unmarried Owners of Property.

Kentucky, which in 1845 made voters of widows and spinsters who were holders of property, only followed the footsteps of Maryland, which had done the same thing thirty years before. About the year 1820 unmarried women who were holders of real estate to a given amount were allowed to vote, and did very generally exercise the right of franchise.

In colonial days the States of the South generally made the ownership of property a requisite to the exercise of the right of franchise, while the New England States generally made church membership a necessary qualification of the voter. Following the idea that only property holders should vote, it was a natural step to conclude that all property holders should vote. Maryland, therefore, decided that where the ownership of property was vested in a woman who had not a husband to represent her she should be a voter.

This fact shows that Maryland, which was the first colony to guarantee religious liberty to all her people, and which took the first steps toward securing the present Constitution of the United States, was also the first to give the ballot to woman.—Boston Transcript.

START OF MAY IRWIN

TWENTY YEARS AGO SHE AND FLORA WERE REAL CHERRY SISTERS.

Penniless She Sought the Stage to Earn Her Bread — Pathetic and Laughable Incidents of the First Night at a Variety Theater.

Twenty-one years ago, when the Canadian train stopped at Rochester one bleak November night, a young woman, dressed in widow's mourning, left the car, followed by two little girls, also clad in black. The younger of the two children was a chubby little thing, and in her arms she jealously held a wretched little woolly mongrel dog. The widow asked a 'bus driver the name of a good but inexpensive hotel, and was conducted to the hostelry which he served. Being unused to hotel, or, indeed, to anything but the ways of a Canadian lumber village, she was made acquainted with a register and wrote her own name and her children's, as follows:

"Mrs. Thomas Campbell.

"Georgia Campbell,

"Ada Campbell,"

Mrs. Campbell then summoned the landlord, who was rather upset by her first sentence, which was about like this: "I have just got $100 in the world. I am a widow. My husband's death has left me a beggar. My family want me to live on their charity, but we'd rather die."

MAY IRWIN.

"Yes, we would," echoed two small voices in chorus.

"I want you to tell me," continued the mother, "how to get theatre engagements for Georgia and Addy. They can both play on the piano, and they sing like angels. Please do help us."

The children, who were about 9 and 11 years of age, were deeply conscious of their pecuniary difficulties, and evidently bent on impressing the landlord.

"Mister," said the younger and chubbier, still holding tightly to her dog, "we can sing, honest we can. We can sing 'Genevieve,' and 'Under the Daisies,' and 'Oh, Ye Tears,' and 'Wings,' and lots of other things, and we'll be real good if you'll help us."

That settled it. The landlord bade his theatrical party go to bed, and said he would give them an introductory letter to the manager of a good show the next day. And he did. Georgia and Addy Campbell proved to be good singers. They were possessed of the gift of piano playing, but they were green with a verdancy which even a variety theatre manager in the town of Rochester twenty years ago dared not make a stage feature.

The little girls were myself and my sister Flora; the widow was my mother. Our family name is Campbell; it was then, and is now. How we came to be called Irwin I will relate later. Neither of us had ever been upon the stage in our lives, except in the exhortations of the Canadian schoolhouse. We were little Cherry sisters of a type not fashionable in the '70s. After rehearsing for two weeks, while we looked forward each day to an opening night that was to make things brighter, and, while the hundred dollars was fast slipping away, and the mother striving to hide her anxiety from her little would-be wagearners, an awful thing happened.

The Rochester manager flunked. He said he didn't care to try it, but he had gotten an opening for us in Buffalo, and if we succeeded there he would give us an engagement immediately afterward. How little there was of the hundred dollars left, how broken-hearted the mother, how plucky and resolute we tried to be, words do not entirely convey.

The Rochester manager sent us on our way with much good advice and a bottle of home-made pink dye for our white stockings, which were to be made gorgeous as to color every night by a mere dip. The hotel proprietor was very moderate in his bills, and said we would come back in triumph, little thinking that he was a prophet. We found ourselves one never-to-be forgotten night in hastily constructed and hideous costumes, furnished by the wardrobe woman of a third-or second-rate variety theatre, the butt of a group of men and women, old-timers of the serio-comic school. Our dresses were so short that the hoops we had and deformed pantalets fell far below our skirts, and the pink stockings were a ghastly failure. I stood in the green room, crouched behind a screen, and watched every moment as my abbreviated skirts, in the hope, born of despair, that they would lengthen by my efforts. Georgia sat upon a chair, frankly sobbing, and the mother similarly occupied by her side.

To our surprise the Rochester manager wrote, sending a contract for mother to sign, which, when returned to that city we failed to recognize ourselves as the originals of the two little fairies in gorgeous lithograph posters with which the town was filled, telling in startling type how "the little Irwin sisters," Flora and May, would astonish Rochester by their musical skill," etc. Without taking the trouble to consult us singly or collectively, the Rochester manager had baptized us Irwin—Flora and May—and from that day to this we have been known by no other name. Even mother is Mrs. Irwin.—May Irwin, in Chicago Inter-Ocean.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The laws of health, as well as those of political economy, declare that convicts should not be kept in idleness. A few selfish men, who think they see danger to their industries from convict competition, say they should.

There was a great deal of human nature in those importers of jewsharps who, having counted that their wares should be classified as musical instruments, and not toys, were confronted by their own ples, made when toys paid a lower duty than musical instruments, that they should be rated as toys. Naturally they wished to get the benefit of the lower rate of duty in either case. But nobody with an ear for harmony would class the jewsharp as a musical instrument.

It is a pleasure to note that the hustling prosperity of the Buckeye is not directed exclusively along political lines. Ohio was the first state to report troops ready for service under the call of the president, and here were also the first volunteer troops to arrive at Chickamauga. Governor Bushnell evidently does not devote all his energies to the pleasant task of fighting Senator Hanna; he reserves an appreciable quantity for fighting Spain.

The "American Siberia" has a new chapter added, in the leasing of four hundred and thirty men, women and children prisoners at Albion, Florida, to the four contractors making the lowest bids for them. These convicts have been leased for a year, and for that time they are the actual property of the contractors, and may be subleased by them. They will work in the phosphate and turpentine camps and at road making. The condition of these camps whenever they have been investigated rivals the horrors that rend our souls when they are perpetrated by other nations in foreign lands.

An experiment made last summer on Staten Island demonstrated so well the feasibility of destroying mosquitoes by the use of oil, that it is to be repeated this year, on a scale which is expected to keep a large section of the island completely free from the pests. If this can be done in one locality, why not in another? It is a very simple and by no means a costly process. It is merely to cover the stagnant water in the affected locality with coal oil. Crude oil or waste stuff will do, the only requirement being that it shall form a scum on the surface of the pool, which will prevent the eggs of the mosquitoes, which are always laid in stagnant water, from hatching. The odor of the oil is not agreeable, but most persons would choose it in preference to the buzzing and biting of the insects; and, besides, in most cases, the water is at such a distance from dwellings that the odor would not reach them. What makes the scheme still more feasible is the fact that, unless carried by a strong breeze, mosquitoes seldom go more than a few hundred feet from the place where they were hatched, so that a merely local application of oil will give immunity to that locality, whether locations join in to make the work general or not. If Staten Island makes the plan successful on a large scale, it is probable that the New Jersey resorts will soon take it up. With its mosquitoes killed and its railroads rendered dustless by the same useful agent, New Jersey may yet become an earthly paradise.

No better time than the present, when Great Britain is showing so many signs of an amicable disposition toward this country, and when this country is likely to have at least need of its friendship, could be taken for a review of the differences between the two powers with a view to their complete adjustment. These differences are caused almost entirely by our relations with Canada. It happens that the time fixed by the Paris award for a revision of the sealing regulations expires this year, and an excellent opportunity is thus afforded for not only readjusting the very unsatisfactory condition of our relations with regard to the seals, but also a number of other matters in which our Government is at odds with that of Canada. Our government has already proposed that the subject of the seal fishery be taken up for revision, but the British government, while assenting to this proposition, suggests that the other matters in dispute be taken up and disposed of also. It is greatly to be wished that this may be done, and negotiations are now on foot looking to the convening of a joint commission to provide for adjusting everything, either by legislation or treaty, at as early a day as possible. There would probably be no difficulty in settling all the troubles in a manner satisfactory to both nations if we had only England to deal with, but Canada will exercise a great deal of influence in the matter, and she is disposed to make trouble. However, under the circumstances, the imperial government would probably be willing to exercise a salutary amount of prerogative upon Canada.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Special Correspondence.

When President King of the Merchants' Association told Mayor Van Wyck that there were 40,000,000 persons in the United States who had never seen the city of New York and had an unfavorable opinion of it, the mayor asked why. Mr. King replied that they think it is a corrupt city. Then Mayor then laid the blame on the metropolitan newspapers, which, he said, publish all the bad things that are done here, and do not afterwards take the trouble to correct the false impression created. But even Mayor Van Wyck can take no exception to the way the New York newspapers are supporting the work of the Merchants' Association. This is an organization for the purpose of advertising the city of New York in order to attract visitors and increase trade. It is doing its work well and the newspapers are giving it the most loyal support, realizing the fact that if New York is to retain its commercial supremacy, it must ever be vibrant and alert to meet competition of other and no less enterprising cities. At a time when war is making a news sensation every day, the papers here are devoting columns to this association's projects, the result of their active co-operation is the fact that Mayor Van Wyck himself has woke up to the importance of the movement, and has assured a delegation representing the association, of his lively interest in its sympathy with, its work, and of his desire to co-operate in every way he could.

Watching Cyclers.

A growing Sunday amusement in this city is to line up along the Boulevard and watch the bicyclists go by. Fashionably dressed men and women stand in groups or stroll along separately or in pairs, while hundreds of cyclists and cyclistes glide by, forming an ever-changing, particolored panorama of human beauty as nearly perfect as any. For the most part the crowd is respectful and attentive, and only gives vent to its emotions with half suppressed "Ahs!" and "Ohs!" as some particularly fantastic costume on a slight female figure flashes by. And the ancient stout gentleman, who sits erect in his gray suit, the small boy who rides with his body horizontal, and imagines he is a "scorcher," the tandem lovers, and the bronzed and alert policeman, all receive proper attention. We doubt whether Rotten Row or the Bois is ever graced with such earnest spectators and such varied dramatis personæ to look upon. And so Sunday after Sunday the crowd lines up with unfailing regularity for its bicycle matinee.

The Martins to Live in England.

The Bradley Martins, having lived so much abroad, now announce this condition permanent, and have therefore bought a magnificent house in London. With their departure we shall be missed, but not its owners. It is surprising to see the humble origin of these worshipers of foreign style. Bradley Martin is the son of an old fashioned Albany boarder, who left his wife in the daughter of an equally old fashioned lumber dealer, who, by economy and industry, became a multi-millionaire. How these old fashioned capitalists would have been shocked could they have known that their descendants' wealth would be spent in a foreign land! It now appears that the grand costume ball that the Bradley Martins gave last year at the Waldorf-Astoria was intended as a send-off present, but perhaps the country can get on without them.

600 Typewriters In One Company.

The constant increase in typewriting is one of the features of the present day, and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has 600 machines in service. Typewriters, however, are increasing in numbers far too rapidly, and it is estimated that nearly one thousand are now out of employment in this city. Stenography generally accompanies typewriting and brings increase of pay. Chauncey M. Depew and other leading business men never travel without a private secretary possessing both of these equipments, and the pay under such conditions is generally $25 per week, but ordinarily typewriters do well to earn one-half or even one-third of this rate.

Elbridge T. Gerry Didn't Sell.

Among those who did not rush at the top of their speed to sell their steam yachts to the government when the present war broke out was Elbridge T. Gerry, Commodore of the New York Yacht Club. Mr. Gerry owns the handsome and comfortable steam yacht Electra, which is one of the most satisfactory craft of her kind ever launched. She may be seen in the Hudson almost any day off the New York Club anchorage at the foot of East Twenty-sixth street. That is to say, she is there when she is not at Newport. It is hardly likely that the war alarm will prevent Mr. Gerry from making his annual summer cruise. He seldom goes further from New York than Bar Harbor, and in spite of all reports it seems highly improbable that the Spanish warships will interfere with him.

Bridge Is Operated the Bridge.

The Brooklyn Bridge Railroad will no longer be operated by the city of New York. Under a contract entered into by Bridge Commissioner Shea and the receiver of the Brooklyn Elevated railroad, and ratified by the supreme court, the Brooklyn Elevated has taken possession of the bridge railroad and will operate it, paying $20,000 a year for track privileges and ten cents a car toll. The city will be relieved of the heavy cost of operating the railroad and it is hoped that a deficit in the finances of the bridge will be avoided.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A New York clergyman, after watching a Broadway policeman talk to a pretty girl on his beat for twenty minutes, walked over and inquired why the bluecoat was behaving like that. The policeman promptly arrested him and locked him up. It doesn't pay to be too inquisitive in New York.

A Havana paper says Americans "are industrious because of a lack of charitable feeling, for all starve in the United States who become penniless." No one but a Spanish philosopher would have thought of coupling industry with a lack of humane feeling. It is a new line of argument for the constitutionally tired.

The attorney general of Colorado has furnished an opinion that there is no law authorizing women in that state to change their maiden name on the simple excuse of a wedding. The question calling for the decision came from a woman notary public who was recently married. She asked under what name she should continue to exist officially, and was gratified with the announcement that she must sign all documents as before marriage, for, the attorney general says, "there is no authority for a change of name at marriage or any other time."

When the advocates of equal rights for women have made their crusade successful, such difficulties as that in which Nellie Grant Sartoris now finds herself will not exist. The daughter of President Grant was an American born, but when she married Algernon Sartoris, who was a British subject, her nationality was changed by that act to that of her husband. Now her husband is dead, she has returned to her native land and wishes to be restored to American citizenship; but the only way it can be done is by having congress pass a special act in her behalf. Probably it will be done without demur. But why need it be done at all? If an American man should marry an English woman, and go to live in England, that would not make him an Englishman or forfeit his American citizenship. Why should there be a different law for the woman?

The decision of the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, to admit women as students to the university, will gratify all who believe in the higher education of women. To assist in carrying out the action of the board, Colonel Joseph H. Bennett presented to the university a dwelling at the time of his death, located at Thirty-fourth and Walnut streets, the estimated value of which, including the ground, is said to be $50,000. For the present these houses will be used as they now stand, but in course of time it is expected to raze these to the ground and in their place to raise a structure to be devoted exclusively to the needs of the women students. The carrying out of the project, it is said, will result in property and building worth about $500,000. The gift of Colonel Bennett adds to his liberality of eight years ago, when he presented to the institution the structure now named Bennett Hall, in honor of the donor, and an endowment fund of $17,500 for fellowships.

Commodore Dewey's opportunity at Madrid came to him rather late in his career, but not too late to enable him to wear his honors for a little while. Under the law, he will be retired for age on December 26, 1899, about two months after the retirement of Commodore Howison. Dewey will become a rear admiral before the end of this year and will have an entire year in which to exercise the authority and enjoy the prominence of the highest rank of the navy. The present list of rear admirals will be wiped out this year. It is probable that in 1900 the list of rear admirals will include Schley, Dewey, Sampson and John Crittenden Watson. Commodore Watson ranks Sampson, who has been jumped over the entire list of commodores to give him supreme control of the forces he organized for the campaign. In the ordinary course he will get into the top list early next year. Unless some accident should happen to him, Watson will retain his place until 1904. Commodore Watson was an officer under Farragut at the time the great admiral passed the forts to reach New Orleans. Farragut had a high opinion of the courage and coolness of the then young man. It was Watson who directed and assisted the lashing of Farragut in the shrouds of the Hartford so that he could observe the operations of the fleet without exposure to the danger of being swept away in the confusion. He is a careful captain. Naval officers who know him well say that he always had a most "happy ship," because it was a "strict ship." At the time of the naval rendezvous and subsequent parade to celebrate the anniversary of the discovery of America, Captain Watson commanded the San Francisco. He had just become entitled to a new sea tour, having for three years been in charge of the Naval Home at Philadelphia.

CYRUS THORP.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Special Correspondence.

A committee of the New York Presbytery has reported in favor of a scheme for counteracting the influence of the saloons by providing for the working people attractive and safe resorts, especially in the evening. Rev. Dr Thompson, Secretary of the Presbyterian Home Missions, says this plan is not a new one, but really a continuation of a movement started by Rev. Dr. Rainsford, several years ago, proposed to open attractive saloons, where beer and other mild drinks were to be sold. The places were to be made attractive with reading rooms, gymnasium, etc "That part of Dr. Rainsford's proposition," says Dr. Thompson, "was all right, but the sale of beer was not commendable. We don't intend to dispense anything to young men or old, or to women, that might tend to give them appetites for intoxicants. On the contrary our aim will be to counteract that appetite by teaching the evils of intoxicating beverages."

The Brooklyn Bridge.

The East River bridge is now practically a free bridge. It was long age thrown open to pedestrians without toll but a charge of cents was made for a ride on the bridge cars. This toll is still maintained, but any one using the regular trolley cars which now cross the structure pays 5 cents for the ride to his destination in Brooklyn and receives his passage across the bridge free. In other words, the patrons of the trolley cars save their daily bridge fares both ways This means a loss of a large revenue to the bridge.

This depreciation in receipts seems to be looked upon as a public calamity in New York. But why should this bridge be made a source of profit more than any other bridge? The proper view to be taken seems to be that a bridge is a public highway, and as such should be free to the public. Toll bridges, like toll roads, are rapidly becoming anachronisms in the older sections of the country.

Papers Noted for Their Poets.

The Herald is not the first New York paper that has had a semi-weekly edition of The Evening Post. For many years called the New York Herald. It may seem strange that a daily paper should change its name for a different edition, but a similar instance was found in the Commercial Advertiser, which once issued a semi-weekly edition called the New York Spectator It was discontinued several years ago The Commercial Advertiser and The Evening Post, both evening papers were at one time noted for their poets Byrant being the bard of the latter while Robert C. Sands held the same distinction on the former. He did not equal Byrant, yet some of his poems were highly deserving. The chief editor of the Commercial Advertiser at that time was William L. Stone, who held this position for a quarter century and was only removed by death while in the midst of his powers. He was not only an able journalist but also a historian and was the author of the first American editor to become historical authority. His son, who bears the same name, is also a noted historian, and his "Sir William Johnson" is the only reliable biography of that remarkable man. Like his father, he began his career in newspaper work and was for several years city editor of the Journal of Commerce, but he is now chiefly engaged in history, to which he is adapted, both by taste and application.

Was Original John Jacob Astor.

The founder of the Astor estate was a stout built German, and both his features and his speech recalled the "fatherland." He always said "dat" for that and "tousand" for thousand, and he loved to talk in his native tongue with his old friends whom he met at the German society dinners of which he was a member. Most of our business men require recreation, but Astor was an exception. He neither loved horses nor pictures; did not visit watering places, had no mania for rare books or curiosities, and really had no fad whatever. His long life was occupied by plodding business, in which he found sufficient pleasure, and he continued to attend to it until his faculties failed. The Astor estate has attained to be a family monument, and was thus viewed by his son William, who made a handsome donation, both of land and money, for its enlargement. William's sons, John Jacob and William, also held the same views, the old mansion in which the Lenox and the Tilden extinguishes the old names and soon the Astor library will be no more. Could the old man indeed have foreseen such a result there never would have been an Astor library.

What the remains of the original John Jacob now rest with those of his children and grandchildren, his great-grandson Waldorf has become a resident of England, and another grandson, John Jacob, is voyaging in southern waters on board the steam yacht Nomahal. Hence New York at present contains no direct representative of the family. Waldorf is self-exiled, but John Jacob's absence is due to business enterprise, as he has important interests in Europe. He is indeed enjoying a greater resemblance to the original John Jakob than any other of the family. This is shown by his extensive purchases of land in Bronx as well as by the Honduras movement. A few years ago he was simply the "Jack Astor" of Fifth avenue, living in the paternal home, but he has replaced the latter with the Astoria Hotel, and now is Colonel Astor, formerly of the Governor's staff, and also a director in a colossal bank, and is emulating wealth in all the ways of a half dozen millions a year. He has not thus far done much for philanthrophy, but one may hope that he may learn that the greatest happiness is found in what Goldsmith calls "the luxury of doing good."

INVENTIVE WOMEN.

Some Useful and Unique Devices Discovered by the Fair Sex.

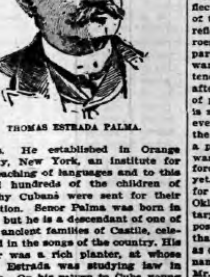
It is not generally supposed that many of the labor-saving inventions of the world may be credited to women. The Chinese Empress Tzu, for example, worked out useful ideas in her busy brain. She invented the spinning of silk, never dreaming of the immense industry that would grow from her creation. A luxurious woman of Asia discovered the attar of roses, and this same woman, Mhsaral Mhl, invented the ingenious handicraft, the cashmere shawl. History is silent as to her end. The women who are kept from want by the making of pillow lace have reason to bless the name of Barbara Uttman, of Saxony. Wood engraving was discovered by the Cunio sisters, two Italian women, and it was the widow of General Nathaniel Greene, who made the suggestion of the cotton gin, which was perfected by Eli Whitney. The grandmother of Clara Louise Kellogg gave the attachment to the machinery in looms in mills, and another woman's genius worked out a device for deadening the noise of railway trains. A Miss Knight invented the paper bag, and at once people wondered why so simple a contrivance had never been thought of before.

Mme. De Long invented metal-cutting machinery, which has been used in France for some time. This machinery is worked by steam, and from the solid metal cuts out gates and other architectural work without casting. Mme. De Long has cut plates of brass a foot thick into lattice work at a single operation. She has also made picture frames, crests and lace pins, turning them out of the metal fully finished, every operation being performed by steam-driven machinery. She first conceived the idea of her remarkable apparatus over 20 years since, when a paralysis of her right arm compelled her to give up her trade of jewel worker. She has received many medals from various Paris expositions. The first laureate crown ever offered to a woman has been bestowed upon Mme. De Long by the Society of French Architects in Paris. Mrs. Barton Parnell, who has worked for over 40 years in the Australian gold mines, has made fame and fortune for herself as an assayist. She discovered the secret of treating ore before roasting it so that as much gold as brown stone could be obtained from it. Mrs. Parnell intends to found a college in England for girls, where they will be trained to be practical miners. It is stated that there are nearly 5,000,000 self-supporting women in the United States alone, and it is difficult to find a branch of trade in which they are not doing successful work.—New Orleans Picayune.

SENDS CUBA THE SINEWS OF WAR.

Palma Lost His Estate by Rebellion and is now Head of the Junta.

Thomas Estrada Palma, the head of the Cuban Junta in America, has been a conspicuous figure in the affairs of Cuba since the last rebellion began. He was proclaimed president of the revolutionary party when the flame broke out three years ago. In 1877 Palma was chosen as president of the Cuban republic. He was a newspaper writer and was for several years city editor of the Journal of Commerce, but he is now chiefly engaged in history, to which he is adapted, both by taste and application.



THOMAS ESTRADA PALMA.

States. He established in Orange County, New York, an institute for the teaching of languages and to this school hundreds of the children of wealthy Cubans were sent for their education. Senor Palma was born in Cuba, but he is a descendant of one of those ancient families of Castile, celebrated in the songs of the country. His father was a rich planter, at whose death Estrada was studying law in Seville. On his return to Cuba, young Palma determined that he would do all in his power to strike the shackles from the Pearl of the Antilles, and he has kept his promise.

Hawthorne and d'Aubepine.

As a nom de plume for a great deal of his works Hawthorne assumed the French translation of his name. His stories in the Democratic Review of this time are attributed to M. d'Aubepine. Lowell says of him in his Conversid address: "You would think me extravagant, I fear, if I said how highly I rate the genius of Hawthorne in the history of literature. At any rate, Hawthorne taught us one great and needful lesson, and that is that our own past was an ample storehouse for the brightest works of imagination and fancy."—Edward Everett Hale in Outlook.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Special Correspondence

Major Joseph W. Wham, paymaster in the United States army, has been under a strange and distressing sentence since 1894, when President Cleveland, in mitigating a sentence of dismissal, decided that Major Wham should be suspended from duty until 1904 at half pay. Recently Major Wham's friends brought forward a bill to restore him to rank, which could only be done by setting aside the court martial finding. The bill was passed by the House, having been recommended by Secretary Alger, who had examined the history of the case and concluded that the man had been too severely punished. The House took that view of the case, for it seems from the accounts of it in the report which was made to Congress that Wham's army record was good even the time he was a private soldier during the rebellion; that he had since that time distinguished himself for soldierly qualities, and that the transaction for which he was court martialed was one with a private citizen involving the question of the payment of a note of $1,000. Wham neglected to make the proper defence in the case brought against him for payment of the $1,000, and he was very vigorously prosecuted as soon as he ventured to become a candidate for promotion in the quartermaster's army. During the debate this was alluded to, and there was also some rather vague criticism of the composition of the court martial. Some members of the House objected to paying Major Wham his full salary for the years he had not served, but Mr. Ray of New York very quickly suggested that if he had been improperly or wrongfully sentenced, the government ought to pay him, in justice, the restoration to the pay roll was an admission that he should never have been taken from it.

Gen. Henderson's Kindness.

General Henderson, "Dave" Henderson, as his intimates call him, who has represented the Third Iowa district since the Forty-sixth Congress, is one of the best liked and most popular men in Congress. He is said to have been absolutely fearless and brave in action, during his service in the civil war, yet his heart is as tender as a woman's, and men who fought under him tell stories of his kindness and sympathy for his boys who were wounded.

One poor fellow in his command was shot through the lungs when loading his gun, and for hours he lay there kicking and cursing with pain. The wound was, of course, mortal, the service of the surgeon of no avail, so the chaplain was brought to comfort and prepare him for death. When General Henderson arrived on the scene he found the dying soldier still shrieking and cursing and the chaplain busy with his prayers, exhorting the poor victim to stop cursing and prepare for death, saying that he might be damned if he went to the other world with such blasphemy. The chaplain's ministrations were as perfunctory as possible, and waving him aside, General Henderson sat down by the side of the dying man.

"You are a hero, my brave fellow," he said, laying his strong hand upon the poor writhing form, "just as great a hero as though you died at the front by the enemy's bullets. You have given your life for your country, and, nobly given it, and your country will be grateful. Let that console you. Grit your teeth and die like a brave soldier. like the hero that you are."

"Is that true, colonel? Is that true?" gasped the dying man. "Am I dying for my country? God bless you for those words of comfort. God bless you and thank you, sir," and smiling peacefully the poor fellow lay back on his pillow and the few moments left him were passed in silent prayer.

New Post Offices.

The postoffice department always reflects, in its list of new postoffices some of the popular feeling. Occasionally it reflects something else, but when horses are being made the postoffice department finds it out. During the recent war broke out there has been a distinct tendency to prove this. Immediately after the capture of Manila the naming of postoffices for Dewey began, and it is still going on. A new one popt out every day or two. Immediately after the destruction of the fleet of Cervera a postoffice with the name of Schley was established. None of the land forces have won postoffice names as yet. Hence the selection is often for a new postoffice. A new office in Oklahoma is named for Alger. Secretary Bliss has not yet begun to name postoffices, the number of offices by that name being ten, or just the same as on March 4, 1897, when offices were named for the late postmaster general, Mr. Gary, but the demand for that name seems to have expired with the retirement of that gentleman from office. Shipping Bees in Ice.

It is not generally known that a great many insects can live for weeks in a state of suspended animation under the influence of cold, and may thrive if slowly thawed out. This fact has been taken advantage of lately in the shipping of bees. Different varieties of bees are often sent from England to her colonies, but cost heavily to send alive with plenty of food. Now they are frozen, packed quite firmly in a very small box, and thawed out on their arrival. A number of bumble bees have recently been shipped to New Zealand in this manner, where they are found most useful in fertilizing the red clover that has lately been introduced into that colony.

STRIKE AT MONTAUK.

Workmen Refuse to Complete Camp For Shafter's Men—Troops Without Shelter.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Montauk Point, L. I., August 10, 1:03 p. m.—In the midst of the heavy storm this morning, workmen employed in preparing the camp for Shafter's returning army, struck for higher wages and shorter hours, and utterly refused to work.

The camp is in great confusion and the troops are without tents or shelter of any kind. The Government is for the time unable to prepare for the arrival of the soldiers.

TO ATTACK MANILA.

Preparations for Joint Movement By Land and Sea are Almost Complete.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Cavite, August 4, via Hong Kong, August 10, 1:03 p. m.—Now that the monitor Monterey has arrived, action against Manila by the land and sea forces will come quickly.

The ships of Rear Admiral Dewey's fleet have been stripping for action during the last few days and nearly all their boats have been sent ashore and hauled up at the Cavite navy yard.

The army preparations are yet incomplete as the surf has been too heavy to land the troops in the transports. It has been blowing a gale for the last two days making it impossible to communicate with Camp Dewey.

EXPECT FALL OF SAN JUAN.

A Speedy Conclusion Of Porto Rican Campaign Looked Forward to by Officials.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 10, 1:20 p. m.—The War Department expects to hear within a few days of the fall of San Juan. All the recent despatches of Gen. Miles indicate that three distinct detachments are advancing steadily toward the capital under circumstances which give hope of a speedy and successful close of the Porto Rican campaign.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

John Dalziel, principal of the Plainfield Manual Training School, is enjoying the bracing air of Denver, Colo. Mr. Dalziel went west with the intention of attending the Omaha Exposition, and will do so on his return home. He writes that he has enjoyed a tramp up to the summit of Pike's Peak and back, has examined the wonderful mineral resources of the State, and also tasted the delicious products of its orchards. Mr. Dalziel visited the Denver Normal Institute, and had the pleasure of lecturing to the 400 students there on "The Value of Drawing." He expects to be back soon and to take his place again at the head of the school with renewed health and a higher conception of the responsibilities of a teacher's life.

A strange sight might have been noticed in a pasture that lies not far from the city limits the other afternoon. A party of young men from this city wandered by and noticed two horses roaming about the field. With the hope of encountering a little excitement they climbed the fence and waded through the swamp that lay between them and the equines. The horses were surrounded and caught. Then the young men laid aside their coats and tried their hand at rough riding. The horses naturally resented at first such privileges being taken with them, but finally gave up and took the treatment in a very docile fashion. After riding about for a time the young men left. It all happened in plain view of the home of the farmer who owns the horses, whose crabbed temper and dislike for trespassers is well-known. The witnesses of the rough riding expected to see a collision between the irate owner and the young men, but they were disappointed.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

United States Senator William J. Sewell is suggested by "The Newark Advertiser" as Secretary of War in President McKinley's Cabinet. In case Mr. Alger retires, as is rumored, the President may be induced to give serious consideration to this suggestion. It is needless to say that all Jerseymen, regardless of political affiliations, concede General Sewell's fitness for the office. As a soldier and as a man of proved executive capacity, he would fill the bill.—Tribune.

EXCITING TIMES FOR BOYS ON THE BADGER.

Frank Smalley Tells How Spanish Prizes Were Taken.

PROSPECT OF PRIZE MONEY

FOUR PRISONERS ALSO CAPTURED BY THE JERSEY TARS.

Many Spaniards and Cubans Voluntarily Gave Themselves to the Americans—Men are Ready to Volunteer for Hazardous Duty—Blustering Spanish Captain is Scared by a Sight of the Badger's Guns.

When anything big is going to happen New Jersey in some way always succeeds in getting her share of the glory, so when the news reached Plainfield that the Jersey tars on the U. S. S. Badger, some of whom are Plainfield boys, had captured some prizes, the above saying was verified. In a very interesting letter written to Mr. and Mrs. David C. Smalley, of East Front street, by their son, Frank Smalley, who is on the Badger, he tells something of what has happened near Cuba of late. The letter is as follows:

U. S. S. Badger,
Off Nuevitas, Cuba,
July 25, '98.

There is quite a good deal going on here now so I thought that I would let you know about it. The excitement began about three days ago. Three Cubans came along side in a little boat and told that they had just arrived from some town south of Nuevitas. It appears that the Spanish army is centering in Puerto Principle in the middle of the island. This leaves all the coast towns an easy prey to the American ships. It is a regular hand out. Spanish and Cubans came out and gave themselves up and told us that all we needed to do was to go to the lighthouse, put up the American flag and everybody in the town, including three gunboats, would be ours in less than an hour.

Those women, children and men on shore now are starving. All the Spanish men and soldiers who gave themselves up, are brought on board here. We have nine now and I don't know how many more are coming. They were left behind by the other garrison in their march to the interior to blow up the lighthouse. But contrary to orders, they overpowered the lighthouse keeper and made him bring them aboard.

They gave up their arms and ammunition and took everything very quietly. They were astonished that we were fed three times a day and the government furnished us with more than one suit.

When they reached the deck they watched us like cats, afraid that we were going to commit some heinous barbarity. When we gave them some food and clothing to those that needed it, their surprise and gratefulness was unbounded. They were allowed the freedom of the deck midships, and so they were not confined.

Here we are outside of the Spanish city, every one in it ready to give up. The gunboats would surrender at the sight of ours. The people and the Spanish soldiers were begging us to take them while we are outside waiting until some flagship comes along and sends us to some obscure position and get the glory of taking the town themselves.

The captain would only have to wait an instant for a prize crew or a landing party. Every man would volunteer, and the captain knows we would, but then he laughs in his sad, disgusted way, and says "I can't do it against orders."

There are many schooners passing bound for the Bahama Islands. Of course we stop them, but they are allowed to proceed.

June 27th, 1898.

I have a very good reason to write this time. Yesterday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock we sighted smoke rising from a big ship in the harbor. We knew that this was one of the auxiliary cruisers because the prisoners on board had told us. The captain showed how funny he was by going to starboard at full speed so as to make the ship, which was towing two brigantines, think that we were running away.

By the time we had made the circle, the ship was steaming north at full speed. We then went ahead at full speed so as to get between them and the harbor.

This done, the captain ordered a blank shot to be fired to bring them to. They stopped at once and a boat load of armed men, with an officer, was sent to board the brig. He found that all three vessels carried Spanish flags with a red cross underneath, indicating yellow fever. They claimed to be hospital boats, but as they didn't have a written permit from the Red Cross Society, our captain took them in the name of the U. S. as prizes of war. Of course, they got very hot about this, and it was comical to see the captain of the tug swell up and assume a dignified position, but it did no good. He was surrounded by a dozen armed men and with a hundred rifles of different calibre bearing on him from the Badger, he had nothing to do but surrender. It was found that there were about three hundred people aboard the three ships. Some were Spanish soldiers wounded and some were Spanish sympathizers. All were taken as prisoners of war. There is some trouble, however, as they came out with a sick flag flying it is difficult to decide here whether they will be considered prizes or not. The value of the three ships is estimated at $190,000. We may get about $20,000 out of it and we may get "nix."

The brig is about four years old and in very good condition. We are now on our way to a little place up the coast, where we leave the prizes in charge of a prize-crew to go on to Key West, while we will go back to the station off Nuevitas until we get orders to go to Key West.

There are two more Spanish gunboats in the harbor that we want to get. I hope the old saying will come true that it never rains but it pours. You should have heard the cheers we gave when the order came to clear the ship for action. The Captain said that he was proud of his men now than he had ever been before. He said that we went to work with such a will that we reminded him of pirates. As a reward he is giving us a holiday today to smoke, read and do anything we like.

I tell you it looked nice to see Old Glory go up on the foremast of the tug and see the good old American uniform around the decks.

We are on our way to Key West after that box, I hope, and for coal.

TROLLEY TRACKS GO ON EAST SECOND ST.

From Richmond Street to Eastern Limits of City.

FRANCHISE WAS GRANTED.

ONLY ONE REMONSTRANCE AND THAT WAS NOT HEEDED.

Street Railway Company Files Consents and Maps of the Route, Which Will Run Over Richmond Street From East Fifth Street—The Building Ordinance is Amended—Other Business.

The adjourned meeting of the City Council held Monday was comparatively a tame one. The very warm weather had a depressing effect on all business, and it was transacted in a reasonable amount of time. A feature of the evening was the application of the Plainfield Street Railway Company for a franchise to operate a trolley from East Fifth street through Richmond street to East Second street, and through the latter street to the city line. The company filed the required number of consents, representing all but 131 feet of the entire street. A map was also filed by the company. On motion of Mr. Barrows an opportunity was given for anyone present to speak for or against the granting of the franchise. J. B. Coward presented a remonstrance on behalf of Walter Scott and others, representing a number of feet on Richmond street, asking the Council to refuse to grant the asked-for franchise.

Thomas Nevins, Jr., of the Street Railway Company, was present, but he had nothing to say on the matter. Mr. Barrows then made a motion that the Plainfield Street Railway Company be granted a franchise to extend their tracks as petitioned for. This motion was adopted, after which Mr. Barrows offered an ordinance similar to the one granting the other franchise. He moved that copies of it be sent to each member and that the ordinance be laid over till the next meeting when the members could decide upon the conditions to be required of the trolley company.

Another feature of the meeting was the introduction of the building ordinance, amended by the fire and building committee, to meet the requests of citizens who previously appeared before the committee. By the adoption of the ordinance, as amended, the fire limits are materially reduced and other advantageous changes are made for the benefit of the people. There was considerable discussion on the ordinance as changed, but it was finally adopted and ordered advertised.

The bond of Collector J. A. Martin was presented, and after inspection by the finance committee was ordered filed, it being correct. The bond of George White for $500 as security for the keeping in repair of Sycamore avenue was also presented, but it was not wholly correct and was referred to the corporation counsel. Residents of South avenue petitioned for a fire hydrant and the same was referred with power.

Mr. Bunyon brought up the matter of installing a new system of hot-water heating in the fire headquarters, and the presented specifications and a resolution for the carrying out of the work. Bids will be advertised for according to the specifications and the work that is to be done at once.

Mr. Hetfield took exception to the expenditure of several hundred dollars, and thought that it was useless. His opinion was that the present system should have lasted longer and that it ought not to require so much money to provide for the heating.

Mr. Bunyon pressed his point, however, and stated that the matter was a necessity, and the point was gained.

Mr. VanHerwerden offered a resolution that when Council adjourn it be to meet one week from this evening. He then gave notice that the meeting would be held for the purpose of examining the books of the assessors.

A resolution offered by Mr. Barrows gave the commissioners on assessment an extension of time for one month to complete their report. Another resolution by the same Councilman provides for the setting of the curbing on Albert street to the proper grade as petitioned for by the property owners on that street.

After the bills, which included the one for the city flagpole, were approved, the Council adjourned to meet one week from tonight.

Lawyer Sued for His Fee.

Judgment was rendered in Justice Mosher's court Monday afternoon in the case of W. K. McClure against Jacob Sadosky, of Scotch Plains, for $21.13, the amount claimed by the plaintiff as a balance on a bill for services rendered. Sadosky is a wealthy land owner at the Plains, and has retained Mr. McClure in several suits as his lawyer. In settling up the accounts this balance of $21.13 could not be agreed upon, and Sadosky refused to pay it. William Sweeney appeared for the plaintiff.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and increasing. due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think these specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN OF FIVE CENTS RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, called to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended somewhat highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them were it if were my last dollar." At the time of this interview I am sorry to say present two daughters who specially objected to their mother flying a testimonial with her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I shall be grateful in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other sufferer to be benefited to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style of 10 cent package has been placed on the market, containing six Ripans Tabules, for the convenience of those who do not wish to purchase the 60 cent packages. The 10 cent packages are also for sale at many drug stores. The 60 cent packages may be had of druggists generally. The Ripans Tabules may be had of druggists generally. The 10 cent packages may be had of druggists generally. The 10 cent packages may be had of druggists generally. The 10 cent packages

His Report Received By War Department.

A CONCISE DESPATCH

AMERICAN FLAG HOISTED BY LIEUT. BRUMBY.

His Report Came in Cipher and Was Immediately Translated—City Surrendered Saturday Afternoon at 5 o'Clock.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 17, 12:55 p. m. —Rear Admiral Dewey's report of the surrender of Manila was received at the War Department early this morning. It was in cipher. It was immediately disciphered and given out for publication. It was as follows: ·

"Manila, August 13.—Manila surrendered today to the land and naval forces after a combined attack. A division of the squadron shelled the forts and intrenchments at Malate on the south side of the city driving back the enemy. Our army advanced on that side at the same time.

"The city surrendered at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the American flag being hoisted by Lieutenant Brumby.

"About seven thousand prisoners of war were taken. The squadron had no casualties. On the seventh, Merritt and I formally demanded the surrender of the city which the Spanish General refused. Signed, Dewey."

MANY SPOILS.

What Was Surrendered to Dewey and Merritt at Manila Saturday.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Manila, August 13, via Hong Kong, August 17, 1:13 p. m.—The city of Manila surrendered today. Four American warships bombarded the Spanish fortifications at Malate for an hour. They fired a hundred shots, after which the American flag was raised over the Philippines.

The Spanish surrendered 7,000 men and 13,000 stands of arms, together with an immense amount of ammunition. The Spanish were allowed the honors of war.

JANDENES TO SUFFER.

Spanish Government Will Court-martial Him for Not Making Stronger Defence.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, August 17, 1:34 p. m.—It is officially stated that Captain-General Augustin of the Phillippines was recalled by orders of the Government devolving the command of Manila upon General Jandenes.

Jandenes will be tried by court martial on his return to Spain for surrendering the city without making a greater resistance.

ENTERED SAN JUAN.

American Cruiser Went Into Harbor as Far as Possible.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Ponce, Porto Rico, via. St. Thomas, August 17, 2:30 p. m.—The cruiser New Orleans entered the harbor of San Juan yesterday as far as it was possible to go and Captain Folger went ashore and made an official call upon Capt.-Gen. Macias. The men greeted each other politely, and Macias said that he would return the visit Wednesday. The ship which the Spaniards sank in the harbor after Admiral Sampson's bombardment ef-

HURT ON A BLUE LINER.

GHASTLY WOUND MADE GOING AT A MILE A MINUTE.

S. G. Smith, of Newark, Sat by an Open Window in a Car and Was Struck in Head by Some Hard Substance.

The passengers occupying one of the coaches on the Blue Line express from Washington, which passes this city at 7:30 p. m., were startled Tuesday as the train was running at the rate of a mile a minute between Cranford and Roselle to hear a man occupying a seat on the left side of the car yell in pain and then see a stream of blood spurt from a wound in the forehead.

The injured passenger was S. G. Smith, of 38 Hill street, Newark, who had boarded the train at this city. He was setting close to an open window when some hard missle flew through the window and struck him in the forehead. The blood flowed freey and when the train arrived at Elizabeth Smith got off and was assisted into the telegraph office. While waiting for a doctor he fainted. Dr. Bailey arrived in a few moments and dressed the wound and Smith continued his trip home.

Tom Brown, of this city, was on the train and assisted in stopping the flow of blood from the wound before the train arrived at Elizabeth. H. C. Gorrell, of this city, night operator at the Elizabeth station, also lent the injured man valuable assistance.

TOOK MORE THAN JUNK.

A Newark Italian Spied Lead Pipe Which He Also Carted Away.

A week ago an Italian junk dealer, of Newark, came here and visited the shop of William Krausse, of North Plainfield. Krausse is a plumber and had a quantity of junk which he disposed of to the dealer from Newark. The latter packed up the stock purchased and shipped it to his place in Newark by freight.

After it was packed Krausse missed a quantity of lead pipe for which he vainly hunted. Finally, convinced that it had been packed up by the Italian, he appeared before Justice Nash yesterday and secured a search warrant to look for the lead pipe in the junk.

Tuesday Constable Moffett served the warrant and Krausse found the missing pipe which he took possession of without delay. The amount was too small to take the trouble to make any charge against the Italian, and Krausse is satisfied as long as he has his property back again

Adventist Meetings Closed.

The tent meetings, corner of Somerset street and Linden avenue, have been closed for the present. The tents have been sent to Wilmington, Del., where the Seventh-day Adventists of the Atlantic Conference will hold their annual meeting in connection with a camp meeting from August 23d to September 5th. Elders Horton and Fanner will attend the conference, returning here at the close. Arrangements are being perfected with the Christian church for the Adventists to meet there. Accordingly, Elder Horton will speak in the church on Grove street, near Front, Wednesday and Thursday nights, and Saturday at 3 p. m. Other meetings will be announced later on.

Trolley Capitalists on Watch.

Thomas Nevins, Jr., of the Plainfield Street Railway, accompanied by L. W. Serrell, Jr., were present at the adjourned meeting of the Council last Tuesday and held a short conference with some of the Councilmen regarding the extension of the trolley. The two railroad men seemed to be pleased with the action taken by the Council.

Her Seventh Birthday.

Miss Marion Fraed, of West Fourth street, celebrated her seventh birthday Tuesday afternoon in a very pleasant manner, entertaining twelve of her young friends from 3 to 6 o'clock. Games, refreshments, etc., made the time pass very pleasantly and too quickly for the young people.

The Council is Busy.

This month will be a record breaker for the City Council. Thus far three meetings have been held and one more meeting will be held before the month goes out. There is quite a difference between the present Council and the one of last year in this respect.

Will Have a Mixed Chair.

Ladies who will sing in a mixed choir at the men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon are requested to be there Sunday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock. Robert E. Speer will speak and Councilman William N. Bunyon will sing.

Staking Out West End Engine House.

TROLLEY INTERESTS CLASH IN COUNCIL.

Board of Freeholders Say Richmond Street Belongs to County

NEW AND NOVEL CLAIM.

THE COUNCIL WARNED NOT TO GRANT A TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

The County Legislators Give Notice That They Will Fight the Effort to Put Trolley Road on That Street Unless Consented to by Them—Councilmen Do Not Heed Notice of Freeholders.

The first matter considered at the adjourned meeting of the City Council last Tuesday was the books of the assessors. The members spent fifteen minutes in looking over the books, but finally deferred further inspection until a meeting to be held Monday evening, August 29th.

W. R. Codington, attorney for the Union County Board of Freeholders, communicated with the Council regarding the granting of a franchise on Richmond street for a trolley. He stated that that street is a county road, and that the Board will oppose and fight any effort to place a trolley on that street without first obtaining the consent of the Board. The communication was received and filed.

Regarding the matter, Mr. Barrows stated that he thought that the Board of Freeholders were acting too hastily. He said that they had allowed the city to go ahead and repair the street which they now claim as a county road, and he thou ht that such action as they had taken was unjust. In addition, however, he stated that the Plainfield Street Railway Company has agreed to defend all suits or injunctions that may arise out of their efforts to locate a trolley on the so-called county road.

The conditions under which the trolley company secure the franchise to locate their tracks, include that they must copiously sprinkle the streets through which their tracks run, macadamize streets and pay their share for keeping them in repair.

Mr. Barrows introduced an ordinance granting the trolley franchise to the Plainfield Street Railway Company, and it embodies all the conditions to which the company must agree. It was adopted on its second reading and ordered advertised. Regarding the conditions and the ordinance all the members agreed that the contents were no more than fair. They did not think that any extortionate measure should be exacted, as had been suggested by some residents in the city, in view of the fact that John Kean had bid a high figure for the county trolley franchise.

In accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Runyon three fire hydrants will be located on West Third street in the vicinity of Grant avenue, and three on West Fourth street, also one on South avenue opposite Leland avenue. He stated that the Plainfield Water Supply Company are about to extend their mains along the two first-mentioned streets.

Mr. Runyon also reported on the matter regarding the installation of a new heating apparatus at fire headquarters, and he offered a resolution that the contract for the work be given to George J. Tobin whose bid, $389, was the lowest. The Mayor and Clerk were then authorized to sign the necessary contract.

At this time Mayor Fisk appointed J. W. Murray, Jr., as first assistant chief of the fire department at a salary of $200, and Andrew H. Jennings as second assistant at a salary of $600. Mr. Runyon moved that the appointments be confirmed, which was so ordered.

Mr. Hetfield did not like the order in which the appointees were named, and could see no reason why Mr. Murray should receive an extra $100, when he does no more work than he always did, and the second assistant is to do all the work.

Mr. Runyon said in behalf of Mr. Murray that he was a very valuable man in the department, that he had been a faithful fireman, and that the city cannot afford to lose him. He said that when James Martin was in the department he did not sleep at fire headquarters, but Mr. Jennings will now do so. He thought the granting of an extra $100 was a tribute to Mr. Murray for his real worth.

Mr. Hetfield stated that there are a large number of firemen in Plainfield who do more duty than Mr. Murray, and they are just as faithful, yet they do not get one dollar for their services. They more than earn $100, but the city has no paid department and cannot pay them for their work. He

AID FOR THE RED CROSS.

SUCCESSFUL LAWN FETE GIVEN BY WOMEN IN CRANFORD.

Grounds of Joseph Purcell Transformed Into a Beautiful Scene—Women Did Themselves Proud—Profits Will be $300.

Cranford, August 17—The ladies of the Cranford Auxiliary of the Red Cross Society did themselves proud last evening and they did something else, too, for the wounded and sick soldiers will have many dainties bought with the proceeds of the lawn fete which was held yesterday afternoon and evening. The lawn at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Purcell was the scene of the entertainment, and the grounds were a sight long to be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be there.

The large barn at the side of the lawn was made use of for the entertainments such as gramophone selections, Punch and Judy shows, music and recitations, which were going on throughout the afternoon and evening. Corporal Sulzer, of the Fourth N. J. Regiment, recited "The Old Man and Jim," and Private Reuter, of the same regiment, gave selections on the banjo.

Music was furnished by Allen's band. About 10 o'clock the large barn was thrown open and dancing was indulged in to the music of Wheeler's orchestra.

Among those present were Chaplain Glazebrook, of the Third Regiment, and Alexander M. Mellan, a member of the First U. S. Cav., Troop B, who was shot through the shoulder at Santiago on July 2d and lay in the trenches from 5 o'clock until the next day at 9 o'clock. He was a reminder of the good work for which the ladies were working in giving the entertainment. About seven hundred people visited the lawn during the day and the ladies will clear about $300 for the sick and wounded soldiers, for whose benefit the entertainment was given.

The officers of the Cranford Auxiliary are Mrs. Bourn A. Stewart; Mrs. Horton, vice president; Miss Carrie Purcell, treasurer, and Miss Lakley, secretary, and to these ladies a great deal of credit is due, for they have spared no time or expense to make it the grand success it at it was. The society has already given over $300 to the Red Cross Society.

HELP FOR THE CLARKS.

Appeal for the Destitute Old People is Bearing Fruit.

The appeal made for help for the Clarks, the old couple who live in a destitute condition above Washingtonville, is already bearing fruit. Last Tuesday K. Mathiason left $2 at the Press office for them, and Wednesday Mrs. Charles Schermerhorn, of the Babcock building, contributed a number of useful articles for their house.

All contributions for the old couple will be acknowledged in The Daily Press.

Mrs. Woodward, of 22 Norwood avenue, became interested in the aged couple through the story of their destitution in The Daily Press, and has collected the following for them:

Can baked beans	B. D. Newell
Piece bacon	Fred Endress
Two pounds sugar	Mrs. J. Young
Two pounds coffee	A. & P. Tea Company
Three lbs. oatmeal	Mrs. J. H. VanDeventer
Jelly	Mrs. Smith, Leland avenue
Cash 25 cents	Miss E. Clark

Miss Augusta Colson has just been discharged from the Muhlenberg Hospital where she has been since the middle of July. She was discharged completely cured. She wishes to express through The Press her thanks to the physicians and nurses there for their kind treatment during the time she spent in the hospital.

Policemen on Their Vacations.

Roundsman Flynn has returned from his vacation of ten days. Sergeant Kiely, who got two weeks vacation, will return to duty next Saturday night. The next officer to take an outing is Patrolman Vanderweg, and the last man on the list for a vacation is Roundsman Frederickson.

A Beggar Goes to Jail.

Chief Marshal Wilson arrested Michael Kalagar in the borough, yesterday. Kalagar has no home and he was begging from house to house and using profane language. When arraigned before Recorder Long a fine of $10 or ten days was imposed. Kalagar will take the days.

Bowling on the Green.

Next Saturday at the home of Christian Schepflin, Dunellen, will take place the play for the club medal by the members of the Middlesex Bowling Green Club. The medal is now held by Mr. Schenck.

W. E. Townsend, of the borough, has secured a position as conductor on the Somerset street trolley.

DEFEATED BOGEY ON HILLSIDE LINKS.

Supposed Perfect Record of Course Was Excelled.

A REMARKABLE SITUATION.

CARL W. WALZ EQUALLED BOGEY'S SCORE IN MATCH.

Colonel Bogey's Score Was Thought to be the Best Possible for the Links and Was Made With That Intention in View—Now the Players Have Demonstrated That It Wasn't.

Col. Bogey is a character famous in the annals of going. Everybody that knows anything of the ancient game of golf has heard of him but there is no record of his appearance to any one. Really, however, Col. Bogey, or Bogey, as he is often called, is a mythical personage who is supposed to play golf in absolutely perfect form and make equally perfect shots. Every golf course has a record, commonly known as Col. Bogey's score. This is supposed to be the score that ought to be made by perfect playing.

Now like every other course, the one used at present by the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club has Col. Bogey's score, so called. It was figured out as the others are by some golfing expert who was supposed to know just what ideal playing would do there.

Just at present there is a remarkable state of affairs on the Hillside links. Bogey's score has been equalled in a match. And further, it has been defeated by two of the crack players of the club in practice.

Now he, who formulated Col. Bogey's record for the course, placed it at 38 strokes. Some time ago Carl W. Walz went around the course in a regular match, completing it in 38 strokes. Later, Lester Glenney covered the nine holes in 37 strokes, one better than Bogey. And last of all, Willard Wadsworth accomplished the course in 36, two better than Bogey.

It is not often that a player has a chance to knock out the record of the reputed Colonel at golf and so the local men are congratulating each other on their wonderful work. While their scores were undoubtedly only accomplished by fine playing yet it is evident that Col. Bogey was not at his best or else those who scored his strokes were not expecting to see such good work on the Hillside course.

BIDS RECEIVED.

Offers Made for Installing Heating Apparatus in Fire Headquarters.

Last evening there was a meeting of the fire and building committee of the City Council at which time the bids for installing a new heating apparatus at fire headquarters were opened. Five bids were received as follows: Manufacture Supply Company, of Newark, $400; A. M. Griffen, $439.75; A. B. Thorn, $424.56; A. H. Enander, $408; G. J. Tobin, $389. The bids of the Newark concern and that of A. M. Griffen were received without a certified check. Nothing further was done at the meeting, and the committee will now consider the matter and make a report at the next meeting of the Council when it will probably be recommended that the lowest bidder be given the contract.

At the Camp Meeting.

This week will probably end the services of the camp meeting at Netherwood. It has, without doubt, been the most successful camp meeting ever held here, and the last services of the week are proposed to be specially attractive. Tomorrow night will be the gospel temperance meeting. Rev. Dr. Coster has secured Bishop Halliday, of Arkansas, and Bishop T. C. Clinton and Secretary Warner for Sunday. Ed. Martin's double quartette will be present and sing. Dr. Coster has asked the speakers for the next few evenings to kindly put the brakes on their long power so as not to disturb the neighbors.

Fourth Hopes to Go South.

Sea Girt, N. J., August 17.—The men of the Fourth Regiment are happy over a new rumor that they are to go south, preparatory to moving to the West Indies. Huge boxes in the commissary storehouses are being remarked, addressed to Jacksonville, Fla. The new suits have arrived. The tents are to be shipped with the regiment.

A Donkey Party.

Harry Stodhoff, one of the guests at the Revere House, gave a donkey party last Tuesday to a number of his young friends at the hotel and in the city. The evening passed very pleasantly.

FOR THE FRESH AIR CAMP

A PROFITABLE AFFAIR HELD BY YOUTHFUL PHILANTHROPISTS.

Dispensed Drinks and Sweet Things, and Were Assisted by Several Fair Juveniles —"Killing the Spaniards" Was Popular.

A charming little affair, held on the lawn of the residence of George P. Mellick, 224 LaGrande avenue, Tuesday afternoon, was the means of netting over $25 for the benefit of the Westfield Fresh Air Camp. Arranged as it was by two small boys, it was remarkably successful. Hartley Mellick and Raymond Miller were the youthful promoters of this charitable affair.

It was called a sale, and ice cream, cake, lemonade, candy and peanuts were to be had. The two young promoters directed the movements at the lemonade booth. Miss Emma Miller had the candy table. The other refreshments were dispensed by charming little waitresses, the Misses Edith Mellick, Antoinette Moodey, Helen Moodey, Grace Miller and Menda Hyde.

Morris Baymond was in charge of an attraction that took mightily with the young folks. "Killing the Spaniards," it was called. This sanguinary sport consisted in throwing tennis balls at small images of the Dons drawn on boxes. Prizes were given for the successful shots bringing down the naughty Spaniards.

The attendance was quite large. Some who could not be present sent small donations for the cause which were added to the net proceeds.

HAD NO AUTHORITY.

Advertising Solicitor Who Pretended to be Working for Franklin Council.

During the past few days some unknown person has been about Plainfield securing advertisements for a programme to be printed under the auspices of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., for their excursion to Asbury Park today. He called on several of the merchants and pretended to have their advertisements, but in fact did not.

Tuesday he called on F. A. Long, on Somerset street, and endeavored to secure his advertisement. Mr. Long asked him where he received his authority for doing such work. The man replied that Harvey Thorn, chairman of the excursion committee, had given him the privilege. Investigation proved the fact was not true and that the man had not secured any advertisements. Mr. Long gave the man a few sharp pointers and soon afterward he left town. Mr. Thorn desires to notify the public that no one has been authorized to do such work for the Council, and he warns Plainfielders against such persons.

FAVORS CLEVELAND PLAN.

Gov. Voorhees Thinks the Farm School for Boys a Good Idea.

Trenton, August 17.—Henry Vroom, through whose efforts ex-President Grover Cleveland has presented a tract of land for the establishment of a farm school for boys upon his estate near Princeton, called upon Governor Voorhees yesterday to interest him in the project. Governor Voorhees said he was warmly in favor of any such plan by which humanity might be benefited or elevated, but he was not in a position to pledge the State to support the movement.

He said nothing could be done in this respect until the meeting of the next Legislature, when Mr. Vroom might make an effort to have an appropriation set aside for his farm school.

TO CALL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

State Committee to Meet for the Purpose Next Tuesday.

Trenton, August 17.—The Republican State Committee will meet in Trenton next Tuesday for the purpose of fixing the date for the State convention to nominate a Gubernatorial candidate. The convention is called to meet at 12 o'clock noon.

Somerset County Fair.

The Somerset County Fair will be held on the Somerville fair grounds, Sept. 13th, 14th and 15th. The management has prepared an excellent programme of races for three days. The exhibition of agricultural products, fancy work, etc., will be worth the price of admission. There will also be several new and novel amusements. The grounds can be reached by the Brunswick and New York and Philadelphia Traction Companies, the Central or Lehigh Valley Railroad.

—Press want ads bring results.

—The Christian Endeavor Society consecration service at the First Baptist church next Friday evening will be conducted by Miss Julia Shinn, and the subject will be "Practical Uses of the Bible."

CYCLE RIDER HELD UP BY THREE ROUGH MEN

Sandford Robinson Had a Hair-raising Experience.

COMING FROM WESTFIELD.

ANOTHER BICYCLIST APPEARED IN THE NICK OF TIME.

The Highwaymen Struck Him With Some Pliable Object That Partially Dazed Him—Grabbed His Arm, But He Broke Loose and Rode Off—Shots Were Fired by the Desperadoes But None Went Near Victim.

Sandford Robinson, junior clerk in the law office of Judge DeMeza, went through a thrilling and hair-raising experience Monday night while returning from Westfield on a bicycle. He was speeding along at a rapid pace when he approached the section of road where it is skirted by woods near Graceland. The moon was out and a short distance down the road he saw the outline of three men. No thought of highwaymen entered his mind, but just before he reached the spot where the men had halted he noticed that they did not spread apart so as to give him a clear road to pass on. He turned a little and slackened his speed as he came near them.

Just as he reached the party he saw the quick movement of the one nearest to him and the next instant he felt a quick, hard blow of some pliable object settle across his face on the upper lip. The blow stunned him and he partially fell and jumped from his bicycle. Robinson recognized the men as uncouth, and one of them grabbed his arm in a gruff manner. Though dazed and confused the young cyclist struggled to free himself from the grasp, and just at that moment he saw another cyclist coming from the direction of Plainfield. He gave a faint yell for help, and as the other rider neared the scene of the holdup the highwaymen released their hold and Robinson sprang forward and mounted his bicycle a few feet away.

The desperadoes run to the side of the road and fired a revolver two or three times, but if they aimed at the fleeing bicyclist their shots went wild.

Robinson was joined by the other bicyclist and they hastily rode back to Westfield, where they stopped at a hotel. The blood was flowing from Robinson's mouth and his lip was swollen to twice its natural size. The injuries were washed and dressed and Robinson took a train for this city.

Except for a slight swelling of his upper lip, and an aversion to undergo a similiar experience again, he is feeling all right.

YUM! YUM! PEACHES!

The Palate Tickled by Mizpah Circle of King's Daughters.

A very successful peach festival was held in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church last Tuesday by the members of the Mizpah Circle of the King's Daughters, an organization connected with the church. There was a large attendance and the evening passed off very successfully.

The church was decorated with golden-rod, hydrangeas and cut flowers, while several booths were arranged about the walls. The Misses Foster, Miss Smith and Miss Ackerman had general charge of the whole affair and assisted in the different departments, Miss Manning and Miss Ackerman presided at the cake table, Miss Whitely and Miss Wenzel were occupied at the cashier's desk. George Parker kindly volunteered to assist in the kitchen, where his services were greatly appreciated.

Possible Extension of the Trolley.

According to the announcement of the officials of the Brunswick Traction Company there is a remote possibility that the trolley line of that company will be extended through to Perth Amboy. This is due to the fact that satisfactory terms cannot be made with the Board of Aldermen of Perth Amboy.

David Kenney, of the borough, has gone to Baltimore on business.

Miss Mary Compton, daughter of Halstead Compton, of West Front street, is stopping at Loon Lake, in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. George Hauser and children, of Duer street, are visiting Mrs. Hauser's mother, Mrs. Altenheip, of Jersey City Heights.

Rev. E. L. Walz, Jr., will return to his charge in South Carolina today after a short visit at his father's home on LaGrande avenue.

Bradley Smalley, of Belvidere avenue, has secured a position as one of the officials at the Charter Oak races to be held at Hartford, Conn., in September.

MONTCLAIR DEFEATED IN A STUBBORN FIGHT.

Riverdale Field Club Won the Deciding Game.

RE-OPENING OF BASEBALL.

CRESCENT OVAL SAW AN EXCITING GAME SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Plainfield's New Baseball Organization Won From Montclair's Pets—Riverdales Made an Excellent Showing—It Was a Pretty Game Throughout—Home Team Won by Score of 4 to 2.

It was not until Fred Smith had fielded the ball squarely in Wood's hands and the umpire yelled "Man out," that the suspense was over and anybody knew who had won the game. Then the game was over and the Riverdale Field Club had won the deciding game from the Montclair Athletic Club by a score of 4 to 2.

It has been many moons since Plainfield was treated to such a fine exhibition of ball playing as was seen on the Crescent Oval. What made the game particularly interesting was the closeness throughout. Neither side had any decided advantage and each inning seemed likely to put a new phase on the game.

Twice before have the Riverdales and Montclair boys met. The first time, the Montclairites won, then the Riverdales were victorious, and Saturday afternoon the deciding game was fairly won by the Riverdales, now of Plainfield.

The game was an experiment in two ways. The Riverdale management wanted to see what they could do in Plainfield while the Plainfield enthusiasts wanted to see what kind of a game they were to see before they came out too strong for the new arrivals. Suffice it to say that they were more than pleased. The Riverdale boys played a good snappy game, full of life and energy. There was not any loafing and the Crescents would have found in them formidable rivals had the two clubs met.

The Montclair nine came over well strengthened for the match. Harrison, the great Princeton pitcher, did not show up at the start and Terry went in the box where he remained throughout the game. Harrison came in time, however, to take part in the second inning and went out in the left field.

Harry Westervelt, not Huyler Westervelt, was in the box for the Riverdales. He had plenty of speed and a variety of curves that the Montclair batters could not find. "Warry" MacLaughlin was on the bench for the Riverdales ready to take Westervelt's place, had he shown any signs of weakening.

The game began with careful playing by both teams and for the first two innings neither side did anything. In the third, however, Harrison hit safely for one base. Cadmus, who ran for him, stole second and reached third on a fumble by Reinacker. Bernard filed out to Fred Smith, and Wheeler, the ex-Princeton player and captain of the Montclairs, succumbed to Westervelt's curves and was struck out.

In their half of the inning, the Riverdales went in to score. Will Smith hit safely, stole second and was advanced to third on a sacrifice by Wood. Then Westervelt made a pretty hit sending him home. That ended the scoring that inning.

In the fourth, the Riverdales tried it again, Hays reached first on a juggled grounder by Bernard. He was forced out at second by a short infield ball by Hardy. Romig sacrificed sending Hardy to second. Will Smith again distinguished himself by a clean hit far over in right field on which Hardy scuddy home and Smith got round to second on the thrown-in. Wood ended the inning by a fly to Bernard.

The Montclairs tried hard in the fifth. With one out and one man on base, Harrison hit a ball down the foul line to first base which Wood did not get. The umpire and every man on the Riverdale team declared it was foul. The Montclairites hopped up and down and yelled "fair ball." Then there was a consultation. The umpire, Arthur Lederer, stuck to his decision and the chairman of the base ball committee of the Montclair A. C. lost his temper and was going to order his team off the field. Good counsel prevailed and Harrison went back and the game went on. The Montclairs did not score that inning, however.

It was in the next their fun came. Wheeler went out to Easton, Wood followed with a foul fly to Hays. Then Terry sent a long drive out to Hardy who misjudged the ball and let it escape him. Terry reached second and soon went to third on a passed ball. It was Reinacker's turn next and he fooled a grounder allowing Terry to score and Fountain to reach first. Burke sent one out to Will Smith who let it go through his hands. Fountain reached third and Burke second. A pretty hit by Clements brought in Fountain but it was fielded to Romig in sufficient time to catch Burke at third and end the inning with the score 2 to 2.

Nothing else happened until the last half of the eighth when Easton opened the inning by taking first on four balls. Fred Smith bunted, advancing Easton to second. Cadmus fumbled Hays' grounder and Easton reached third. Hays stole second without delay and then Hardy batted to short. Easton bolted for home and Bernard sent the ball there, but Drake, at the critical moment, dropped it, and Easton and Hays both scored amid the vociferous applause of the audience. Romig and Will Smith ended the inning.

In the ninth Montclair tried hard to catch up and filled two of the bases. There were two outs, however, and Harrison ended the inning with a hot grounder to Fred Smith, which was carefully deposited in Wood's waiting glove. Then the flood gates of the enthusiasts were opened.

The individual scores were as follows:

WILL COMPETE ON ROAD.

LAST OF LISTER'S ROAD RACES TO BE HELD SEPTEMBER 1ST.

List of Prizes for the Event Announced —The Distance Fifteen Miles—Course Will be the Same as the Last Race.

The last of the series of three road races arranged by Harry K. Lister is now announced for Thursday afternoon, Sept. 1st. The distance has been set at fifteen miles, and the preparations and prizes for the event will be more elaborate than at any of the preceding races. Consequently a larger number of entries is expected.

The race is scheduled to start at 4 o'clock sharp. It will be held over the same course as the last one. The start will be made on Park avenue, 300 yards south of Randolph road. The riders will then go to Pumptown by Oak Tree, round the pump and return as far as Campbell's roadhouse, making the turn about the house. The course will then lead back to Pumptown, by Oak Tree as before, and back, finishing at the starting point.

A corps of competent officials and checkers will see that there is no error in the completing of the course and the finish.

A particularly acceptable list of prizes has been announced by Harry Lister, who is in charge. The first time prize will be a diamond ring, the second time, a solid gold stick pin. The prizes for the order of finishing will be as follows: First, mandolin; second, set of racing tires; third, racing suit; fourth, bicycle racing shoes; fifth, silk umbrella, and sixth, bicycle saddle.

The riders will enter with Harry K. Lister. The entries will close Monday, August 29th.

All the local men will probably enter. Bichter will have to meet Ray Poole, Harry Cuming and all the other riders that he defeated in the last race and he will have to do some fast work to get away from them this time. It is hoped that Peter Simmonds will decide to enter and meet his old rivals.

Hanson and Cunningham, the Perth Amboy men who started in the other, are both anxious to start in this race and promise to bring a number of the other fast men from that town to compete. New Brunswick will send over a squad of her best riders while the other towns in the neighborhood are preparing to fit their local champions to meet in the race.

Fell Overboard From a House-boat.

Miss Sarah Ball, of Myrtle avenue, met with a rather exciting experience two weeks ago while cruising on the house-boat of her father, F. H. Ball, in Great South Bay. While lowering a pail over the side for water, she lost her balance and fell in. Her brother, Fred C. Ball, saw her fall and sprang overboard. He soon landed her in a place of safety. No ill-effects followed the unexpected bath.

Collecting Back Taxes.

During the past few days Delinquent Tax Collector W. W. Bowley, of the borough, has succeeded in collecting a considerable amount of back taxes. The amount remaining on his books is comparatively small to that of previous years.

IT IS THE FIELD AGAINST VOORHEES.

The Governor's Friends Are Encouraged at the Outlook.

SOUTH JERSEY DISCONTENT.

MUTTERINGS IN G. O. P. RANKS MAY MAKE TROUBLE FOR LEADERS.

Senator Stokes and Congressman Fowler, Who Have Governor Voorhees' Candidacy in Hand, are Working Unceasingly For Its Success—Democratic Prospects in the State Legislature.

At Trenton during the past week the friends of Governor Voorhees have regained much lost ground and they feel much encouraged at the outlook. Senator Stokes and Congressman Fowler, who have in charge the Governor's boom, are working unceasingly for its success. The opposition to the Governor, however, is just as earnest as ever, and efforts are being silently made to form a combination among the other candidates with the intention of swamping him in the State convention. It is the field against Voorhees. Should he loose the nomination his supporters predict dire disaster to the Republican ticket in all parts of the State.

The Republicans, after all, are not so sure of electing their candidate for Governor. There is whispering here and there that no matter who is nominated he will have a hard row to hoe. The mysterious attitude assumed by the leaders and the fear that the Democrats may become united are the reasons which make the result of the campaign seem so doubtful in some Republican eyes. And then again the factional strife which exists in the Republican ranks, particularly in Essex and Hudson counties, threaten disaster at the polls. A well-known Republican makes the prediction that if the gubernatorial candidate is taken from those county he is sure to be defeated. The only hope is either Voorhees or Pitney, and even then victory is not so sure.

In South Jersey there are mutterings of discontent in the Republican ranks, which, it is stated, may effect a large decrease in the vote for Congressman Loudenslager and endanger the legislative ticket in such close counties as Salem, Cape May and Atlantic. Disappointed office-seekers are up in arms against Mr. Loudenslager, and the club they are using against him is loaded with their grievances. They do not expect to be able to defeat Mr. Loudenslager, but they will content themselves by reducing his majority so as to weaken his popularity.

Should the Democrats make gains in their legislative ticket in South Jersey their prospects for securing a majority on joint ballot would be very much heightened. The Democratic plan of campaign for capturing the Legislature, of course, has not been disclosed, nor will it be until the time comes to give it effect. It is known, however, that the Democratic leaders feel confident that even should they fail to elect their ticket in Essex county, they will have enough votes to give them a majority on joint ballot. No matter what the cost, it is stated that Senator Smith must be re-elected. He has powerful friends and the most influential support, and consequently the legislative campaign on his side will be most vigorously prosecuted.

With a strong candidate for Governor such as John P. Stockton, for instance, enthusiasm unbounded would mark the Democratic campaign, and in the midst of it even Republican citadels would be made points of attack. The capturing of the State Senate would receive earnest attention.

There are holding over eight Republican and six Democratic Senators. To retain control of the Senate the Republicans need only carry three counties. It would seem that Cumberland, Ocean and Mercer are Republican property, judging from previous records. But the Democrats believe they can wrest one, if not two of these from the Republicans, while they feel confident of electing their candidates in all of the counties of Hudson, Bergen, Morris and Atlantic. Then they would have the Senate.

A Republican hold-over Senator said a day or two ago that he did not feel very certain that his party would hold the Senate. He saw danger ahead, and he feared, owing to the mysterious attitude assumed by the big Republican leaders that the party machinery was considerably out of gear. Still he hoped for the best.

The situation at present on both sides seems much befogged, and a clearing of the skies is not expected for several weeks yet.

Chicken Thieves Again.

Who's got Frank Hedden's Brahma rooster? The bird, a big fellow, weighing twelve pounds, mysteriously disappeared a few days ago from the chicken house and has not been seen since. Frank thinks that some one has stolen the fowl.

CROSSES THE OCEAN TO GAIN A FORTUNE.

Richard Menzel Expects to Get $10,000 His Father Left.

MUST SUE THE GUARDIAN.

HIS FATHER'S LAST INSTRUCTIONS WERE NOT FOLLOWED OUT.

Mr. Menzel Made the Trip a Few Weeks Ago and Succeeded in Getting the Case Into the Courts, and Now He Returns to Germany With His Family to Remain at Breslau till May.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Menzel and two children, Margie and Helen, sailed Saturday from New York on the steamship Palavia, of the Hamburgh-American Line, for Bresslau, Germany, to visit Mr. Menzel's mother. They will be absent until next May.

About one month ago Mr. Menzel went to Breslau in response to a letter from his mother stating that there is a chance to settle up the estate owned by them. He investigated the matter and secured the services of one of the best lawyers in Berlin, and the case will now be opened.

When Mr. Menzel's father died a guardian was appointed for the son. He was to invest the son's share in securities so that at the proper time the latter would be able to secure his bequest.

The guardian acted contrary to instructions and invested the money in other ways, which resulted in its loss. Now Mr. Menzel is bringing action against the guardian and the estate for what is due him, about $10,000, and the chances are that he will get the money.

Mr. and Mrs. Menzel will stop at Hotel Breeslau, which is kept by a relative, and which is one of the swell summer resorts in that part of the country. They will remain there until next May, as they do not want to cross the ocean in the winter time with their children.

While Mr. Menzel is away his music store on West Front street will be managed by Harry C. Yaeger, of Liberty street.

MR. VAIL EXONERATED.

COURT OF CHANCERY CLEARS HIM OF DIVORCE CASE CHARGES.

Advisory Master Williams Says That His Conduct Was Not as the Charges Made It—Counsel Contradict Argument.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Newark, August 15.—The argument in the Corey divorce case, which has been dragging along in the Court of Chancery for several month past, was ended Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock when William Newcorn, for the petitioner, closed his argument. Immediately after that Advisory Master Williams, before whom the case has been heard, made an important statement.

After hearing all the evidence in the case, Advisory Master Williams stated that he felt it his duty to lose no time in declaring the innocence of the charges that had been made against former Postmaster Wallace Vail, of Plainfield, who was named as corespondent in the petition. He said that he had carefully heard the evidence and weighed the arguments and was convinced that there was nothing to cast even a suspicion upon Mr. Vail, and that he was honorably and fully discharged from all the accusations in the petition. Mr. Vail received many congratulations in court as a result of the vindication made by the court.

Before adjournment was made an additional counsel fee of $100 was ordered to be paid by the petitioner to Mrs. Corey's lawyers, and the weekly payment of $8 for court expenses was ordered discontinued.

As to the charges against Joseph Gavin, the court decided to reserve its determination till a later date.

CONCERT AND DANCE.

A Pleasant Evening Spent at the Hotel Munterston Saturday.

There was a big attendance at the concert given in the Hotel Hunterston Saturday evening. Besides the guests at the hotel there were a number of others present. The concert was arranged by the Hunterston orchestra. It included several selections by the orchestra, a contralto solo by Miss Katheryn Krymer, of New York, two cornet solos by J. Berger, a solo by Edward T. Droesdell and a clever sleight-of-hand performance by Prof. Vanetti.

At the conclusion of the concert, which was heartily encored, the Saturday evening hop was held. The spacious parlors were thrown open to the dancers and were soon well filled with whirling and gliding couples. The dance was a most successful event.

Laurens VanBuren, of Central avenue, is a guest at the Pocono Mountain House and led the German there, which was the crowning social event of last week at that attractive resort.

MEMBERS LOSE FAITH IN LOAN ASSOCIATION.

N. J. Central Building and Loan Association Under Suspicion.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE.

PLAINFIELD WILL CO-OPERATE WITH BLOOMFIELD BRANCH.

It is Said That the Officers of the Concern do Not Provide the Members With Information That Satisfies Them Everything is All Right—Lawyer Codington and A. B. Thorn Appointed as the Committee.

There was a meeting of the stockholders of the New Jersey Central Building and Loan Association Friday evening in the Board of Trade rooms for the purpose of taking some action regarding the interests of the members. It has been reported that the condition of the association at the Newark headquarters is unsafe. In response to a request from the Bloomfield branch, a committee was appointed to confer with a like committee from the Bloomfield branch for the purpose of ascertaining what steps can be taken against the officers at headquarters. Lawyer W. R. Codington and A. B. Thorn were appointed on the committee and they will at once communicate with the committee from Bloomfield and appoint a time for a meeting to be held soon.

The members of the Bloomfield branch say that there is something wrong with the management of the association, and after repeated efforts, it is alleged, they have been unable to get the information they seek. They have examined the books at headquarters and cannot satisfy themselves that the accounts are straight.

It appears that at least $40,000 has been received at headquarters since the association was formed a year ago last January, and of that amount it is said that about $12,000 is out on second mortgages of doubtful character. All the money in cash that the committee was able to find was $140 in the Essex County National Bank, of Newark. When the officers of the association were asked concerning the rest of the money received they were unable to give a satisfactory account of it.

It is for these reasons that it has been deemed best to take some other action regarding the management of the association at headquarters.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Plainfield is now enjoying a Chinese laundry war, the price for laundering a shirt has been steadily dropping. It is now six cents and Plainfielders are reveling in the unusual luxury of two clean shirts a week.—New Brunswick Times.

Another Disciples' Mission has been started, this time at Plainfield. Plenty of room for this kind of mission work, and the more of it the better. Where is the enterprise that will start it here in Westfield, where there is an element that subscribes for but not to? The good old plea is heard gladly; but it needs to be spoken more generally.—Westfield Republican.

The Board of Freeholders meet again Monday afternoon to consider the bid of the Elizabeth City Railway for the county trolley franchise. Every citizen must admit that this is a question in which the future growth and prosperity of the county is concerned, and it is a matter of vital importance. At the meeting last week the sentiment of the people was fairly presented by the large attendance of citizens who favored the acceptance of the bid, but as is suggested by communications in today's Journal, there should be at Monday's meeting a still larger representation of the citizens who recognize the opportunity Mr. Kean's liberal offer gives to the county, and thus by a strong and united action convince the freeholders that the interests of the county demands its acceptance.—Elizabeth Journal.

Death of Miss Stevens.

The death of Miss Ellen Stevens, aged thirty-seven years, occurred Saturday morning at 3 o'clock from tumor on the brain. She had been ill for a long time and her death was not wholly unexpected. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the house, 556 West Second street, and interment was at Samptown cemetery.

Lived to a Ripe Age.

The death of Mrs. Harriet N. Lugar, widow of the late Jeremiah Lugar, occurred last Saturday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John H. French, 10 Willow avenue. Mrs. Lugar was in the eighty-second year of her age, and she had been feeble for a long time. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the house on Willow avenue at 4 o'clock.

FEARED FOR HIS LIFE.

SO STOREKEEPER GOLD HAD THE COLORED BOY ARRESTED.

Says That the Lad Threatened to Kill Him and Cut Out His Heart—The Prisoner was a Diminutive One.

Samuel Gold is a Hebrew. He runs a little shop up in the West End where he sells candy, tobacco and cigars to those who care to buy. Now, a few days ago Gold had some trouble with a colored individual, whom, he alleges, swore at him in horrid fashion and also threatened to kill him and cut out his heart. Gold, not caring to live under the constant fear of finding his house toppling down over his head or meeting with some other awful fate, reported to the police and swore out a complaint before City Judge Demeza.

Saturday the case came up before His Honor in the dingy little court room at the city jail. Garfield Perkins was called for as the prisoner, and he marched up to the rail of justice.

Now the rail is not very high. In fact, it is not over three feet high. When the prisoner marched up his eyes just looked over the top of it, and the Judge was given a view of two wide-open eyes and a woolly head. Garfield is twelve years of age.

The Judge tried to think of a youthful offender like Perkins trying to kill Gold and cut his heart out, but his imagination would not stretch as far as that. So the Judge announced that he would investigate the case and think it over. The principals were instructed to come again next Saturday.

CLIMAX TEAM WON EASY

SECOND CONTEST IN CENTRAL NEW JERSEY TRAP-SHOOTING LEAGUE.

Shoot Held at Bound Brook, Where the Weather Conditions Were Excellent—The Scores Made by Competitors.

The 2d shoot of the Central New Jersey Trap-Shooters' League took place at the grounds of the Bound Brook Gun Club Saturday afternoon. There were three teams present competing for the Peters' Cartridge Company's trophy.

The Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, were easy winners, and the members did not have to exert themselves. The day was a good one for shooting, with out much sun and delightfully cool. There were present a number of the prominent sportsmen from this vicinity. After the match there were several sweepstakes shot, in which the honors were fairly evenly divided.

The New Brunswick Gun Club has joined the league and will have a team in the next shoot, which will be held under the auspices of the Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, Saturday afternoon, Sept. 8th. The shoot will be held at the grounds near Fanwood.

The scores of the match were as follows:

STEAL TOO MANY APPLES.

Halsey Compton Suffers From Depredations by Boys in West End.

Halsey Compton says that he has to pay the taxes on an orchard he owns in the west end of the city, but that depredations of small and mischevious boys who like to taste of the forbidden fruit are so often that in the past few years he hasn't even secured enough from the fruit to pay for the taxes. It is thus that he has asked the city to arrest the offenders in return for the taxes he pays. Sunday Mr. Compton detected four youngsters making a raid on his choice trees and he immediately proceeded to catch them. But the youngsters are very spry, and all but one got away. That one was Robert Scott, who got bottled up in a chicken-coop while trying to get out of the way and was captured and turned over to the police.

Next morning Sir Robert was before Judge DeMeza and acknowledged that he took five apples. When the Judge heard that there were other boys implicated in the affair, he adjourned the case till Saturday to give the police a chance to arrest those who escaped Sunday.

Which Tells the Truth.

The complainant, Mrs. Mary Eskeson, says that she did, Mrs. Maria Homan says that she did not, and now the City Judge is called upon to decide which one is telling the truth. The terrible offence was calling naughty names down on West Fourth street. Last Saturday, Maria Honan was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza. The case was adjourned, however, for a week.

TRIED NEW WAY OF DRIVING TROTTERS.

Prize for One Who Could Go Two Miles Closest to Six Minutes.

MANY HORSES IN THE RACE.

DOUGLASS DARBY'S BROWN MARE "MINNIE" WAS THE WINNER.

Kills Campbell and J. Wesley Johnson Tied for a Second and Tom of Coin Gave Prize to the Latter—The Exhibition of Speed at a Certain Gait was Very Interesting to All.

One of the best programmes of the season was presented at the track of the Plainfield Driving Association last Saturday afternoon. There was a large crowd of interested people present, showing how popular horse-racing has become. The feature of the afternoon was the three-minute trot open to all comers for a silver pitcher presented by J. Wesley Johnson, of the association. Great interest was shown in this exhibition. There were ten entries and each owner drove his own horse. Generally speaking, excellent time was made.

The first prize was for the horse that could trot two heats the closest to six minutes. Douglass Darby was the winner. His brown mare "Minnie" showed up in great form and rolled off the two miles in fine condition. For second prize, Ellis Campbell and J. Wesley Johnson were a tie and at their own suggestion they tossed up a coin for honors. Mr. Johnson won the toss and he selected the horse blanket as second prize, while Mr Campbell took the remaining prize, a horse whip. Below will be found in detail just what each horse did:

	1st heat	2d heat	Total
N. B. Smalley's Ned Norton	2:31½	3:13	6:44
H. Hayes' Bay	3:17	3:18	6:35½
Douglass Darby's Minnie	3:20	3:09½	6:29½
Tom Smith's Prince	3:15	3:14	6:29
C. E. Wright's Argyle	3:30	3:04½	6:34½
Phil Jenner's Lida Mack	3:30	3:01	6:31
Harry Wynde's Jersey Boy	3:30	3:13	6:43
S. H. Edwards' Molly Prince	3:33	3:05½	6:38½
J. Wesley Johnson's mixture	3:20	3:11	6:31
W. A. Coddington's Belle	3:20	3:20	6:39

During the afternoon there were two good races. One was in the 2:30 class, in which were entered Douglass Darby's horse, "Sunday;" John H. MacLoughlin's horse, "Charles Tammany," and T. Hendrickson's horse, "Tom B." Mr. Darby's horse won the first heat in 2:30, while Mr. MacLoughlin's horse came in first in the second heat with the time of 2:33½. The third heat was not given.

Another interesting race took place between J. W. Johnson's "Woven Wind," driven by John Osborn, and N. B. Smalley's new trotter, "Kittie Roe," driven by himself. It was the 2:35 class and "Woven Wind" won both heats. The first in 2:33 and the second in 2:33½.

Those who acted as timers during the afternoon were J. Wesley Johnson, Thomas Brantingham and W. F. Williams.

In the exhibition three-minute trot only one horse was allowed on the track at a time, and this was a feature that the crowd enjoyed. The three prizes offered were given by Mr. Johnson, and he was complimented for his public spirit and enterprise in his efforts to bring out some good horses.

STATE ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

To be Held in Asbury Park in September.

The twelfth annual convention of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Asbury Park, September 28-30. A special Christian Endeavor train, on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, for Endeavorers and their friends, will leave Somerville Wednesday morning, September 28th, about 9 o'clock, going through to Asbury Park; returning, will leave Asbury Park Saturday morning, October 1st. Only those having special Christian Endeavor tickets, issued and for sale by the transportation committee, will be taken on this train. Persons from stations beyond Somerville and Elizabethport, or from branch roads, can secure tickets from the committee and connect at either of the above named stations. The committee include Rev. T. E. Davis and F. N. Voorhees, of Bound Brook; Rev. D. R. Warne, of Kingston, and Rev. W. E. Davis, of Lebanon.

Watermelon Cutting Party.

Last Saturday evening there was an entertainment and watermelon cutting party at the home of Mrs. David Bush, corner of Pearl street and Watchung avenue, for the benefit of Pastor McKane, of the Christian church. The affair was largely attended and the net proceeds gratifying. During the evening the Misses DeMott, Mrs. A. D. Pope and Rev. and Mrs. McKane furnished vocal music for the audience, while Mrs. Andrew Cox gave several recitations. Following the entertainment the watermelon cutting took place and ice cream was served. Those present liberally patronized the refreshment department and assisted materially in helping the pastor.

—The next concert to be given by the Queen City Band at the City Hotel will take place Wednesday evening, August 24th.

BOUND BROOK WANTS TO INTERVIEW YOUNG

Would Like To Know Where the Promoter Is.

HE WAS TO BUILD A FACTORY.

BOUGHT LAND AND RUN UP BILLS, THEN DISAPPEARED.

The Boomer Claimed to Come From Pennsylvania—Bought Land on Which to Build the Factory—Several Citizens Lent Him Money and Now They Are Sorry for It—Not Expected to Return

This place is anxiously awaiting the return of Charles Young, who was going to start a wood pulp pail factory. Young, as he called himself, was a promoter of the first-class. He arrived in Bound Brook about three weeks ago with his boom. He represented himself to be the ex sheriff of a Pennsylvania county and a member of the firm of Charles Young & Bro., of Stroudsburg, Pa. The boom he brought to town has fizzled out and Young has slipped away, leaving behind him a lot of dazed contractors and material men.

Young started well. First he bought a plot of ground about 360 by 160 feet, and announced that he was going to put up a factory 200 by 60 feet and employ about 200 hands. The ground was purchased from Miss S. L. Fisher, who owns the Middlebrook Hotel. She was to get $5 a foot for the property.

Young sank a well on the place and went to work getting up his factory. The foundation was put in and material was dumped on the lot and then there was a transformation scene. Work stopped, people wanted their money and young left town.

Miss Fisher fared better than anybody else. He did not pay her a cent on the property, but the well, which was down 125 feet, is a good one. Frank Wheeland, who drove the well, however, is out $125. Other sufferers from Young's boom that fizzled are numerous. L. B. Cook & Co. furnished lumber, lime and cement for the building. They recovered a portion of it before it had been worked up. T. R. Hedges furnished the brick for the foundation. It is in the wall, and Mr. Hodge doesn't know just how to recover it, or whether it is worth the labor.

John H. King set the foundation and was so much impressed with Mr. Young's talk that he lent Young $5. Mr. King's friends think he was hypnotized. It is the first time that anybody has succeeded in "Sim-flamming" Mr. King out of $5. Young ordered varnish worth $200 from G. H. Casterlin and got about a quarter of it delivered. Casterlin has recovered it. William Fuer, the hotelkeeper, is poorer by $10 through his experience with Young. Jacob Fudy, the carpenter, and Kline, who did the mason work, have not received a cent for their services, and are about the heaviest losers.

The clothier was not neglected by Young, who bought stuff worth $20 from A. E. Gildes, who is congratulating himself that the promoter did not make the bill $20 or $100. In the course of his career in town Mr. Young ran up a bill for livery with George Gillespie. The bill is still unpaid. He bought a team of horses and a wagon from Stonewall Jackson, which Mr. Jackson has recovered since Young went away.

Among Young's other schemes was the putting up of a hotel near the proposed factory. He bought from J. Hicks McCord a plot of ground for $2,300 for that purpose. E. VanSyckel & Son had rented to him several houses for the company's employes.

Since Young's disappearance several inquiries have been made about him at Stroudsburg. Neither he nor the company which he said he represented is known in Stroudsburg, and Bound Brook is charging Young's visit up to profit and loss.

NO PERMIT.

So G. H. Kenyon Gave Up His Proposed Race Meet.

G. H. Kenyon, who held the race meet on Maltby's track a week ago, was planning to hold a twenty-five mile road race over the Fanwood-Scotch Plains course September 1st. He has now definitely decided to give the race up. He applied for permission to hold the race to Chief Grant in the absence of Mayor Fisk. The Chief was not inclined to grant it, and knowing that the race must be started at once or not at all, Kenyon gave it up.

Fixing Up the Streets.

Men in the employ of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company began Thursday to level the streets through which they ran their conduits, according to arrangements made at a recent meeting of representatives of the company with members of the street committee. The hard-packed dirt which was heaped over the ditches made excellent bicycle paths, which are now cut away and destroyed.

LARGE CUCUMBER VINE.

CURIOUS PLANT THAT IS GROWING IN CHARLES STIMPSON'S GARDEN

The Seeds Resembled Acorns, But They Grew Rapidly—Increased as Much as Six Inches in One Night—Common in the West

The "California cucumber" is the homely appelation by which a rapidly-growing vine in the garden of Charles Stimpson, of West Sixth street, is known. The plant deserves a nobler name, but with true western taste for brevity and distinctness, was dubbed the cucumber, and cucumber it still remains.

The plant is a curious one, and has attracted quite a little attention on account of the enormous fruit it bears as well as its phenomenally rapid growth.

Early this spring Mr. Stimpson received from a friend five brown seeds, in shape something like an acorn. They were planted in a box in a sunny part of the house until warm weather came, when they were transplanted in the garden.

The nature of the plant which was to be grown from these seeds was not fully known, and so the subsequent development of the vine has been as much of a novelty to its owner as to others. After a long time three of the seeds sprouted and sent forth green shoots. Almost from the first they showed an inclination to rapid growth, and the three shoots have since been growing at the rate of eight or ten inches a day.

The blossoms were a delicate white, four inches across, with six drooping petals, the design and pattern being perfect and regular. The blossoms were very frail, and soon withered when separated from the vine.

When the fruit or cucumber appeared it excited great interest. Growing rapidly, it sometimes lengthened at least six inches in a night. The vines were trained on a tressel, so as to permit the cucumbers to grow downwards and hang which prevented them curling up, as is usual with plants of this kind. The vines are full now of growing cucumbers. One gigantic fellow has far outstripped the others, and last night measured 4 1-2 feet in length. It is about four inches in diameter.

This one hangs so near the root that a hole has been dug under it to permit it to grow downwards without touching the ground and curling up and the hole is deepened as occasion requires. When ripe the cucumbers are good for food.

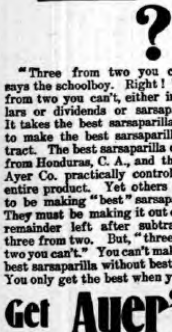
The plant belongs to the gourd family (cucurbitaceæ) and to the branch known as the 'bur seeded cucumber." It is quite common in the west from Kansas to the Pacific coast, but is seldom seen so far east as New Jersey. Just how much longer this gigantic fellow will grow is not known, but as yet it shows no signs of turning yellow and going to seed which is their natural end.

New Telephones.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company will soon continue the work of putting in the new style of instruments on the party wire. The new instruments are of the selective system, already described in The Press. A shipment of a hundred new instruments is expected daily.

The Mayor's Good Work.

The members of Holy Cross church are much pleased with a new flooring in the vestibule of their church edifice, as well as new stairs connecting the parish building with the church. The improvements were made as a gift of Mayor Wilson to the church.



"Three from two you can't," says the schoolboy. Right! Three from two you can't, either in dollars or dividends or sarsaparilla. It takes the best sarsaparilla root to make the best sarsaparilla extract. The best sarsaparilla comes from Honduras, C. A., and the Dr. Ayer Co. practically controls the entire product. Yet others claim to be making "best" sarsaparilla. They must be making it out of the remainder left after subtracting three from two. But, "three from two you can't." You can't make the best sarsaparilla without best root. You only get the best when you which is made wholly from the best root imported from Honduras.

SEARCH FOR BODIES ON THE BROAD OCEAN

A Plainfielder at the Head of an Unusual Expedition.

MANY DEAD BODIES FOUND.

JUDGE DILLON WANTED TO SECURE BODIES OF WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

During the Three Days that the Hiawatha Sailed Around the Vicinity Where the Bourgogne Went Down Thirty-one Bodies Were Found, Six of Which Were Identified and Buried.

It is not an easy task to search for bodies on the broad Atlantic. It is a difficult feat, indeed, to locate them in the trackless expanse of an ocean. It was accomplished, however, by the expedition that sailed from Halifax in the steamer Hiawatha, headed by George S. Clay, of LaGrande avenue, this city. The object of the expedition was to find the bodies of the victims of the Bourgogne disaster, reported to be floating about the ocean, and find, if possible, whether they included the bodies of the wife and daughter of ex-Judge John F. Dillon and those of the wife, three daughters and son of John Perry, of Kansas City. Mr. Clay came to take charge of the expedition through his association with Judge Dillon as his private secretary.

Judge Dillon brought all his influence to bear on the French Line to persuade them to send out a ship to find the bodies after they were reported by the Captain of the Oilfields July 23d. That was Thursday. The Judge wished the French Line to send out a ship to save all the bodies possible and bring them to land.

In the meantime, Mr. Clay went to Philadelphia and saw Captain Shawyer of the Oilfields, and learned all the circumstances. Sunday, July 24th, he went to see the Judge and left that night for Halifax. Then the French Line telegraphed that it would be impracticable and impossible to send out a steamer.

Mr. Perry was communicated with and agreed to get up a private expedition with Judge Dillon. Mr. Clay was instructed to charter a steamer and proceed to the point designated by the captain of the Oilfields.

The steamer Hiawatha, Captain Fenwick Hatt, was immediately chartered by Mr. Clay, and sailed Friday, July 29th. Besides Mr. Clay, there was Dr. H. S. Jacques, who is an expert on identifying bodies, Undertaker Snow, his two assistants and a plumber, in addition to the regular crew.

Mr. Clay was ill a greater part of the time but still was able to direct the expedition. Not finding the bodies at the point designated they sailed northeast, spoke the steamer Londonian and learned that she had seen bodies and wreckage at a point 72 miles to the northwest. Arriving there they made ever increasing circles until Sunday morning, July 31st, they found the first body. During the next three days they found thirty-six bodies, six of which were positively identified. Mr. Clay carefully noted all the marks of identification as reported by the physician.

The missing ones that they were searching for were not to be found, however, and they returned to Halifax early this week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Clay returned to his home in this city. He brought with him a gold beaded cane, presented to him by Captain Hatt. The stick is made from the rail of a gangway on the foundered "Bourgogne," which was picked up out at sea by the Hiawatha.

ASSESSOR FRENCH'S WORK.

Borough Council Highly Compliments the New Official.

The Borough Council concluded its work last Thursday of examining the books of Assessor French. Four sessions of the Council were held and after the session last Thursday the Council was called to order by Mayor Wilson and approved the books. The Mayor and Council expressed themselves as being exceedingly well pleased with the work of Mr. French, who displayed rare judgment in his work. Mr. French was highly complimented by the officials. It will probably be some little time before the borough tax rate will be made known, but there seems to be no doubt but what it will please the majority of the property-owners.

Names of New Ships.

The names of "Hamilton" and "Jefferson" have been selected for the new steamships now building at Chester, Pa., for the Old Dominion Line, which are expected to be in commission late in the year. In this decision the directors of the company have departed from their custom of using geographical names, as it has seemed appropriate at this time to adopt the names of two of the greatest statesmen the country has produced, further representing as they do, both New York and Virginia, so far as their fame can be located.

THEY HELP SICK BABIES.

AN APPEAL FOR FUNDS TO SUPPORT THE SUMMER CAMP.

Admirable Work That the King's Daughters are Engaged in Needs the Help of Charitable Plainfield People.

The City Union of the King's Daughters wishes to call the attention of the public to the children's camp on the mountains. This camp is a small frame structure located on Johnston's Drive, about a mile from the Mountain Park Inn. It commands a beautiful view of the surrounding country for miles around.

Several times a week during the months of July, August and part of September, the little sick children of Plainfield are taken up to the camp for the day, and it is surprising to see what a benefit this little change is to them. This work is carried on by the King's Daughters, of Plainfield. Miss Hartranft, the city nurse, is manager of the camp.

The physicians endorse our efforts to help the little ones, but there is more or less expense attached to this work, which is carried on by voluntary contributions, which are greatly needed at present.

Donations of money will be appreciated by the committee and can be sent to the treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Coddington, 409 East Second street.

A THREE WEEKS' CRUISE.

Party of Plainfielders to Enjoy Themselves on a Yacht for Their Vacation.

Walter B. Rittenhouse, James A. Stafford and Charles B Morse, of this city, went to Bay Head Thursday where they engaged the yacht "Teal" for a three weeks' cruise down Barnegat Bay. The cruising party will consist of those mentioned and George A. Horne and Henry B. Duke, of the borough. They will not all go together but will be on the yacht for different intervals of the three weeks. Rittenhouse and Horne will, however, stay for the entire trip. Rittenhouse, Stafford and Horne will start Saturday, August 20, and the other two will join them later.

The yacht is a new one and fully equipped for a cruise. Last year it was known as the fastest boat in the bay, winning all the races in its class at the regatta there. It is twenty-seven feet long with a three-foot overhang. It has a complete little cabin with bunks.

The cruising party will start from Bay Head and sail down the bay to Beach Haven which they will make their headquarters. They will act as their own stewards and some wonderful cooking is expected.

Last year Rittenhouse and Sydney R. Titsworth cruised all through that section for two weeks and had a very enjoyable time.

FUNERAL OF MRS. BURT.

Large Gathering of Friends Paid Tribute of Respect to Her.

A large gathering of relatives and friends gathered to pay the last respects at the bier of Mrs. William C. Burt Wednesday afternoon, showing in what high esteem she was held by all who knew her. The funeral was held at 3 o'clock from the house, and was in charge of Rev. Dr. William C. O'Donnell and James McGee, both of the Monroe Avenue church, to which the deceased belonged.

The service was a simple one A selection from the Scripture was read, prayer offered, and a few remarks made by Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. McGee. Interment was in Bound Brook.

The bearers were C. C. Crawford, A. C. Stebbins, Thomas Crab, of Newark, Adam Neuman, L. L. Manning, John Praed, T. B. King and Blanchard Randolph. The flowers were very beautiful, and were sent in great profusion. As they were strewn over the casket they almost hid it from view.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT.

Detective Blackford and Harry Marshall Come to Agreement.

The interest in the expected sensational trial in the case of Blackford against Marshall, in Justice Nash's court has met with a sudden fall. The case, as the readers of this paper remember, was brought by Detective Blackford against Harry W. Marshall to recover money alleged to be due for his services as a detective. It was thought the case would be a rather exciting one. Those who were looking forward to such an event have now been disappointed. The case has now been settled.

Counselor Winfield S. Angleman was the lawyer for the detective and City Judge De Meza represented Mr. Marshall. There were several conferences but without success. This morning the lawyers met at the Justice's office and an agreement was reached, the exact terms of which are kept private. They are said to be satisfactory to both parties, however.

Tour to Niagara Falls.

FARMERS IN A DUEL WITH PITCHFORKS.

Quarrel Was Over the Disposition of Some Hay.

NEIGHBORS INTERFERED.

PRONG OF ONE OF THE FORKS PIERCED THE HAT OF ONE.

Fond Friends Once They Found Themselves Jabbing at Each Other in a Vicious Manner With the Forks—Farmer Wersing Didn't Like the Plan that Frazer Had Arranged.

"Just got married. And gracious sakes alive, I didn't want to be killed then." So says Farmer Joseph Frazer, of Stony Hill, in telling about it.

"Ach, mein Gott," exclaims his erstwhile friend, August Wersing, whose farm lies just above Washingtonville, on the road to Union Village, "the villain." A characteristic Dutch gesture adds more than words can express.

It was another happening on the Kenney farm that will be handed down to posterity as one of the events of a life time, a real duel between two well-known farmers armed with pitchforks. That it did not result in, perhaps, the fatal injury of one of them, was due only to the opportune arrival of the neighbors.

Frazer and Wersing had long been friends. They are both past middle age, but are hale and hearty still. Until this incident took place they were quite intimate and were frequently to be seen together.

This paper told some time ago of the purchase of the Kenney farm, back of Washingtonville, by Phillip Rorckwick, and the decision to cut it into building lots, calling the intended settlement Somerset Park. The grass was high and to Wersing was given the contract for cutting it, he to receive the grass in payment for the cutting.

Now it so happened that Wersing had no reaper, but Frazer did. Wersing lacked a horse-rake, while Frazer owned one. So it was that Wersing went to see his old friend and agreed to give him half the grass if he would give the use of his mowing-machine and horse-rake. The bargain was then made.

Frazer purchased another mowing machine and August 6th the two farmers with the necessary machines went to the Kenney farm and cut the grass. Monday they raked it up and started to haul it home.

The first load was taken in Frazer's hay wagon to Wersing's barn. The second went to Frazer. The two men then returned for the third. Then the idea began to dawn upon the brain of Wersing that he was coming out at the "little end of the horn," as the saying is. Frazer said that he would take the third load and Wersing the fourth.

Then trouble began. Frazer divided the hay-docks into two lots, one lot for himself and the other for Wersing. For the third load, they began to take those that Frazer had picked for his own. Wersing decided that he had not been treated fairly and that his neighbor was trying to get the best of him by taking the largest hay-cocks. He frankly said so.

The quarrel took on a more exciting phase. Wersing started for Frazer with blood in his eye and his pitchfork in his hand. Now Wersing had a pitcher's fork, eight feet long, and Frazer carried a loading fork which was only three feet long. Deeming discression the better part of valor, Frazer ran around the wagon, whereat Wersing followed, wildly waving his pitchfork. This chase continued until it was evident that Wersing could not catch the other.

Finding Frazer beyond the reach of his vengence, Wersing, it is said, turned on the horses and began to prod them with his fork. Frazer ran back and ordered him to stop. With a twist worthy of the famous "Little John" and his single stick, Wersing swung round his long fork and made a jab for his neighbor's neck.

Warding off the blow with his short fork, Frazer stood ready. Wersing's fork was so long as to be unwieldy and he could not recover himself in a moment. Then the other farmer tried to spear him with a vicious lunge of his trident.

The fork was going straight for the Dutchman's face when he ducked. Instead of spearing him the prongs of the fork passed through Wersing's broad-brimmed straw hat, lifting it from off his head. Then Frazer dodged back out of the reach of the long fork now ready for action.

With a fearful yell Wersing started for his old companion. It looked as if the end had arrived when an interruption came from an unexpected source. Some of the neighbors had seen the men running about the hay wagon. They also heard the yells. Deciding that the duel had continued long enough, they hurried to the scene of action and, interfered before Wersing could pry his spear.

Wersing was exceedingly wroth and wanted to be allowed to finish Frazer. Frazer hied himself at once to the top of the nearly-completed load of hay and watched proceedings with a fearful eye. At length he announced his decision of returning home with the load, and remarked that Wersing could have what was left and get it home the best way he could.

SAUCY TO THE JUDGE.

PRISONER'S SENTENCE DOUBLED ON ACCOUNT OF HIS IMPUDENCE.

Mike Gleason Said He Didn't Give a —— if He Went to Jail for Six Months, so the Judge Made Five $20 Instead of $10.

If Michael Gleason had kept a civil tongue in his head Thursday, when arraigned before City Judge DeMeza on a charge of being drunk and disorderly, he would have escaped with a fine of $10 or imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days. Instead, his sentence was just doubled, and unless Gleason can raise $20 somewhere, he is destined to spend the next two months with Warden Dodd at Elizabeth.

Gleason was very drunk Wednesday. Officer Myers saw him staggering around in "Tinkers' Alley" as the little lane that divides the rows of houses in Battle Row is called. He was cursing and swearing, and when the policeman took hold of him to lead him to the station house, Gleason struck out with both fists, and tried in other ways to escape from the grasp of the law.

Gleason had been handling barrels of ashes, and his hands were not very clean. He left his marks on Myers' clothing wherever he came in contact with it.

When arraigned in court Gleason denied the charges, but was found guilty.

"Ten dollars or 30 days," was the sentence of the court.

"I don't give a —— if you make it six months," growled Gleason as he was led away.

"What's that you said ?" called out the Judge. "I'll make it $20 or 60 days, and when you get out maybe you'll be better natured," he continued.

Gleason did not make any reply to this, fearing probably that the Judge would double the dose once more.

HOODOO FOR Y. M. C. A. CYCLERS.

Rain Came Last Thursday and the Schedule Run was Abandoned.

There seems to be a veritable hoodoo hanging over the heads of the Y. M. C. A. Cyclers of this city. The hoodoo usually appears in the shape of a big black cloud from which the rain falls to a greater or less extent, just sufficient to stop the club runs.

Thursday last the Y. M. C. A. riders made another attempt to hold a run. At least a run was scheduled, but the rain came instead of the riders. Consequently, Captain T. A. Cuming called off the run and gave the rain undisputed possession of the roads.

Seven times have the Y. M. C. A. Cyclists attempted to hold runs this season and five times has it rained and the run been given up. One time when they went, they had to plough through a dreary waste of mud all the way to Orange. Last year seven out of twelve runs were called off on account of rain.

There is a feeling of sadness among the members and a wish is expressed that it might be possible to hold a run and not have that hoodoo and the cloud hanging over their heads.

PYTHIAN FIELD DAY.

Knights Will Gather in Jersey City This Year.

Pythian Field Day will be celebrated in Jersey City this year, and large delegations of good and faithful Knights from all over the State are expected to be in attendance. The Field Day comes on Labor Day, September 5th. There will be a parade of Uniformed Ranks division, and contested drills. Jersey City Knights are making great preparations to receive the visitors.

Last year the exercises were held at Perth Amboy, and about eight years ago were held here. It is the intention of the order to visit every city in the State in turn, so that there can be no charges of partiality.

Married Very Quietly.

The marriage of Miss Grace Clark, daughter of Dr. Clark, of East Front street, to Adolphus Fryer, a druggist, of Branchville, Sussex county, is announced. The marriage was celebrated in a very quiet manner at Asbury Park, and Rev. A. G. Bale, of Asbury Park, performed the ceremony. The event was one of surprise to many who know both the bride and her husband. For the present they are stopping in this city, but they will soon take up their residence in Branchville.

More Fire Hydrants.

As a result of the extension of the water mains up Somerset street by the Plainfield Water Supply Company the borough will probably have two or three additional fire hydrants. It is expected that three hydrants, at least, will be ordered by the Council to be located on Somerset street, thus giving the residents in the upper part of the borough the protection they need.

JOY OF BADGER BOYS TO GET DELICACIES

Dr. Simpson Expresses Appreciation for the Recipients.

MAKES LIFE EASIER NOW.

WHILE ON BLOCKADE DUTY THEY WERE IN SAD WANT.

Nothing But Coarse Food and Warm Water For the Sick Previous to the Box Being Sent From Plainfield—First Use of the Delicacies Was to Nourish One of the Spanish Prisoners Who Was Sick.

Dr. M. S. Simpson, surgeon on the Badger, writes the following interesting letter to The Daily Press as a means of conveying the thanks of the Plainfield boys on the Badger for the box of delicacies and comforts which were forwarded to them a few weeks ago:

U. S. S Badger
Off Fort Taylor, Key West, Fla ,
August 5th 1898.

Personally and in behalf of the ships company I express our sincere gratitude for the kind contributions to our "Sick Bay" received today by express. The boxes were delivered aboard ship by a government tug and our bayman soon had the lids off and the contents unpacked. We have now an assortment of delicacies for the sick that we have heretofore sadly needed.

A feverish patient at sea in the tropics, the vessel rolling and pitching, the very thought of food detestable, mouth clammy, nauseated, breathing and throbbing finds it a hard matter to get nourishment from hard pilot bread, baked beans and warm water as we have often had it during the past two months. At one time we had a few limes, some canned fruits and salines, but these disappeared with the ice—our cruise being protracted between the time intended.

I assembled the Plainfield boys in the bay after "turn to" (6.00 p. m.) and let them get the many little presents that were included and specially designated, and it was like opening a Christmas box. Could the donors have seen the pleased faces that alone would have repaid all trouble and expense. Each very generously shared with his comrade and now they are as happy as boys, stowing the canned goods in the lockers.

The "Naval Reserve Library" we will carefully lay aside until our present reading matter is exhausted. Kind friends in Plainfield, too modest to favor us with their names, have sent us files of Courier and Press and as this has been accumulating here during the past four weeks we have considerable now but will have very little in a few days as we start for a cruise around Cuba.

As for myself, I found a delightful letter in the box from a little Plainfield patient—Ralph Runyon—and, appropriated the small silk flag, to the unknown donor of which I return thanks. It is very small but is now the only Federal flag the medical department of this ship possesses and I am going to carry it through the balance of the war and keep it as a souvenir.

We have aboard all the small boats that were left behind by Sampson's fleet and are to land them at Guantanamo where we await further orders—Porto Rico, we think, and it may be sometime before our friends get mail from us.

Among the many friends who have taken active interest in sending us this blessing, we recognize Mrs. Lawrence Myers, Mrs. Marie L. Mead, M. Estil, Mrs. Clinton Randolph, Miss Cora A. Sheppard, Mrs. J. Craig, M C. Dobbins, Edward White, David Bailey, Mrs. F. E. Keller, Miss Olive and Miss Emma Wikoff, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Dunham, Miss Anna C. DeKlyn, Miss Helen Fulton, Mrs. VanDeventer, G. W. Rockfellow, Harry Boyce, W. J. Ford, Wm. Paine, R. J. Shaw, F. W. Randolph, Scheuer & Sons, Mrs. J. H. Force, Woodhull & Martin, Tommy Timbo & Co. These, and to all others whose names we have been unfortunate enough not to obtain, and to the Courier-News and Press who have been so kind, we again thank most heartily.

In closing this I will add that the first use made of the Plainfield contribution was to make something palatable for a very sick Spanish soldier whom I have under my care.

Very respectfully,
Maxwell S. Simpson,
P. A. Surgeon U. S. N.

Jersey Soldiers May Not Vote.

A stir has been created in political circles by the discovery that the new election law, passed at the last session of the Legislature, provides for the acceptance of the soldiers' vote from the field only "in time of war." The probability of an immediate cessation of hostilities means that no state of war will exist on election day, and unless the New Jersey regiments are discharged prior to that date it is estimated that about 6,000 voters will lose their right of franchise.

In New Jersey 6,000 votes either way might decide the result of the State election, inasmuch as the net Republican plurality in the State Senate in 1895 was only 1,258. For that reason the leaders, both Republicans and Democrats, have been working hard to capture the soldier vote and have already prepared the necessary blanks ready for forwarding to all points where New Jersey volunteers and regulars are stationed.

In making these preparations it was not assumed that the war would cease before election day, but as soon as it became apparent that it would, cases full either of the law was made, and the first section has caused the politicians no end of worriment. It reads as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever in time of war any qualified elector of this State shall be in the actual military service of this State or of the United States in the army or navy thereof, and by reason thereof be sent from his election district, such absent elector shall be entitled to vote as fully as if he were present at his place of residence, in the manner hereinafter provided."

Senator Foster M Voorhees, who became Governor of the State when John W. Griggs resigned to become Attorney-General of the United States, is much concerned over the interpretation of the new law. He is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, and his strength lay in his great popularity with the volunteers, who he insisted should have all necessary equipments before permitting their removal from the State camp at Sea Girt. Governor Voorhees said he had not considered the law carefully until today, and he proposes to submit it at once to Attorney-General Gray for a judicial interpretation.

The War is Over.

The war is over—the most welcome words which the United States has heard since Grant and Lee met under the apple tree at Appomatox. Not the gratification, however, that comes to us bringing hope of relief from defeat and oppression, but a sentiment that a victorious nation receives at the height of its powers as an end to a conflict into which it entered only because the welfare of humanity demanded it.

Dewey's magnificent victory, the valorous charge up San Juan hill, the destruction of Cervera's fleet and the surrender of Santiago were events that thrilled the people with patriotism and scattered the enemy's forces, but not one or all—except as they brought nearer and surer an end to the ravages of war—compare with the intense satisfaction felt at the realization of truth in the words—the war is over. Glorious, indeed, they are.

Don't Like Camp Life.

Soldier life to those patriotic Americans who enlisted in New Jersey regiments and never got any further than Pompton Lake or Sandy Hook, is evidently not what they thought it would be. They have found the routine duties of camp life very irksome and monotonous, and according to reports from Pompton Lake they are averse to staying in camp. Since Friday morning it is said that more than 200 men have left the camp without leave of absence. Colonel Lee had issued orders that only those men who had not been at home at all should have leaves of absence in the future, and no sooner had these orders gone forth than the men determined to take French leave. Colonel Lee had sought to outwit the soldiers by ordering the Erie and Susquehana railroads not to carry any soldiers from Pompton Lake who cannot show a furlough.

Jersey Popular With Presidents.

New Jersey seems to be a favorite spot for Presidents of the United States. When Mr. Harrison was in the White House he constructed a cottage at Cape May by making his summer residence at that place, then Grover Cleveland sought a residential elysium in Princeton and now McKinley comes along to Lake Hopatcong. If the Garden State can't get one of its citizens into the White House it certainly succeeds in getting the White House occupants to New Jersey, all of which is very gratifying.

An Unexpected Clash.

It is certainly news to the majority of Plainfielders to know that Richmond street is a county road, as the notice given to the Common Council last night by the Board of Freeholders sets forth. This sudden regard of the county legislators for the thoroughfare is in strange contrast to the care and thought which they have shown towards it in the past, which has been absolutely nothing. The Freeholders must look at Richmond street in the light of a poor relation which has never been worth the claiming until its value was suddenly developed in that proposed to lay the biggest fight between trolley interests this section of the country has ever seen.

Judging by the sentiments expressed in the Council after the reception of notice from the Freeholders, and the further progress of the ordinance granting the Plainfield Street Railway Company a franchise over this street, the city solons are not in a mood to bow to the edict of the Freeholders in a clash between the Common Council of this city and the Board of Freeholders over the county trolley plan was about the last thing that could be expected, but now that it has come the result will be watched with more than ordinary interest.

The Freeholders obtain their right to claim Richmond street as a county road by virtue of the Squire law. In exercising that claim they are probably induced to act in the spirit that having secured from Kean an offer of $250,000 for the county trolley franchise they are duty bound to use all the advantages of the law to give the buyer his moneys worth.

Camping Places for the Troops.

Depend upon it that New Jersey men are always equal to the occasion in either peace or war. Our State troops of naval reserve men were among the first to respond to the call of the country, and now that the dove of peace once more hovers over the land and the Washington authorities are seeking healthy camping grounds for the soldiers to bivouac until they can recuperate or their services are no longer required, the State offers several desirable sights. Governor Voorhees of New Jersey has informed the Quartermaster's Department, that he would permit the Government to use the Jersey State camp at Sea Girt, free of cost. The camp at Sea Girt is considered an excellent one. It has a healthful sight and good accommodation for 4,000 men.

The people of Mount Holly have also come to the front with a patriotic offer to help the War Department out of its present embarrassment. They say that the Government can have the use of the large fair grounds in that place for the sick and wounded soldiers coming from Cuba.

The grounds comprise thirty acres of land with excellent water facilities, drainage, shade and splendid buildings, with accommodations for at least 6,000 patients, on one of the highest points of southern New Jersey, commanding a beautiful view of the adjacent country.

The grounds and buildings have not been used for the last two years, and the people of Mount Holly say they would welcome the brave soldier boys to their town.

Sound Criticism of Sewell.

Countless incidents occur in the everyday life of newspaper men to aggravate them, but none more so than the existence of the individual who rails at newspapers as insiduous influences in a community and yet whenever they have a grievance against the public their first thought of a way to vent it is through the public press. It seems that Senator Sewell is one of these men, and The Sunday Call, of Newark, gives this blast to the great Jersey Republican boss:

In a recent interview in a newspaper, Senator Sewell began his statement in a way he almost invariably uses—by condemning all newspapers. Like other political and railroad bosses, the Senator has a cordial hatred for newspapers, and like the rest, too, he sends for a newspaper man every time he wants to make use of a public declaration. It would be only fair in the newspaper interviewers to get even with him by refusing to publish his discussions, leaving him to the opportunities which his colleagues in the Senate afford him; but really his interviews are generally interesting, although one may not always agree with what he says. Still he ought not to make faces at the horse that comes to him over the stream.

What a Penny War Stamp Did.

The first record of the war stamp causing any particular trouble in this section comes from Rahway. The value of the stamp which should have been affixed to appear was only a penny, but was the means of a contractor losing a job amounting to over $2,000 and the town having to pay $100 more than would have been necessary if the important little stamp had been in evidence.

It appears that Attorney advertised for bids for the improvement of one of its streets, but the lowest bidder failed to affix a once cent war stamp to the check which he accompanied his bid with. It was but a technical objection, easily remedied, but the officials decided that it was a fatal mistake for the contractor to make and his bid was thrown out.

New Brunswick Appeals to Plainfield.

With all the wry faces which the newspapers of New Brunswick have made in a jealous mood at Plainfield, it must certainly have been humiliating to The Times of that city to print a communication, which occupied a half-column of its space Tuesday, that had for its feature the superior advantage of Plainfield, and a plaintive plea for a scheme to be arranged so that New Brunswick might share some of this city's good fortune.

For two years New Brunswick has been without a theatre, and now the citizens of that place are just aching for anything in the histrionic line, but their hope of seeing either the tragic actor or the peroxide soubrette is barren. One who signs himself "Theatre Patron" suggests a novel scheme, in which the trolley is to play a star part. The correspondent rehearses the fact that with the extension of the trolley line from New Brunswick to Plainfield it is possible that local theatre-goers will be able to get some relief from the hum-drum life in New Brunswick by attending the amusements presented in Plainfield. The correspondent thus argues for his proposition:

Cannot Supt. Radel inaugurate the theatre car when the Plainfield branch is opened? He can build it so that many people from here to the productions given in Stillman Music Hall there. Most of them are first-class and quite a few have already been seen who have come from this city, who have willingly made the trip in order that they might enjoy such entertainment.

The time required to make the trip from the city directly to the theatre doors by way of Bound Brook and Dunellen would probably not consume more than an hour and a quarter or an hour and a half. It is possible that much less time would be required for the trip. The establishment of such a car service would surely be a great accommodation and would be an appreciated one. Supt. Radel's constant aim to meet the desires of the people. I am sure as a return that the public would patronize the car in a liberal manner. Let us have a chance to be amused.

The New Brunswick correspondent has certainly struck a novel scheme for lifting his town out of the slough of despond into which it has fallen by the calamity that befell their own Music Hall. But in its Plainfield namesake they may find the tragic, the dramatic and the comedy they thirst for. By all means let Supt. Radel accept the suggestion and offer Plainfield as the solace for those of New Brunswick who delight in witnessing theatrical performances. Music Hall is big enough, Manager Edwards glad enough and Plainfield liberal enough to help poor old New Brunswick out of the hole into which it has fallen.

Consents are Now the Thing.

"Mr. Kean will begin at once to secure the consents of property owners," is a statement that probably lost a great deal of importance to many citizens in reading the account of the acceptance of the offer of $250,000 for the county trolley franchise by the Board of Freeholders. The fact that Mr. Kean has got to get the consents of the majority of property owners along the line of the proposed widened boulevard means that he has the hardest part of the job yet to do. It must be remembered that there is a clause in the Squire law which makes the boulevard and county trolley an impossibility unless the municipalities through which it passes give their consent. Already Cranford and Westfield are in the line of opposition, and though a quarter of a million dollars and the approval of the Board of Freeholders may sound imperious and conclusive as compared with the opponents' authority and financial backing, it does not necessarily mean that they cannot cope with the influences in favor of the county trolley.

Essex May Cause Republican Woe.

The Republicans are not scared by any means, says a Trenton correspondent. With Voorhees as their Gubernatorial candidate as against Donnelly or any other Democrat they expect to achieve a victory just as great as marked the election of John W. Griggs three years ago. Even should Voorhees not be their candidate they feel confident that they could carry the State with either Murphy or Pitney as their standard-bearer. Major Carl Lentz says Mr. Murphy is not out of the race by any means, and when the time comes for active work Essex county will prove its loyalty to its favorite son. That may all be true as far as the Major's prescience may lead him, but, still, it is well known that nearly all the other Republican leaders predict Voorhees' nomination.

It would be an interesting campaign, indeed, with Voorhees on one side and Donnelly on the other. There would be no mud-slinging. The best of feeling would prevail, while National, war and State issues would receive a full discussion, at least at the hands of the Republicans.

Hero Worship.

One of the most salutary traits in human nature is its passionate admiration for those who rise far above the average life of their fellow men through the medium of heroic deeds. This superiority may be evinced on the battlefield, in the saving of human life by risking one's own, or by moral heroism in the domain of politics and statesmanship, or in other ways too numerous to cite. But it is to the hero of battle, through the full blaze of publicity which focuses the attention as a single point and the shower splendor which accompanies military exploit, that the fullest meed of admiration is generally given. The hero of peace may be quite as deserving of admiration as the sword bearer, but his deed lacks the splendid frame to set forth the color and proportions of the action. It may be set down as reasonably true that the man capable of great enthusiasm in the admiration of great deeds and their doers, is himself capable of doing something rightly noble when the opportunity occurs. It is this kind of admiration which keeps alike the sentiment for a higher ideal even under commonplace and depressing conditions. It has been a favorite theme of some of the great modern philosophers and essayists to consider, how far the stimulus given by war through the spectacle of heroic deeds to the mass of men who look on as spectators may compensate for the wholesale waste of life and bloodshed of war. At the time of the Crimean campaign of 1855 one of the magazines instituted a symposium on this subject, to which many of the leading thinkers of Great Britain contributed. The consensus of judgment was that the tendency of such an influence was clearly to lift public opinion and practice out of the rut of the sordid and the commonplace.

It does not need to go as far as Thomas Carlyle's doctrine preached in a thousand forms with such a fury of eloquent grose that the hero-man was the only savior of society, before whom all must bow down and worship if they would find salvation. But one cannot escape from the belief that the contemplation of the heroic deed tends to propagate similar actions by force of example and imitation and to put the admirer in a nobler frame of mind. Men forget at such times all that is mean and habitually exalt their impulses to drink at purer fountain of feeling. And as for women it is as natural for them to thrill with joy and adoration at heroism as it is to breathe the air of heaven.

War, then, has its elevating as well as its seamy side. Our war has not lasted long. Its opportunities for splendid deeds of daring and hardihood have not been profuse. But some have been achieved which will shine on the great muster roll of heroism as worthily as any performed during our five years' civil war. The rapturous admiration with which the country responded to such an exploit as that of Hobson, for example, shows that the wellspring still bubbles clear and deep in the national heart after a quarter century of money making peace. The golden calf on occasion is easily and quickly dethroned for a mightier idol.

Canon C. H. Robinson in a Nineteenth Century paper gives a very interesting account of an African civilization developed mainly from within. The country known as Sokoto is completely cut off from European influence, and, so far as it has known exotic modification, this has been derived from Arab and Abyssinian sources. The Hausa tribe constitutes the bulk of the population, and it possesses a written language, the only one evolved, so far as known, by any strictly negritic people. The characters are adapted from the Arabic alphabet, and the date of their introduction goes back more than 1,000 years. Their histories profess to cover nearly this period and are made up of a great variety of interesting traditions. The Hausas, though now governed by a Mohammedan dynasty, under whom they claim to have lost much of their former greatness, are energetic traders, skillful workers of cloth and metals, and they manufacture a considerable number of other commodities. Canon Robinson's description completely disposes of the contention of the ethnologists that there is no example known of a substantially self derived civilization among the black African peoples.

Ex-Senator Warner Miller and Senator Morgan, who have been from the outset the sturdiest supporters of the Nicaraguan canal, have again been urging action on Mr. McKinley. The assurance of the president is that he will ask for prompt legislation from congress at their reopening. He is said to favor governmental ownership in toto.

A litigant at law should have three bags—one full of papers, one of money and one of patience. Of the three bags the first goes on increasing in bulk, while the others rapidly get empty. Yet great writers have pronounced law to be the highest and noblest fruit of civilization. They were lawyers, however.

The Russian court ladies have been immensely exercised over the prohibition of the czarina directed against smoking cigarettes in the royal presence. The etiquette could never have been very severe if it has been allowed at any time. It is all a matter of taste, however.

LAND FOR ARMY CAMP.

PATRIOTIC OFFER MADE FOR BENEFIT OF THE SOLDIERS.

Henry Rogers Writes the President That He Has Fifty Acres Which the Government Can Have If They Want It.

Always count Plainfield and vicinity in at the forefront of responding to needs of Uncle Sam. If the War Department finds that it will require more ground for camp purposes for the brave boys who are being returned from Cuba, one hundred acres are at their disposal in this vicinity.

Tuesday Henry Rogers, who owns a fine farm on the plateau of the Watchung mountains, forwarded a letter to President McKinley offering the use of fifty acres of his land as a camp for the convalescent soldiers. The land is level and well-drained, and plenty of wholesome water can be obtained. The air is pure and salubrious, as the land is 500 feet above tide water.

Phillip P. Roehrich, a jeweler, of 218 Seventh avenue, New York, who owns fifty acres of land opposite Mr. Rogers' farm, and which he has cut up into building lots and named them Somerset Park, has also made a similar offer to the Government, and is in receipt of the following letter from Washington:

Executive Mansion,
Washington, August 9th, 1898.

My Dear Sir—I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., addressed to the President, tendering the use of fifty acres of land near Plainfield, N. J., as a camp for convalescent soldiers, and to inform you that it has been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War.

Very truly yours,
J. A. Porter,
Secretary to the President.

A NEW SECRETARY.

Change in the Officers of the Watchung Water Company.

At a meeting of the Watchung Water Company, held a few days ago, Lewis S. Cook, of Bound Brook, resigned his position as secretary and treasurer, on account of ill health. He will still remain a member of the company. His place was filled by the election of George W. Waite, of Jersey City, who is manager of the freight department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Jersey City.

The company has already made a number of improvements in their plant at Greenbrook, and more will be made. A new turbine wheel has been placed in position and the water power has been increased about 150 horse power. Pending several improvements the machinery has been stopped for a few days, but it is hoped by Manager Sebring that the plant will be started today. The company has decided to commence at once the work of digging several new wells with an idea of still further increasing the water supply.

No Cure—No Pay.

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Malaria, Chills and Fever. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price, 50c. For sale by R. J. Shaw. 12 2 1y

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

PREACHES TOO LOUD.

SEVERAL NETHERWOOD RESIDENTS COMPLAIN OF CAMP MEETING.

They Say He Disturbs Them and Attracts Many People to Netherwood Who Chase Away the Usual Quietness.

The stentorian voice of another colored preacher has made more trouble. First, there came complaints from the residents of West Front street regarding a colored church located there. Now several prominent residents of that exclusive section, Netherwood, have objected against the gathering in the grove, familiarly known as the camp meeting. No formal complaint has yet been made, but the residents about there have complained verbally to Mayor Fisk and other city officials, saying they are nightly disturbed by the shouts of the preacher in the grove.

Furthermore, they object quite seriously to the crowd it attracts. Netherwood has always been a quiet place, and they are loath to have the peace and quietude disturbed by the talking and laughing of the people strolling about, and the earnest pleas of the preacher, which can be heard nearly two blocks away.

JUDGE GROWS FACETIOUS.

Compares The City Jail to New York's Swell Hostelry.

"How did you like a night in the Waldorf-Astoria?" queried Judge DeMeza as old Peter Galbraith was arraigned before him. Galbraith had been over night amid the creeping and the crawling things in one of the cells of the city jail. Mrs. Carrie Boyle, a neighbor, was the complainant against him, charging him with being drunk and calling her profane and indecent names.

Now the Judge's question was a puzzler to Galbraith and he scratched his head and thought. Before he could collect his wits, the Judge began the examination.

It had been a quarrel of long standing and the prisoner, his wife and the complainant immediately began to argue about it in the courtroom. The Judge then adjourned the case until Saturday morning, when he will fully go into the case.

Borough Marshal Threatened With a Leaden Welcome.

THEY DIDN'T STOP, THOUGH.

GEORGE HUGHES ARRESTED AFTER MAKING A BIG DISTURBANCE.

Came Home Early Tuesday Morning and Started in to Clean Out the House—Finally Captured and Locked Up—His Wife Appeared in Court Tuesday Morning and Substantiated Officers' Charges.

"Don't you come in this house or I'll put some lead through you."

These were the words that George Hughes, of Manning avenue, threatened Marshal George Wise and Marshal Frank Winn with about 1:30 o'clock Tuesday morning.

It was about 1:30 o'clock when Marshal Wise heard the noise and he soon found out where it came from. It was at the home of George Hughes. He had come home during the evening in an intoxicated condition and at once prepared to clean house. His wife, knowing of her husband's condition, had left the house with her baby and had gone to her brother-in-law's, James Bailey, on the opposite side of the street.

After Mr. Hughes reached home he assumed a destructive nature. He grasped a large iron and demolished the panes of glass in one of the front windows. This sport amused him for a time, but he soon wanted a change, so he went in the parlor and began to play on the piano.

When Marshal Wise arrived he discovered that he would need help and he blew his whistle. Marshal Winn responded and the two officers worked for nearly a half hour before they succeeded in arresting the midnight disturber.

Hughes made all sorts of noises and threatened to do the officers if they came near him. He ran back and forth, turned out the lights in the house and discharged his revolver without hitting anything.

After a while Hughes made his appearance on the sidewalk. Marshal Wise quickly caught hold of Hughes, and with the assistance of Marshal Winn, succeeded in landing the culprit in the borough lockup.

Tuesday Hughes was arraigned before Recorder Long. He entered a plea of not guilty. Mrs. Hughes was present and sustained the charge made by the officers. She related in detail substantially what had taken place. After hearing the evidence Recorder Long reserved his decision until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Borough Recorder Long in the afternoon fined Hughes $20.

MAD HORSE PLUNGED ALONG COUNTRY ROAD

And Then Startled the Solitude of Scotch Plains.

WAS A THRILLING RUNAWAY.

TERROR-STRICKEN YOUNG WOMAN TRAILED ALONG IN A BUGGY.

The Horse and Buggy Owned and Driven by V. L. Frazee, Who Had Left the Rig for a Moment to Pick Some Clover at the Side of the Road—Plainfield Bicyclist Was a Hero in Stopping the Runaway.

A plunging, maddened horse, running at breakneck speed and pulling a buggy in which was seated a terror-stricken young woman, holding on for dear life to escape being thrown out of the careening vehicle, was the thrilling sight that aroused the usual Sunday morning solitude in this place Sunday. It was just about 11 o'clock when the residents heard the frightened cries of the young women and rushed to their doors to see the horse gallop by at a terrific speed, the reins trailing along on the ground.

Every moment it looked as though the swaying vehicle would topple over and perhaps mean the death of its fair occupant, or come in collision with some of the many bicyclists who were spinning along the road in a leisurely manner at the time.

At Stanberry's corner four wheelmen, who saw the runaway approaching, dismounted and made a concerted effort to corral the beast. It was as useless as it was valorous, though, for the animal whizzed by like a shot and the young men had to hustle to avoid being run over.

At Emery's corner the animal turned into Front street and started towards Plainfield. Walter Martin, of Plainfield, was wheeling towards the Plains and saw the horse coming. Mr. Martin quickly dismounted, threw his bicycle to one side of the road and as the horse, whose gait had slackened some by this time, reached where he stood he made a heroic plunge and succeeded in getting a firm hold on to the dragging reins. Martin was thrown to the ground, but pluckily held on and in a few moments had dexteriously turned the horse to the sidewalk where he was brought to a standstill. The stop, however, was so sudden that the young woman was thrown from the buggy in a hurry.

A crowd soon collected and the young woman was picked up. Except for being very nervous and excited, she did not seem to suffer any injuries from her perilous ride.

As soon as she became composed she told the circumstances of the runaway. Mr. Frazee and the young woman had started out in the morning for a pleasure drive through Washington Valley. When they reached J. A. Gavett a scrunger home, Mr. Frazee got out of the wagon to pick some clover. From some unexplainable cause the horse suddenly became frightened and started to runaway. Before Mr. Frazee could grasp the reins the animal had got out of his reach and was rushing pell-mell along the country road. Mr. Gavett hastily harnessed his horse and together with Mr. Frazee started in pursuit of the fractious animal. Expecting every moment to find the buggy a wreck along side of the road and the fair occupant seriously injured, the two men drove rapidly along. Reaching this place and finding the horse and the young woman had suffered no great injury, a great weight was relieved from Mr. Frazee's mind. In all its wild run the horse had not broken a strap of the harness.

After a few minutes Mr. Frazee got into the wagon and drove home.

Married Very Quietly.

The marriage of Miss Anna May Scowcroft, of 1731 West Front street, to Eugene Wheeler, an employe of the Pond Tool Machine Works, took place last Sunday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Rev. B. W. Hand, 1045 West Seventh street. Mr. Hand performed the ceremony in the presence of his family, who acted as witnesses. The bride and groom have been residents of this city for some time, and they will reside in the future at 1731 West Front street.

HUSBAND FOLLOWS WIFE TO ETERNAL HOME

Death of One of the Oldest Residents in Plainfield.

E. B. TITSWORTH IS NO MORE.

HE HAD DONE MUCH TOWARDS BUILDING UP THE CITY.

Born in New Brunswick in 1817, but Had Resided in Plainfield for Fifty-five Years—One of the Pioneers in the Clothing Business—First Volunteer from Plainfield in the Civil War.

For weeks husband and wife lay in adjoining rooms, both sick unto death. Two weeks ago the wife passed away, and at 1 o'clock Sunday morning the husband, Edward B. Titsworth, quietly succumbed to his fatal illness. In his death Plainfield loses one of her oldest citizens and business men who played a prominent part in the building up of the city, while a large circle of friends mourn the loss of a good and true man. The death of Mr. Titsworth took place at his home, 311 New street.

Edward B. Titsworth was born at New Brunswick in 1817. He has been a resident of Plainfield for fifty-five years. In 1833 he was married to Ann Dunn, daughter of Hon. David Dunn, of New Market. Two years later they moved to Plainfield.

He was engaged in the general merchandise business and the manufacture of clothing. He was one of the pioneers of the system of clothing manufacture in which the articles to be made were sent out to the neighboring homes and made there instead of all under one roof. At different times he was associated in partnership with Reuben and Rudolph M. Titsworth, and his brother A. D. Titsworth.

He bought a home on West Front street, opposite where Music Hall now stands. A portion of the house was used as the printing office of Milton F. Cushing, who published The Plainfield Union, Plainfield's first weekly newspaper.

In 1857 Mr. Titsworth built Temperance Hall, now 110 West Front street, at that time the first three-story building in the city.

He was one of the first to volunteer from Plainfield in the Civil War, joining Company I, Third New Jersey Volunteers. Soon after going to the front, he was appointed Sergeant. He was with the regiment in all its engagements until May, 1863, when he was sent to the Newark Hospital with an illness contracted in the field and was finally discharged for disability.

He was always identified with the musical interests of Plainfield and was known all along the line of the Jersey Central Railroad as one of the best singing school teachers to be found. He was a prominent member of the Harmonic Society, of which Dr. Albert Utter was the leader, which was then to Plainfield what the Choral Society has been since.

Since the Civil War, he has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of washing machinery.

He has always been a Seventh Day Baptist and is a member of the church of that denomination in this city. He has also been a member of Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., since its first days. He was a member of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, O. F., and was one of the oldest Odd Fellows in the city, having been a member of that organization for 49 years.

He leaves three children, Mrs. Hasey B. Greene, of West Fifth street, Mrs. Truman W. Saunders, of Williamstown, Mass., and David E. Titsworth, of East Seventh street.

Mr. Titsworth was the last male member of a family of ten children, two of whom survive him, Mrs Phoebe D. Rose, of West Fifth street, who is in her eighty-ninth year, and Mrs. Cornelia M. Dunn, in her eighty-fifth. Two of his brothers have been prominently identified with Plainfield interests, Abram Dunham Titsworth, who died a number of years ago, having been County Judge here for many years, and Isaac D. Titsworth, who died last year at the ripe age of ninety one, having been a director of the First National Bank from its organization, and its president for some years prior to his death.

He had a large circle of friends in the city and the surrounding towns. He was known to many as "Uncle Ed," although there was no relation ship. His lovable disposition and helpful nature made him a man popular with all. His willingness to render aid to those in trouble made him many friends.

The funeral was held from his late home Tuesday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

Age Didn't Hinder this Stepper.

The handsome silver pitcher won by Douglass Darby's horse "Minnie," last Saturday afternoon on the track of the Plainfield Driving Association, is now on exhibition at the meat market of J. W. VanSickle, North avenue. The horse that won the prize is seventeen years old, and it is considered a remarkable achievement.

DR. PETERS SPOKE AT CAMP MEETING.

Eminent New York Divine Addressed a Large Audience.

MANY ATTEND THE MEETING

MUST WORSHIP WILLINGLY TO ENJOY RELIGION.

Dr. Peters Told of Conditions in Many Churches—Many Have Not Time to Worship But Have Time to Die—Church Needs Money as Well as Prayer—To Continue Another Week.

In the varied experiences of the well-known New York divine, Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, it never happened until Sunday afternoon that he took part in the services at a negro camp meeting. It was a negro camp meeting in the sense that it was given by the negroes although a large percentage of the audience who assembled in the grove at Netherwood yesterday were of the Caucasian race. Many were drawn there by the announcement that Dr. Peters was to speak and came to hear what he might say under such rather unusual circumstances.

There must have been nearly two thousand people scattered about in the grove, some coming in carriages, wheel, on the trolley or afoot. Many of them occupied the rude wooden benches in the open air auditorium or stood about in the rear of the seats. The carriages formed an outer circle about the camp.

After the opening services, led by Rev. Dr. Coster, the colored pastor of St. Peter's A. M. E. church, under whose auspices the camp meeting is held, Rev. Dr. Peters was introduced.

It was not a sermon that he gave, rather a little talk. His subject or text was from Gal. 4:18—"Where is the blessedness ye spake of?" It could be put in another way, he said, why are you not as happy as you used to be? It was a question, he declared, that could be addressed to any evangelical church in the country. The evidences of it were the abandoned prayer closets and forsaken Bibles, the want of religious enjoyment and the giving less to the church.

He spoke very eloquently of the subject. He pointed out that many served God not because they thought they had to and not from a willingness to do so. The only way to enjoy religion was to worship willingly.

In these busy times some thought they did not have time for worship and so had gradually given up their share in the observation of Sunday and the daily worship. They all had time to die, however, he said.

He spoke of the necessity of giving as well as praying, for it was the dropping of the money into God's treasury that makes the machinery go. The goods of a man are not for his enjoyment alone. He is supposed to use them for the benefit of mankind. Poverty was not a pass to Heaven; it was just as Christianlike to make all the money one could honestly. Some men, he explained, were given a talent to make money, just as others were talented as preachers.

He spoke about the way in which many churches were run. One man did all the work and the rest all the talking. He urged his hearers that their first duty was toward their church.

Many of those who now called themselves Christians, he compared to the "Leaning Tower of Pisa," just as crooked as it could be and stand up.

In concluding, he made a plea for aid for the St. Peters' church and announced that a collection would be taken. Then several people in the audience were noticed to rise and start for the rear of the grove.

"Stop," said Dr. Peters. Anybody who leaves now is a Spaniard." There was a laugh and those who had started sat down again under that charge.

Sunday morning, Miss Lizzie Babbitt, the colored woman evangelist, spoke to a large audience. In the evening, Rev. Dr. Carpenter and the Jubilee Singers attracted many.

DRANK, FOUGHT AND JAILED.

Sad Experience of Two Plainfield Men as Told to City Judge.

Two sadly-demoralized specimens of humanity, with bloody faces and black eyes in abundance, were the principal offenders to be haled before City Judge DeMeza Tuesday morning. Patrolman McCarty said that they had been drunk and fighting. And they certainly looked it.

They admitted that perhaps a glass or two beyond their limit had passed their lips, and their remembrance of the happenings of last night were hazy, indeed. They thought that, perhaps, they might have been fighting just a little. They gave their names as John Kernon and William Connor.

McCarty told how there was another, more sober than these, who had bolted in to the house on Grant avenue, in front of which they had been standing, and barricaded the door against the arm of the law. Thus he escaped. These two were brought down in a dazed condition.

The Judge laid the case over until Saturday to get more evidence.

WOULDN'T GIVE THE FIGURES.

Borough Board of Education Awarded Contracts for New School.

The Borough Board of Education held an adjourned meeting Monday to consider further the bids for the construction of the new schoolhouse. The mason work was awarded to William C. Smith, while William C. Krausse was given the plumbing work. The contracts for the heating and ventilating were laid over for another meeting. The Board refused to give the figures bid by Mr. Smith and Mr. Krausse, stating in explanation that they had decided that it is the place of the successful bidders to give them out if they want them known.

Bought Another Meat Market.

The increasing business of Fred Endress, the West Front street butcher, has brought about an increase in his arrangements for handling the custom of his customers. He has just completed the purchase of George Eddy's butcher shop on Hahlenberg place and will open a branch store there, where he will be able to look directly after the trade in that section. The store will be all newly equipped and furnished with the most modern appliances in the butcher business.

—Dr. Knott has treated the horse belonging to S. S. Guion, of Carlton avenue, in such a skillful manner that she has nearly recovered from her severe injury.

NEW EVERY MORNING.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Every morn is the world made new.
You who are weary of the world and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you—
A hope for me and a hope for you.
All the past things are past and over;
The tasks are done, and the tears are shed.
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds, which smarted as we bled,
Are healed with the healing which night has shed.
Yesterday is now a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf, which God bolts tightly,
With glad days and sad days and bad days, which never Shall visit us more, with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine or sorrowful night.
Let them go, since we cannot re-live them;
Cannot undo nor cannot atone.
God in His mercy receives, records, forgives them!
Only the new days are our own;
To-day is our, and to-day alone.
Here are the skies, all burnished brightly,
Here is the spent earth all reborn.
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly
To face the sun and to share the morn
In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.
Every day is a fresh beginning,
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain,
And, in spite of old sorrow and older-existing—
And joyous forecasted and possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again.

BLOOD WILL TELL.

It was rapidly growing dusk on the wide prairie, and the stars were just beginning to show like glittering diamond plants. Just the suggestion of the autumn was in the cool night air. The stillness as Jim and Miss Warling drove along over the silent plain was broken now and then by a sharp, startling rattle, a sound once heard never to be forgotten, the danger signal of the deadly rattlesnake, coiled up on the long, brown grass.

"Hit appears to me," Jim was saying, "that that air wind don't bode any good to the settlers round about these here parts."

"Why so, Jim?"

'Guess you hain't ever been on one of our Dakoty perarier afore, Miss Waring, or you wouldn't have asked such a question. There's two things out hyar that's more feared than the Old Nick himself—one on 'em's a perarie fire, and another's a perarie fire with the wind a-blowin' a forty-mile-an-hour."

They rode on again in silence. Alice Waring had come from the far great city to visit her brother on his western ranch. Jim, the man-of-all-work, was driving from the station, fifteen miles from the ranch.

"By the long-horned spoons!" said Jim, suddenly, rising in his seat and stopping the horses with a tremendous jerk, "look over there, will you? That's blazes and gone to thunder, you're a foot high! Git up there!" he yelled to the horses, and, giving one of them a stinging blow with his whip, they sprung into a run. Across the level plain shone a light, the light at the ranch, thousands of yards, or miles away. To the left of it a dull, reddish glow had come up, and now and then, at the horizon line, where the darker part of the sky was lost in the prairie, sharp flames were darting up.

"Don't be skeered!" Jim ejaculated, as he whipped the horses into a yet more furious pace; "there ain't any danger—leastwise for us!"

Alice was a self-possessed city girl with a generous stock of old-fashioned common sense, but she was startled at Jim's actions and her face had grown pale.

"Everything's all right," said Jim, as reassuringly as he could under the circumstances. "Don't you be skeered."

He had seized the reins between his firm, strong teeth, and now with one hand, now with the other, now with both, he was whipping the horses into still greater speed. Hate ter lick a team like this," as the wagon bounced and rattled along; "hate ter do it—but hit can't be helped—when there's life —depends—on it."

A few moments more and the horses dashed up to the big ranch headquarters house. Jim threw the lines to the ground, and, seizing Alice by the wrist, jumped with her.

"Sorter be no supper-time, but there ain't any time ter wait—kin you ride, hossback?"

Barely waiting for an affirmative answer from the girl, this unassionately fond of riding, and who modestly owned the credit of being for superior horsewomanship in her city riding club, Jim ran to the barn, flung a man's saddle on a beautiful horse, and before Alice had time to recover from her surprise at this sudden introduction to her brother's establishment, the horse was before her.

"You say you kin ride; wa'al here's the best chance to show hit you ever had in your life. That's the best hoss in McLean county—ain't no blood for five generations; there ain't nothin' but a perarie fire kin ketch him. Jump him, Miss Waring, ride straight toward the fire yonder; thar ain't no danger now till you git ter Mule creek. Jest over the crick, a quarter of a mile or so, thar's a Russian woman an' her six weeks' old baby. She is all alone, fer I saw her husband in town when we left. They hain't back—fired the ranch, and you've got ter git the woman and her baby over the crick, see? I'd go myself, but the wind is shifted, and this hull ranch'll be in danger afore long. You'll pass your brother and a parcel of men back'ards along the line; don't stop fer any explanations, but ride fer the crick, an' ride as if the Old Harry was on yer track. You been't afeered, be you?"

"You say there's little danger of my losing my life, Jim?"

"Not a bit—ef you only git the woman across the crick in time; but don't wait—jump quick, for the Lord's sake, or you'll be too late!"

With a rude toss he threw her into the saddle as if she had been a child, and handed her the reins. As he did so he thrust a short, cruel rawhide into her hand.

"Don't hit him with that unless you have to; he's never been licked in his life, but he kin outrun a cyclone. Ef you have ter hit him, give it ter him red hot."

It is long sometimes before a horse and its rider become acquainted with one another, but it seemed but a few seconds to Alice before she and the noble animal were old friends. Jim was right. Prince Hal could run, and after the first few tremendous jumps and leaps had steadied herself in the saddle, the thrilling excitement stirred her blood like an intoxicant, and she realized that Jim had told the truth; it promised to be the race of her life.

"Je-ho-sa-phat!" exclaimed a man who was ploughing a fire furrow along the edge of the ranch where the men were at work. "Mr. Waring, look, will you? Look at Prince Hal!"

Mr. Waring had not more than time to look up before he saw the choicest steed owned by him like the wind, a girl with hair flying behind her on his back, the horse flying at a pace that not his fastest Kentucky ancestors ever matched.

On the horse went, as if he, too, knew of the life-saving mission of the hour. The foam came back from his teeth and his flanks were white. Alice leaned forward in the saddle as she urged him on, and stroked his neck.

A moment more and they were at the creek, a shallow stream. Beyond, Alice could see a low house silhouetted against a great red bank of flame. The fire was coming. Already she could feel the intense heat. A leap and a bound, and she was over the little stream and on again with still swifter flight. It was a matter of seconds now until the low sod house was reached. In front of it was the Russian woman, frantically trying to save some of her household goods by dragging them with one hand further from the course of the fire, while in one arm she clutched the baby, around which she had thrown a wet shawl to protect it from the heat.

"Why don't you run?" cried Alice, as she jumped from the horse; "don't you see the fire is almost on you? You can't save your things; run for the creek! Run, I say, or you'll be burned to death!"

Alice grabbed the child from the woman's arms and sprang up into the saddle as best she could. The woman stood as if stupefied, the red glow from the coming flames lighting up her stolid face. "Run, run, or you're a dead woman!" they could hear the roar and crackle as it swept through the long, man-high grass of the swale beyon dthe fence.

"Quick! Quick, I say! No, you can't run fast enough now to get to the creek; jump up behind me. Quick! Quick, or we shall all be burned! I can't leave you here to die!"

The woman's stolid nature was roused at last by the animal fear of death, and while the heat grew more intense every instant she clambered up behind Alice.

Prince Hal's face was toward the fire. He had not moved since he reached this spot. His eyes, like some beautiful statue, his body motionless, his ears sharp erect; his nostrils distended; the awful fascination of the fire was upon him.

Alice pulled at the bit to turn him. He paid no attention. She spoke sharply, but he only moved uneasily; he would not stir from the spot. Swifter than an electric shock came the thought to her mind that horses in burning buildings would stay and die in the flames before they would be led out. It would be impossible to reach the creek on foot. In half a minute more the flames would be on them. Grabbing the wet shawl from the baby with one hand and swinging the child backward to its mother with the other, she threw the shawl over the horse's head. With the sight of the fire shut out he quivered, turned at the bit gave him a sharp twist, and just as the flames were leaping over he sheds hard by the house he sprung away.

It was a race for life now—for three or four—and the wind increased to a gale—there is nothing more terrible in this world than a relentless ocean of flame as was rolling over the grass grown plain.

Alice thought of Jim's parting advice.

"He's never been licked in his life, but if yer have ter, give it ter him red hot!"

With a sharp cry, urging the horse on under his heavy burden, she struck him with all her strength on the quivering flank, not once, but many times. He jumped as if stung by a rattlesnake, and, seizing the bit in his teeth, sprung away as if shot from some mighty catapult.

Alice had lost all control of him save as she could neither guide, nor check, nor urge him. The blood of a noble ancestry, the blood of a racer, was on fire in his veins. Down the short hill, over the brook, up the farther side, on over the plain, like some wild spirit of the night he ran. A cheer that you could have heard a mile, and that mayhap was heard clear up to the stars of heaven, rang out as Prince Hal, white with foam, flew by the crowd of men.

"Wa'al, ef you ain't the pluckiest gal," said Jim, as he helped Alice from the saddle. "An' you ain't a-goin ter faint, nuther, I kin tell it by yer eye. Didn't I tell you he could outrun a cyclone? But there had ter be somebody a-top of him who knew how ter ride."—The Independent.

RACHEL'S TRIAL.

BY VICTOR GAGE KIMBERT.

The child stirred in her sleep and moaned uneasily. Rachel awakened instantly from her light slumber and went to the side of her little one. The baby had been feverish and fretful through the day, and she was anxious for scarlet fever was in the neighboring village, and though little Marion had not been in danger, the ever anxious mother-heart throbbed uneasily.

There was a terrible storm abroad—a summer one—that was liable to cease almost as suddenly as it had come up, but none the less dreadful. The great trees in the yard swayed and bent, but resumed their upright-ness in the very teeth of the wind the instant its power ceased. The lightning flashed blindingly, followed by heavy, roaring thunder, as if all the elements were furiously contending for supremacy.

Rachel went to the window when the child had fallen off to sleep, and peered out into the darkness. A neighbor, worried over a sick horse, had come after her husband in the early part of the evening, and she felt nervous at his absence after the coming of the storm. As she looked out, the sky was suddenly blinding flash her husband coming from the barn, leading Dandy, the thoroughbred young colt, upon whom so many hopes were placed. The horse, high strung at the best, was worse during a storm, and Rachel had imagined frightfully.

The sight lasted only an instant, but long enough to fill Machel Moore with miserable forebodings. What could be the reason for removing Dandy to the other barn in the midst of such a night? She resolved to ask Richard the instant he returned, but she waited a long half hour for him, and then he busied himself in the kitchen, getting a lunch before ascending the stairs. Impatience grew apparent when he at last came up, she was just about to inquire about Dandy when the loud cry of "Fire!" smote upon their ears, and almost instantly they saw that the large barn near the house was in flames.

Then Rachel's lips were silenced. A terrible fear of something which she did not dare voice filled her heart with terror. She watched apathetically the heroic efforts of the quickly gathered neighbors to save the building, but the first five minutes it was apparent that it must go, and the house itself was in danger. Richard worked like a madman trying to save his beloved horses. By strenuous exertions them were all saved, but the cries of the poor creatures who could not be reached in time rang in Rachel's ears for years afterward whenever a summer storm arose.

Rachel did not know—for Marion, almost frantic with terror, required her constant attention—that Richard's most desperate efforts were made to rescue Dandy, and when one roof fell in amid a great shower of sparks it was with difficulty they kept him from rushing into the gravest danger, so intense was his love for the fine animal which his friends already thought had cost him dearly.

The barn burned like tinder. In spite of the rain, which ought to have extinguished it under ordinary circumstances, the fire raged with such intensity that in a brief time only ruins remained.

Richard Moore sat down, crying like a child. Afterwards, when suspicions were aroused, they said it was done for effect, but no one was conscious of that thought at the time. Poor Richard! his misfortunes crowded swiftly on him. He had become greatly involved during the few years previous to the fire, and his own better judgment accused him of investing too much in horse-flesh. It was a passion with him, and he had neglected his farm and devoted himself to horses. Dandy, the pride of his heart, had won a race in the fall, and his hopes had been buoyed up by the occurrence; but several valuable mares had died and among the trotters some of the best had been injured or prevented their being the success their owner anticipated. He expected the farm would have to go before long. The man who held the mortgage had been kind, but he could not expect further indulgence.

Then like a flash it came to him that the insurance on the building and horses would put him on his feet again. To be sure there was a mortgage on every animal on the place except Dandy, but the three thousand on him would go far toward helping to get a home for Marion and Rachel, and then and there he resolved to let horses alone.

Marion was very sick; there was no question about that, but, absorbed and anxious, Richard only half realized the manner in which his wife bore everything. To him she was simply frozen; no other word would half express it; but he believed Marion's critical condition to be the cause of her changed manner, and was, if possible, kinder and more thoughtful than ever for her comfort.

Another dreadful thing had happened. The suspicions which at first were whispered cautiously, took a louder tone, and many were ready to affirm that the building must have been well saturated with oil or some other inflammable substance, to burn with such rapidity in a drenching rain. In the thorough investigation which the insurance companies made, it was learned that no trace of the horse Dandy could be obtained. This would not have been remarkable, ordinarily, but the peculiar shoes which he always wore, with the great "D" so curiously engraved, ought to have been found in the debris; but they were not, and when the blacksmith declared he had shod him the previous Saturday things looked dark for Dick Moore. There were remains of the other horses known to have perished, but no trace of Dandy, and almost before he knew how adverse public opinion was, Richard Moore found himself arrested for arson.

Moore swore positively that he had not been in the barn since early in the evening, just before going to his neighbor's, and asserted that some enemy must have set the fire, if, indeed the building had not been struck by lightning; but when asked if he knew anyone who would do such a thing, his reply was characteristic:

"Before God, till this thing came up, I didn't suppose I had an enemy in the world."

Little Marion grew worse and finally died, and although her death could make no manner of difference as to the guilt of the father, a change in public sentiment ensued, prompted, probably, by excess of sympathy for the mother; so no one was displeased when, after much deliberation, the jury failed to convict.

Settlement was made for the barn and its contents, with the exception of the horse Dandy, which was insured in a different company, and which absolutely refused payment except at the end of a lawsuit. Moore promptly prosecuted, but with small hope of recovery, and, broken up and discouraged, he attempted to gather together the fragments of his property. He settled with the mortgagee who held mortgages on the burned animals, and applied the rest of the insurance to the mortgage, so that he might remain in his home, if he wished. But, with little Marion gone, and Rachel bordering on mania, which could be cared for more successfully in some sanitarium which made a specialty of such cases.

Rachel Moore, however, rebelled so against leaving home that Richard could not bring himself to actively gave him a word and shrank from his presence. He saw that she was carefully looked after and prevented from doing herself harm, had she so wished—but she did not, and strength to providing for her comfort.

And Rachel? Well, probably there was much truth in the physician's view of the case, though he was altogether wrong as to the cause which produced it. It was not the death of her child that so bowed her, nor even the disgrace of the public arrest which had unbalanced her mind. It was the fact that she knew the baseness of her husband's conduct.

Yet she loved him through it all, and while struggling herself for the fact, felt the conflicting emotions tearing her to pieces.

A year passed by—the longest, saddest year Richard and Rachel had ever known—and then the light fell upon them as suddenly as had fallen the shadow. Richard, busy hunting in the Weldon Woods, a forest not three miles away, came upon the remains of a horse and rider pinned to the ground by the half of a fallen tree in the lightning had cleft in twain. Whether the bolt had struck them, too, or whether they had simply been crushed beneath the tree, it was too late to determine.

"Moore's Danny, by all that's great," exclaimed Ned White, as he examined the animal's shoes. And they ran with all speed to repor. their discovery.

Investigation was quickly made and it was decided that the man was a Canadian who had worked for Moore in the autumn previous to the fire, and had exhibited an extraordinary fondness for Dandy. Moore was fully exculpated and many an old neighbor offered an apology for his suspicion, while the insurance company settled the claim without delay. But the greatest joy and sorrow of his life came to Richard when his wife met him, trembling and weeping, and begged him to forgive her.

He could not understand for a time, though he recognized the great change in her, but at last, when she repeated over and over, "I saw you, you know—I mean I thought I did when it lightened," he caught a glimmer of her meaning and asked:

"You saw some one take Dandy out? Is that what you mean? Why in heaven's name didn't you say so at the time, so we could have searched for him?"

"Oh Dick, how could I, when I was sure it was you? I knew Dandy would never have let a stranger handle him. How could I tell others what you had done—what was killing me?"

"So you thought I—" he began sternly, but stopped short.

She had called him Dick after a year's silence, and he knew that she was very weak, with life and reason trembling in the balance. So he gathered all the strength of his manhood to protect her weakness, and taking her in his arms kissed the color back to her cheeks, though his own were pale as death.

A TRUE WOMAN.

The woman who holds a man's heart in her hands
Need not be pretty nor possessed of rich lands.
She needn't wear clothes just teeming with style;
She needn't possess the first worldly wile
Her eyes may be brown, her eyes may be blue,
To him she's a beauty away through and through
If she's true.
It's her soul that he cares for, her steadfast devotion,
Her love as unbounded, as free as the ocean,
The touch of her hands, the glance of her eye,
The swift rush of color that comes when he's nigh;
The thousand and one little things she can do
That show him so plainly right through and through
That she's true.
What does it matter if others are fairer?
She possesses a virtue that makes her far rarer
Than professional beauties, cold-hearted and vain.
She would give him her all and care not to gain,
Aught but a smile, a low "I love you,"
While his her whole being away through—
For she's true.
Days may be dark, days may be fair,
In sickness, in health, in joy, in despair,
She proves in each crisis that her love is real;
It shines on serenely, come woe or weal.
The world counts for nothing, what can it do
If she belongs to him utterly all through and through
And is true?

FATE TAKES A HAND.

"Come, Bess, pluck up courage, we are almost there."

"But we've been 'almost there' for the last five miles, and if it were not for offending your august dignity I declare that you don't know the road yourself."

"Oh, I say, Bess, that's too much. Haven't I been up to Rule's forty times and don't I know every pine needle and fern frond on the trail? Of course things look a bit queer in this half light, and it gets dark so confounded early in this red-wood thicket; but I couldn't miss the—Whoa, Mollie!"

This to the mare, which had stumbled over a hidden log, and brought up all standing at one of those airy fairy barb wire fences that seem to approach a traveller like a thief in the night.

It was on the trail to the Rule ranch away up on the Russian river, where the old Duncan mill used to be, and Bess and I had started out blithely that afternoon, thinking nothing of the sixteen miles "cross country" we had to ride in order to reach the ranch. 'Twas not in the gladsome summer time, by any means, being well along toward October, and it wasn't a very brilliant move on my part to propose such a trip, but the thought of having Bess all to myself for a few hours' romantic ride through the redwoods, made me fool-ish enough to venture it; and right here I want to ask any self-respecting man if he wouldn't have done the same?

Bess had a jolly, kind little way of comradeship that made me uncertain whether I could ever get her to think seriously of something that was fast becoming the "be all and end all" to the old ladies expressively put it. To save my life I couldn't bring her to the point of listening to a few very personal remarks. Before we left San Francisco in the same camping party (though in a deep land of my Machiavelian mentality), I had been unable to get more than a tantalizing glimpse of the fair damsel, owing to her multitudinous engagements for breakfast weddings, afternoon receptions, balls and nightly, she was a lit the pink tease herself.

But to return to our muttons, which speedily resolved itself into a pretty kettle of fish—a barb wire fence across the trail and two people within a vestige of an idea between them as to where they were or in which direction lay their destination. It looked like an all night camp then and there, for the sun had already set behind the tall redwoods, at least what I could struggle through the gathering rain clouds. But it would never do to let Bess know of my deep, dark forebodings, so I put on a sickly grin and pretended that I had been looking for the last half hour for that identical section of barb wire fencing.

Of course the elements were in collusion against us, and before we had decided on the next move rain drops came pattering down upon us in most gladsome fashion. Bess now wanted to take a hand in this little game of hide and seek.

"Don't you remember the redwood that was burned through last year when we were up here on a picnic, Bess? Well, we must be west of Dick's land? Of course it was, and—"

"Yes, but I have counted at least ten tall redwood skeletons since we turned off the main road. I'm firmly convinced that we are on the wrong side of the river—there, isn't that a boat on the other side?"

"Nuf said, Bess. See me do The Leander act and cross the Hellespont; only we're reversing things a trifle, Hero?"

"For heaven's sake don't get sentimental, or I shall better it and become hysterical! It's getting as dark as Egypt, and there's only one thing for it—that boat must be hypnotised over here."

"So be it. Get your gravy turned and light up, while I cross the Rubicon of our destiny."

Saying this I rode gingerly down the rocky bank and urged Mollie into the water. It was a case of swimming when midstream was reached, and once across there was some difficulty in making a landing; but finally the boat was unmoored—a leaky affair which some thoughtful person had provided with a tin lard pail for bailing purposes.

The trip back safely accomplished Bess was handed in with all pomp and ceremony, and then came her turn. Alas, getting a most unexpected shower bath when the beast made a plunge to scramble up the bank.

What with the water from above and below, and a moonless night close upon us, the situation wasn't exactly mirthful. I tried to kindle a fire, we having forlornly come to the conclusion that we must stay where we were for the rest of the night, as the underbrush was too thick on that side to penetrate, and we had given up all hope of coming upon human habitation. My efforts at striking matches were not a success, for they had been soaked, and both they and my patience gave out at the same time.

But when Bess began to look serious, and a little droop came to the corners of her lips, and an almost imperceptible quiver to that pretty, round chin, I cursed myself mentally for a selfish brute, and tried to make light of our dilemma, saying I could not accomplish it with the matches.

"I've a bright idea," I began.

"Keep it, Fred," she suggested, with a feeble attempt at gayety. "Use it for a torch to illumine our way."

"Pshaw, nonsense!" I responded, intensely relieved at seeing the threatened shadows flee, "you don't deserve to hear my plan, so instead—keep your eyes open," I ended in a mysterious whisper.

Finding some dry sticks and grass, I took the last cartridge from my gun and struck off the powder, getting a blaze in short order. Involuntarily I also added a side show to my circus.

"Oh, Fred, look at your moustache! And oh, see your eyebrows!" exclaimed Bess. Truly a feminine remark, and so easily acted upon.

"I think feeling is quite sufficient, thank you," came as tetly as circumstances would permit from my demented lips, as I tenderly caressed the place where my pet blond moustache had erstwhile been.

It is a dangerous thing to speak to a man when he has been shorn of half a moustache, the end of an eyebrow and most of his eyelashes at one fell swoop. But I had builded better than I knew and our camp fire was a great success.

I wrapped Bess in my big topcoat, not without some demurring on her part at what she called her highway robbery, and so it took some little time to accomplish the feat, you may surmise. Then, breaking boughs for a cosy resting place for my ladye faire I soon had a fine bed of leaves, and in spite of a highly nervous temperament and has not been taught to control the little wires, so to speak, on which he is strung. This is no single case. There are thousands of children who give way to their nerves in like fashion. Talk to them about these curious little fellows that should be their servants, not their masters. Never chastise them. The man or woman who chastises a nervous child is on a level with a brute that has no reason. Encourage them. Help them. Be patient with them. They are the making of our future successful men and women, for they will work hard at whatever they undertake. Brace up your nervous children and don't be indulgent toward the capers of your over-nervous children.—London Mail.

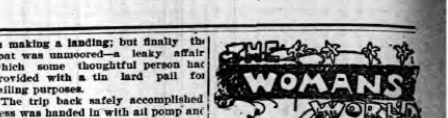
Expensive Cooking Utensils.

There is no better proof of the increased interest that women are taking in culinary matters than the dainty and costly cooking utensils to be found at the house furnishers. A saucepan made of the best copper, silver lined, and costing $42, tells its own story. Never before in the history of household furnishing goods has the enormous cost of culinary ware so expensive been put on the market. There are long handled frying pans of the best grade of copper, lined with silver, and costing as much as most people would give for a dress suit, and a copper stew pan of brie-a-brac for the drawing room. Dainty little stew pans cost from $4.40 up to $12.50, according to size. The smallest are hardly larger than a muffin ring. There are water boilers just large enough and costly enough as a handsome vase or drinking cup, and what women would be inclined to class as "dear little receptacles," of make and quality so fine that terrapin stew made in them can be set before the diner in the same vessel that it is cooked in. Yet a half dozen of these terrapin stew pans, made of copper and silver lined, cost $20—fitting holders for food so rare and far famed as Long Island and Chesapeake terrapin at $3 and $5 apiece.—New York Sun.

To Overcome Music Practice.

A young girl who is studying with one of the best known pianists has hit upon a plan to perfect herself in methods of teaching by going from house to house and superintending or practicing of her teacher's younger pupils. She is a sort of travelling musical governess. This is not only a great help to her in her musical studies, but also a great advantage to beginners and to their parents. The great burden of responsibility for musical progress of their children rests upon the parents. For, no matter how great the teacher, he cannot enforce practical work where is absent.

Many parents do not understand music, and so they do not know whether their children are practicing their music correctly or not. In the latter case they are perhaps acquiring habits which will retard their musical progress. And so the student governess has found a niche which has been waiting for her for some time.—New York Sun.



A Portable Wardrobe.

A lady going abroad has made herself what she calls a portable wardrobe. She frankly says that the idea is not original with her, but is an English notion, and that she has only copied an article which she once saw in London. The thing is so convenient and easily made, and the woman who travels or who in summer has a room in the average boarding house with the usual lack of closet space, may be glad to know exactly how this portable wardrobe is designed.

It is made of a large piece of waterproof cloth or canvas such as one sees used for gun cases, game bags and men's mackintoshes. This piece is five feet long by four wide, and is lined with brown holland. On the right and left sides of the canvas are stitched flaps of holland like the lining, each flap being the same width as the canvas and a little over half as long. Across the top of the canvas is fastened a rod with dress hooks. The wardrobe is hung against the wall with the rod at the top, gowns are suspended from the hooks and the flaps are then fastened over the gowns which are thus securely protected against dust and dampness.

At the back of this canvas dress preserver are straps and a handle attached, after the fashion of a shawl strap. When the owner of the dresses wishes to take with her this handy portable wardrobe on the bed, lays her skirts and waists in smoothly, buttons the flaps, rolls up the whole thing, straps it securely, and behold! it is ready to be carried or checked to the owner's destination.—Harper's Bazar.

Children With Nerves.

A word about nervous children. Of course there might be none, but there are thousands. Never scold them nor "make fun" of them. They suffer enough without your threats or ridicule. Pretend not to see their awkwardness when in company, nor their grimaces when alone. A case was discussed the other day of a boy of ten years old, who, on being vexed, and often without any apparent provocation, will clench his fists and make the most frightful contortions of the muscles of his face and head. His poor mother fears he is idiotic. By no means. He is the brightest boy in his class at school, fond of reading and of out-door sports. He is of a highly nervous temperament and has not been taught to control the little wires, so to speak, on which he is strung. This is no single case. There are thousands of children who give way to their nerves in like fashion. Talk to them about these curious little fellows that should be their servants, not their masters. Never chastise them. The FARMer

Keep the Tools Well Sharpened.

Above all things a farmer should keep his tools, from harvester, sickle and mowing machine to scythe, and one, sharp and bright. No man can do good and effective work with a dull tool, and every farmer should be ashamed to have a rusty one about his place. There are sickle grinders on the market that will make a sickle as sharp as a razor in a few minutes, while they are so nearly automatic that about all one has to do is to set the sickle in a frame and turn the handle. A light team will draw a mower fitted with a sharp sickle through the heaviest kind of grass with ease, while it would almost kill a heavy team to draw a dull sickle through it. Some farmers have the blacksmith draw the edge of the plowshare out very thin and then touch it up a little every morning and noon with a heavy file, while others keep an oil and beef stone out every morning. This latter operation requires some skill and good eyes, as well as a second person to hold the plow If a man has no handy power to turn the grindstone, it should be set in a frame with a crank and treadles so that one man can run it with ease and grind any tool rapidly.

Starting an Asparagus Bed.

Asparagus roots may be planted in spring or fall, but unless the ground is well drained, spring is preferable. Good strong one year old roots are best. The soil should be made as rich as possible. If very stony the stones should be removed, as they are much in the way in cutting the stalks. In garden culture it is best to dig trenches about three or four feet apart and 12 inches deep; then put in a layer of manure to fill about half of the trench after it has been packed down. On this put two or three inches of soil on which place the roots, spreading them out in all directions, and cover with fine soil, packing down all around. The plants should not stand closer than two feet in the rows, and as they start to grow more soil should be drawn into the trenches until the surface is level again. All that is necessary during the season is to keep the ground loose and free from weeds. To raise a first class crop the bed has to be manured every year by scattering manure over the plants in the fall. If white or blanched asparagus is desired, the roots have to be set deeper and the rows have to be hilled up similar to what is done with celery.—American Agriculturalist.

Use for Lan l A ong Hedgerows.

A great many farmers who have hedges around their farms complain of the room they take up and the loss on either side. Even when kept well trimmed, corn, wheat, oats and such crops will not thrive there, and in consequence a strip is left unc ltivated each season. Now this need not be if the farmer really desires to utilize that ground along his hedges. Usually the soil has become very fertile on account of the decaying of much foliage, and by running a harrow over it the ground is prepared for turnip or rutabaga seed. A fine crop of turnips can be grown along these condemned hedge rows and will be out of the way there. These products will sell in the market or will furnish food for stock. If bees are kept then buckwheat may be sown along the hedge, and its blossoms will furnish them honey. There are always ways to utilize these vacant or neglected bits of land if we will stop to think.—A. H. Gibson.

Birds as Insect Destroyers.

Dr. C. F. Hodge of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., writes about birds as insect destroyers. In an orchard near his home he found nine grubs of the codling month in one minute. Chancing to visit another orchard not far from there the next day he found only four grubs in an hour's search. The owner of the farm said that in an old barn near by lived seventy-five to one hundred bats, and his apples were always free from worms. Dr. Hodge caught a bat and offered it some of the grubs, which were greedily accepted. He also took a dozen bats home and kept them in the parlor. They made their home in the top folds of the window draperies, flying about at night and sometimes in the daytime. From time to time netfuls of night flying insects were released in the room and never one remained in the morning. The bats took everything, from a spider to a polywog, and the next morning the doctor counted while a bat devoured sixty-eight house flies.

A Superior Paris Green Mixture.

The main difficulty in successfully spraying potatoes is that rain washes the poison off the vines frequently within an hour after its application. An easy and inexpensive way to spray potatoes in wet weather is to use ten pounds of flour to a barrel of water and about one-half to one pound of Paris green. Mix the flour in a bucket or buckets to the consistency of thin cream, mix the paris green into this liquid then add to the water and keep agitated while spraying. The flour keeps the poison in suspension in the barrel and when the liquid falls on the vines forms a paste which holds the poison on the vines and will pass through many rain storms and continue to destroy bugs. With this method one spraying will kill all bugs and save the crop.

Never Cures to Wander.

The range of the honey bee is but little understood by the masses, many supposing that bees go for miles in quest of nectar, while others think that they go only a short distance. It may be curious to many to understand how anyone can tell how far the bee may fly, but this is simple when understand.

Years ago, when the Italian bees were first introduced in the United States, these bees, having marks different to the common bees already here, were easily distinguished, and often any bee keeper had obtained the Italian bees they could be observed and their range easily noticed. If bloom is plentiful near where bees are located, they will not go very far, perhaps a mile in range, but if bloom is scarce they may go five miles. Usually about three miles is as far as they may go profitably.

Bees have been known to go as far as eight miles in a straight line, crossing a body of water that distance to land.

If, while the little bee is out of its home or hive, the hive should be removed some ten or twenty feet, according to the surroundings, when it came back to where its home was first located it would be hopelessly lost. If its home has been in the open with no other objects close, it might find its way home, but, even if the hive should be moved only a few feet, many of the bees would get lost.

So to move a hive, if done in the winter time, it would be all right, but if in the summer time it should be done after dark, or when the bees are not flying, and even then the bees should be stirred up some and smoke blown in at the hive entrance and a board or some object placed in front of the hive so that the bees in coming out may mark their new location. Bees, no doubt, are guided by sight and also by sense of smell. They are attracted by the color of bloom, as, if they are at work on a certain kind of bloom, they are not likely to leave that particular kind of bloom for any other as long as they can find that kind.

Again, bees are often attracted to sweets by their sense of smell, for they will go after sweets even if in the dark, if close. However, any kind of sweets may be placed in glass in plain sight, but if covered, so as not to emit any smell, the bees will take no notice of them.—Baltimore American.

Fall Plowing of Stubble Land.

The most common mistake in preparing ground for fall grains is waiting until just before seeding time or about the last week in August and the first in September. There are several reasons why early plowing is best. The weeds that have started after the cutting of the small grains are turned under and kept from seeding. This is no small consideration where the ground is at all foul. If some of the ground near the surface should start after plowing, go over the field with a harrow or some kind of a cultivator and allow none to develop.

The chief value of early plowing is that the fullest opportunity to become well pulverized and compacted before seeding time. If the land is hard when plowed the numerous worms which abound in given it, early rains of late summer and early autumn will sloughing it and obliterate damage, if present when the seed is sown. Many failures with winter grains can be traced to late plowing and imperfect preparation of the seed bed.

Begin plowing as soon as the shocks have been removed from the field. This will vary from the second week in July to the first week in August. A depth of about five inches is usually sufficient, depending somewhat upon the character of the soil. In a few days go over the field with a harrow in order to level the ground and create a soil mulch to prevent excessive evaporation. Drag or roll several times during the fall and follow each time with a harrow to keep the surface. Seed the fall grains from September 10 to 20, always using a press drill.

Finely Cut Silage Keeps Best.

The extra labor involved in removing the whose corn from the silo is a serious drawback to that method of storing, although fodder corn placed in the silo whole has in many instances come out in good condition. All things considered, however, close packing proves most desirable. Cut silage can be more closely packed and the air will be more completely excluded than when the crop is put in whole. For these reasons the finely cut silage will be subjected to a smaller degree of fermentation and the losses should be correspondingly less.

The advantages of slow filling against rapid filling have been strongly urged as a means of procuring second grade sweet silage. Sweet silage, however, is a misnomer, when used to designate a definite condition. Such a product as strictly sweet silage never came from a silo, and the term, if used at all, should be one of degree rather than of kind.

Slow filling causes a greater degree of heat to develop and this tends to soften the mass and cause closer packing, while the high temperature does not favor the forming of acids. At this high temperature, 125 to 150 degrees F., certain forms of fermentation often progress rapidly, and the fact that less acid is formed when slow filling is practiced does not prove that there is a smaller loss of food constituents during the silofing process.—American Agriculturalist.

BASEBALL TOPICS.

PASSING OF THE OLD TIMERS.

Some Remarkable Records Made By Veteran Ball Players.

This seems to be the year for the downfall of "old timers." The retirement of the "oldest and noblest Roman of them all," Adrian C. Anson, seemed to be the signal for a break in the ranks of the vets. Within the last week Dan Brouthers, who has been drawing salary as a professional ball player for over 20 years, received his "ticket of leave." As Dan was fired by a minor league club it means that the greatest batter the game ever knew is probably out of it for all time to come. Next came the dismissal of Billy Barnie, manager of the Brooklyns. He has been a player and a manager ever since 1875. He helped organize the American Association, Barnie was strictly honest, and never knew the time that he was afraid to say just what he thought. He called a spade a spade at all times and at all places. He was once unjustly blacklisted, along with two other martyrs to the game, Fred Pfeffer and Al Buckenburger. It was an unheard-of and unjust ruling by the National League, and will always stand as a black mark on the fair name of the parent base ball organization. None of the three did any more than look after their own interests. They should not have been barred by the league. Following closed on the heels of Billy Barnie came the dismissal of Tom Brown from the Washington management, and the release of Billy Nash by the Philadelphia Club.

Nash and Brown came to fast base ball company the same year. Both have been drawing good salaries for 14 years. Brown first attracted attention with the American Association club at Columbus, Ohio, in 1884, and it was this same season that Nash made his major league appearance with the Richmond (Va.) Club also in the American Association. One by one the old line guard is passing away. It will not be long at the rate the old-timers are dropping out before none of those who started out in the early eighties will be found on any of the league clubs' rosters. Sam Thompson, who started in 1885, and Charlie Ganzel, who branched out as a major league star in 1884, are two more veterans who bit the dust of dismissal this year. There are not over a half dozen players in the National League whose period of service runs back as far as 1886.

The thinning out of the ranks of the veterans only emphasizes Biddy McPhee's greatness. He has been a major league star since 1888, and after 17 seasons of consecutive service he stands at the head of all major league second basemen. Best of all, he is batting harder this season than he ever did, and is one of the only three members of the Cincinnati team with a batting average of over 300 per cent. for this year.

Richard J. Padden, the second baseman of the Pittsburg Club, was born at Martin's Ferry, W. Va., in 1870. He has recently rejoined his team, while he deserted when President Watkins fined him $25 for conduct which resulted in his being put out of a game by an umpire. Padden began his career as an amateur pitcher at his home and in small cities of Ohio near the West Virginia line. His arm having lost its cunning, Padden became a second baseman in 1894. The following season found him with the Roanoke Club of Virginia League, which he captained and also managed for a while. The Pittsburg Club secured him in 1896 and he went to its farm at Toronto, Can., until July, when he was recalled to take the place of Bierbauer, who was injured. Padden's excellent work led to the release of Bierbauer and his retention as the regular second baseman of that team. He plays the points of the game for all they are worth and ranks high as a batsman.

Subrigueties of Connecticut Towns.

There are the subrigueties of the various Connecticut League towns: Meriden, the Bull Dogs; Derby, the Angels; Bridgeport, the Orators; Waterbury, the Pirates; Danbury, the Hatters; New Britain, the Dummies; New London, the Whalers; New Haven, the Colts.

Ordeals.

Waiting for a lunch or breakfast
Is a trial hard to bear;
Waiting for a car of carriage
Makes the victim sometimes swear.
Waiting for a friend or loved one
Makes of life a mournful wreck;
But there's nothing racks the system
Quite like waiting for a check.

Summer Sadness.

In autumn we lament the tree
Which died 'neath skies so chill and gray,
But now it's even worse to see
Our collars droop and fade away.

BEAN-BAG SONG.

Bean-bag, bean-bag flying through the sky,
Come and let me catch you—
Do not fly too high!
Now I send you back again;
Do not fly too low,
Fall into my hands, and then
Up again you go!

Bean-bag, bean-bag, sailing in the sun,
Why do you come down so soon
When your flight's begun?
Spread your wings and fly away!
I'd change you to a bird
Were I a fairy who could say
The secret, magic word!

Bean-bag, bean-bag, wouldn't it be funny
If I were but a princess,
And you a bag of money?
But if you fell upon her nose
It would make the virgin cross scold!
Bean-bags are safer, I suppose,
Than silver or than gold!
—Christopher Valentine in St. Nicholas.

Tricks in Swimming.

Plain swimming, with its attendant diving, treading water, floating and rolling in the warm sand, is quite good enough sport for most young people. But there are a number of tricks and games in swimming which will help to make the sport more fascinating than it is.

Few people realize how very nearly the human body comes to floating. Drop your arm loosely in the water, and it will rest near the surface, buoyed in its place by the pressure of the water. It is here not for the weight of the head in proportion to the weight of the body a man would swim as easily and naturally as a horse or dog. With these facts in mind, the good swimmer or floater keeps as much of his body under the surface as he can. On the same principle a swimmer may keep himself afloat by holding a very small piece of wood in each hand, provided he allows himself to sink deep into the water. It merely requires a little confidence in letting the body go deep into the water.

A boy who falls overboard from a ship, if he keeps cool and does not try to raise himself out of the water, as many frightened people do, can keep afloat for some time by paddling gently, his clothing acting as a float until it becomes well soaked.

One of the greatest sports "in swimming" may be had with a rubber tube ten or twelve feet long. Two large empty spools are fastened to the ends of the spool by crowding the rubber into the hole in the middle of each, which has first been enlarged with a jack knife. The swimmer allows the tube to float on the surface of the water or fastens it near a stone or log on shore or next to a stake driven into the water. Then he places the other spool in his mouth and sinks out of sight under the water. Of course he can breathe through the tube, and he can remain a considerable length of time without rising to the surface. Any boy can readily imagine the various pranks he may be played with such an invention. It is also very useful in diving for lost objects.—Boston Journal.

Paddy Polan's Bath.

It was the day of "the greatest show on earth," the "Eleven Elephant Show," and all the little ragamuffins in town had followed the circus wagons from car to show ground, and from there to the river, where the eleven elephants were given the unusual treat of a bath; or rather the chance to bathe themselves, and one another.

The small boys of the place spent most of their summer days "going in" the canal, and with them was one little, pug-nosed, freckle-faced little fellow—Paddy Polan by name—who could neither be coaxed nor driven into the water.

Paddy was the most mischievous, as well as the direst, of them all, and no sooner had the creatures from the circus entered the water and began to enjoy their clumsy gambols, with loud trumpetings and the dashing of fountains of air over one another, than Paddy stationed himself on the edge of the bank and began to throw stones and unkind remarks at them.

The elephants, whose drab velvet coats had been changed to black satin by the water, were at first too happy to be teased, but their keeper, who had walked beside the baby elephant to the river, carrying in his arms a great milk bottle from which she took her dinner, warned Paddy not to hit the baby, as the mother elephant, Beatrice, was very cross.

Paddy foolishly kept on, and soon a stone struck the baby, and before the boy could make his escape, the mother, with a yell of rage, had seized him in her trunk, and then him out into the middle of the river.

The crowd was silent with horror, expecting to see poor Paddy dashed to pieces or his life trampled out by the herd. But, no, the others all stood back, and let Mme. Beatrice punish as she would.

She dipped the struggling Paddy in the water, then taking him to where the baby stood she used him as a scrubbing brush, or soft of a wash rag on his fat back and sides.

Then, while every one screamed with laughter, she threw Paddy on the bank, a sadder, wiser and cleaner boy, and there a chorus of voices greeted him, crying:

"Paddy went in! Paddy Polan went in!"

MME. LE PLONGEON'S ADVENTURES AND EXPLORATIONS IN YUCATAN.

Spent Her Honeymoon Studying Spanish, Then Had Yellow Fever—Archaeological Researches With Her Husband in Central American Forest.

Archaeology is the last thing one would think of in connection with Mme. Le Plongeon. There is no flavor of ruins and antiquities about her; on the contrary, she is modern to her fingertips, yet she has endured untold discomforts and dared a host of dangers in the interests of science, and she talks of prehistoric peoples and of Yucatan bas reliefs as familiarly as most women talk of clothes.

She was not born to archaeology; but married it, in the person of Dr. Le Plongeon, when she was a girl of 19. Dr. Le Plongeon had spent many years in the study of American antiquities, and his stories of the life and work made his bride look upon archaeology as a most fascinating pursuit. Later, Mme. Le Plongeon took up that of the antiquarian; but, when one hears her tell of her years in Yucatan and Honduras, with their difficulties and dangers, their discomforts and delights, one cannot help thinking that it was the poetic, picturesque side of the experience that appealed most strongly to her, though she made reverent obeisance to the ugly gods which her husband unearthed.

At the time of his marriage, Dr. Le Plongeon was planning an examination of the ancient ruins of Yucatan, but the honeymoon was spent in New York in order that Mme. Le Plongeon might learn Spanish. Yucatan is only two hours' sail from Cuba, and has recently made long strides in progress; but when the Le Plongeons arrived in Merida in 1873 the town was far from imposing, and the smaller places were painfully primitive. The first use Mme. Le Plongeon made of her opportunity for acquiring new experience was to fall ill with yellow fever. The natives cheerfully insisted that she could not live, and made preparations for her burial on the sixth day; but, thanks to the fact that her husband was a physician as well as an archaeologist, she pulled through, and enjoyed the proud distinction of being the only white victim of that particular epidemic who escaped the undertaker. When she had recovered from her illness, the delayed expedition started; and for eleven years the husband and wife worked earnestly, undauntedly together, solving the problems hidden in the ruins of Ake, Ishtul, and Chichen.

"The life was hard," said Mme. Le Plongeon. "There were fatiguing journeys, uncomfortable quarters, troublesome insects, omnipresent dirt, frequent dangers, and often starving sometimes we would be where we could not get supplies, not even the mouldy tortillas and black beans which were our usual resource. We would hunt for deer or other game, but somehow or other game always eludes a starving man. I've seen the time when I was so hungry that I was in abject despair because a rattlesnake escaped me."

"I'd call that a cause for thanksgiving," said the reporter.

"But I wanted a rattlesnake stew. Oh, you needn't look disgusted. It's delicious, I assure you; and a rattlesnake is much handsomer than an eel, if you are looking at the aesthetic side of the question. Then, a rattlesnake's escape would be no special cause for thanksgiving, anyway. They are amiable creatures."

The reporter looked dubious and remarked: "I've always understood that they had a few little peculiarities that were annoying."

"Not at all," Mme. Le Plongeon insisted. "A rattlesnake never bothers any one if he isn't insulted. There were hundreds of them down in Yucatan, and I never had a moment's disagreeable with one except I wanted it for stew. I remember we were once going through the forest in search of deer. Dr. Le Plongeon was ahead, I came next, and an Indian lad followed. I stopped to examine a gigantic toadstool, and suddenly, lashing its tail in a self-respecting manner, when the Indian shouted, 'Go away!' I supposed he thought the toadstool was poisonous and I would touch it; so I reassured him on that point, but he kept on saying, 'Go away!' and looked up so frightened that I hurried on to see what was behind. When I stopped to look back I saw, just beside the toadstool, a huge rattlesnake coiled. I must have been touching him where I stood. He was moving his head back and forth and darting out his tongue in a peculiar way, as though he meant to say: 'Now, get out of this. You're bothering me.' I apologized to him and went away. You see, he wasn't vicious. For that matter, I never saw a snake that was, and yet the country down there abounds in poisonous varieties. I still have a pair of boots I had made to an angleworm, but I got so that I didn't fear snakes at all. Some of them were beautiful. One day among the ruins, I was just stepping down from a big stone when out from under it came a superb snake about five feet long and marked with alternate rings of jet black and bright coral. He had his head in the air, and we looked at one another with mutual respect. I bowed and said, 'After you!' and he politely glided away, putting on a few extra graces and curves. I fancied, because he knew I was watching him. The venom of the little coral snake is deadly; but I've sometimes had to chase three or four of the pretty things out of my room before I could go to bed."

HOUSE HOLD TALKS

AN OUTDOOR ROOM.

Every year the veranda is becoming more and more an integral part of the house beautiful. It is no longer merely a shelter from the elements, sparsely furnished with chairs, but is a living-room and treated as such, and is furnished with the same taste and care that are bestowed upon the rest of the rooms. Of course, it goes without saying that both the textiles and furniture employed must be as far as possible weather-proof, but this is no handicap nowadays, as rugs and materials that defy rain and snow are to be had in the greatest variety—except directly on the seashore, where the dampness and high winds make it impossible. An out-door room, netted in so that the lights at night will not attract troublesome insects, prettily and comfortably furnished, should be a part of every country house. Curtains made of colored awning cloth and hung with small brass rings on a slender galvanized iron rod, so that they may easily be pushed forward and back, are both useful and pretty, although some people prefer Venetian blinds or the rattan shades, which now come for verandas of any width desired. Hammocks, of course, are the natural lounging place of a veranda room, but they are now made much more elaborately than formerly, with valences hanging on either side, and piled up with cushions of many colors. Another recent accessory to outdoor furniture which has become popular is the swinging sofa, legless, of course, swung by four chains to the roof, and filled with cushions. Even the divan has been adapted to open-air furnishing.

The accompanying sketch shows one which filled a corner of the veranda of a seaside cottage last summer. The shape is an irregular elongated triangle, with two sides against the walls of the house, and consists of a frame a foot high, on which is a mattress covered with India-rubber cloth. Over this is a buttoned covering of green denim, with a flounce, and the drapery, consists of an old sail and a fish net, which is held up by a pair of oars and a crabnet, all of which have been well-seasoned by wind and weather.

Chocolate Ice Cream.

An excellent chocolate ice cream may be made of a quart of cream, a pint of milk, a large tablespoonful of English gelatine, a cup and a half of sugar, two ounces of unsweetened chocolate scraped fine, and a tablespoonful of vanilla extract. Soak the gelatine as before, stir it into a cup of the milk, and strain it into the cream. Stir the scraped chocolate into the remainder of the milk, which must also be heated to the boiling point; stir the prepared chocolate gradually into the hot milk until the chocolate is all melted and the whole is a smooth dark mass. Add the sugar and stir all into the cream. Add the vanilla and freeze carefully.

Excellent Veal Curry.

Slice an onion and fry it to a delicate brown in two ounces of butter, add the same quantity of flour, and mix till smooth and brown, adding by degrees half a teaspoonful of curry powder, one bay leaf, one sprig of parsley, one cup of cream and one cup of stock. Simmer all together for twenty minutes, strain and add about three-quarters of a pound of cold cooked veal cut into small pieces; heat all together and serve in a border of rice. Scatter chopped parsley lightly over the rice after it is set on the dish.

Keeping a Meal Hot.

When it is necessary to keep a meal hot for a belated comer, do not set the plate holding the food in a hot oven, thus discoloring the china as well as drying the food; instead, place the plate upon the flat rim of a pan of boiling water, covering the plate with a pan that will just fit over the edge of the plate. The food will keep hot and there will be enough steam from the boiling water in the lower pan to keep the plate moist and prevent the contents becoming dried.

Banana Ice Cream.

Use one dozen fine ripe bananas, the juice of one lemon, and two oranges, one pint of sugar and one quart of water. Boil the sugar and water together, for five minutes and when cold peel the bananas, mash them fine and add at once to the syrup with the fruit juices. Freeze. When done remove the dasher and stir in the stiffly beaten white of one egg, repack and set aside until serving time.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

Fawn colored cashmere and golden brown silk ribbon velvet made this handsome dress, the yoke and collar being of very fine linen batists that comes all ready tucked for this purpose.

The simple and stylish arrangement of this costume recommends it to mothers who do their own sewing, it being well adapted to the making over that has so often to be done where the family is large. A yoke of velvet, silk or other contrasting material, with the fitting portions of the sleeves, to match, will eke out short material, while the rows of velvet will cover up joints that are unavoidable when adding to the length of both skirt and waist.

A sash worn around the waist gives added style to this otherwise up-to-date costume. The blouse waist is arranged over fitted linings, the yoke being cut square in Pompadour style, and the closing is made invisible in centre back.

Square cornered epaulettes turn back stylishly from the yoke, bands of velvet forming a pretty trimming. The five-gored skirt is gathered in the back and the top is sewed to the lower edge of the waist, the sash being tied in a small looped bow in centre back. This style is as well adapted to cotton as to woolen fabrics and will be found easy to launder if the epaulettes are made adjustable and the lower edge of puffs arranged on a draw string.

To make this gown for a girl of eight years will require three yards of 44-inch material.

Lady's Blouse Waist.

French organdy, showing a bluet design with green leaves on a white ground is here tastefully decorated with blue baby ribbon and white lace. The full waist has the front and back shaped in one portion with a perfectly straight upper edge. This is gathered in five evenly spaced rows which are distributed over the neck of the glove fitted lining which supports the fulness.

Smooth under-arm gores separate the full fronts and back and the lining closes the centre front.

fitted lining which supports the fulness.

Smooth under-arm gores separate the full fronts and back and the lining closes the centre front.

The full waist may close at the left shoulder and under-arm seam, or the more practical centre front closing is quite possible and can be readily made invisible, if so preferred.

The full waist can be cut off at the lower line of perforations and the smooth yoke only used as shown in the small sketch.

To make this waist for a lady of medium size two and a half yards of material, 44 inches wide, will be required.

KEAN GETS THE RIGHT FOR COUNTY TROLLEY

Offer of $250,000 Accepted by Board of Freeholders.

SIX MEMBERS ARE OPPOSED

PROMINENT CITIZENS HEARD FOR AND AGAINST THE PLAN.

County Attorney Codington Will Draw Up a Bond for Mr. Kean and it Will Then be Submitted to the Supreme Court for Approval—Plainfield Freeholders Voted to Accept Offer.

John Kean has added another great franchise to those he already holds. It is the right to construct and operate an electric street railway over the proposed widened boulevard—the greatest improvement ever undertaken in Union county.

The Board of Freeholders met in executive session last Monday, and by a vote of 11 to 6 accepted the offer of Mr. Kean of $250,000 for the franchise.

There was a large crowd of citizens from all parts of the county in attendance at the meeting, which was held prior to the Board going into executive session, to give the people a chance to express their views on the subject. Speeches in opposition to granting the franchise to Mr. Kean were made by William Drysdale and Alfred J. McIntire, of Cranford, and Lawyer Depue, who represented Cranford property-owners. Theodore McGarrah, of Westfield, sent a written protest against the franchise being awarded, and warned the Freeholders that the cost would be largely in excess of Mr. Kean's bid. J. H. Bronson, of Elmora, was also opposed to it.

Remarks in favor of giving Mr. Kean the franchise were made by Judge Gilhooly, Lawyer Louis A. Graff, ex-Congressman Amos Clark, ex-County Engineer Louis Quien, ex-School Commissioner Charles Moore, and ex Councilman Oliver Story, of Elizabeth; James T. Pierson, of Westfield, and Isaac Newton, of Cranford.

The Freeholders instructed County Attorney Codington to draw up a bond which will be signed by Mr. Kean and then submitted to Judge Van Syckel for his approval, in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Mr. Kean will begin at once to get the consents of property owners, and will also apply to the Elizabeth City Council for permission to connect his East Grand and East Jersey street horse railroad line with the proposed county trolley line.

The Freeholders who voted against granting the franchise were Robison, of Fanwood; Higgins, of Linden; Swayne, of Summit; Adams, of Cranford; Wahl, of New Providence, and Scudder, of Westfield.

AGED COUPLE'S HOME NEEDS MANY GIFTS

Destitution of the Clarks Worse Than The Press Told.

THINGS THAT THEY NEED.

CONTRIBUTIONS CAN BE LEFT AT THE DAILY PRESS OFFICE.

Mrs. Wallace Vail Visited the Ramshackle Shanty That Serves Them for a Home and Found Their Condition Pitiable—Both are Sickly and Deserve a Few Comforts in Their Last Days.

The dramatic recital in The Daily Press of the pitiful condition of the old fish-peddler, Jim Clark, and his wife in their ramshackle board hut near Stony Hill, has resulted in the bettering of the condition of the aged couple. Several philanthropic people of this city have visited the shanty and seen for themselves the destitute condition of the Clarks, and have extended aid to the couple.

Among those who went to see the couple was Mrs. Wallace Vail. She confirmed the reports of the others that their destitution was even greater than that pictured in The Daily Press. She says that their home is certainly one of destitution.

As a result of her visit Mrs. Vail learned that they have groceries on hand now that will last about two weeks. When they are gone they have no prospect of getting more, unless they are brought by some charitably-minded people. They are sadly in need of sheets and bed clothing.

Mrs. Clark is seventy-six years old. Her bed is upstairs. The bed is clean, but the only covering is a comforter of rags. She is troubled with a cough, coming from lung difficulty and asthma combined. She needs medicine for it.

Clark had a fall some time ago, as was told in The Press, which compels him to sleep down stairs, being unable to climb the ladder to the upper story. He has a running sore on his leg, the result of a dog bite, which requires many bandages, now lacking.

A set of springs for a bed would be gratefully received by those who are now looking after the aged couple. All articles of comfort or cash subscriptions for their aid can be left at The Press office and will be forwarded to the destitute couple at once by Mrs. Vail or Henry Rogers, who lives near the Clarks, one of the workers in the Wilson Memorial chapel.

James Clark, of West Seventh street, recently visited the home of the destitute people and gave them two complete suits of underclothing which was greatly needed. Mr. Clark, of this city, is no relation, but the Clark of Stony Hill was employed many years ago in carting bark to the tannery of the father of the Plainfielder.

AMERICAN SUNDAY NOT CONEY ISLAND KIND

Rev. Carlos Martyn's Terse Ideas Of The Sabbath.

IS FOR WORSHIP AND HOME.

HE SAYS THAT SUNDAY IS ONE OF GOD'S BEST GIFTS TO MEN.

A Class of People Cradled on the Other Side of the Ocean Are Antagonistic to American Ideas—The Press, He Says, Champions Things That as a Rule Injure the Keeping of the Day.

Sunday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. building at 4:15 o'clock, Rev. Carlos Martyn, of New York gave an interesting talk on "The American Sunday," a subject which always attracts. There was a good-sized audience present that listened attentively to what Dr. Martyn had to say. In part he spoke as follows:

"God has set apart one day in the week as a time of worship, and that day has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. Sunday, the first day of the week, the higher courts do not sit, the legislatures do no business, banks, exchanges, amusements and business is suspended on that day.

In the first place, the day should be used as a day of worship; secondly, as a home day. The great trouble with the American people is that they are born in a hurry, live in a hurry, die in a hurry, and are taken to the cemetery on a trot.

"In the third place, it should be a day when one another's companionship should be enjoyed. I would not like to see a return of the Puritan Sabbath, when it would be a crime for a man to kiss his own wife. Lastly, the day should be given to good works as largely as possible, to clothing, feeding and instructing those who need such.

"Sunday is one of God's best gifts to men, and possessing such a day we should be willing and ready to surrender all for that day. There are several things that tend to work against a proper observance of the day, and among them are the brothel, gambling den, grog shop. In the second place, there is a class cradled on the other side of the water that are taught to regard Sunday as a work day, and these people hinder the work of Sabbath observance. We have typical American in Dewey, Schley, Sampson. Those men have given the law, they have not taken it.

"Now, in a great measure these things that injure the observance of the Sabbath day are championed by the American press, which is called the American Bible. Through the Sunday edition of the newspaper we have a most insidious thing that leads people away. People who read the Sunday newspaper read of the flesh, the world and the devil. What is the average newspaper? It is an expression of instantaneous thought. The newspaper says something and then gets behind a stone wall to see what the effect will be. Until there is conversion we may always expect the paper to champion these things. They claim to speak for the people and say that the library, museums must be open on Sunday, and that concerts must be given, simply for the reason that during the week the working people have no time to enjoy these things. Those who espouse such things for the working people are just the ones who would like to have a Coney Island Sunday. Sunday is distinctively an American institution and if it is God's day we must keep it. If it is man's day people will be inclined to keep it to suit themselves. It is a grand institution and it behooves all to so regard it."

WHAT THE SHEARS' FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Perth Amboy stands on its rights in the matter of street railway franchises. Two electric railway companies have had applications for franchises before the Board of Aldermen for more than a year, and have finally withdrawn them as hopeless. They claim that the terms demanded by the Aldermen are too high, "suicidal," as they express it, and no further attempts will be made to secure the needed right of way through the streets. The terms are thus summarized: "The city demands that after operating its lines in Perth Amboy for five years each company shall pay to the city treasury two per cent. of its gross receipts. At the end of each five years after that there is to be a raise of one per cent. until at the end of twenty-five years, the city will receive twenty-five per cent. of the gross earnings of the companies." These terms, which are regarded as "suicidal" in Perth Amboy, would, in twenty-five years, be precisely the same as those under which the trolley lines are operated in Newark.—Newark News.

FAIR ONES GO IN FREE.

BASEBALL GROUNDS EXTEND A WELCOME TO THE WOMEN.

Riverdale Boys Do the Gallant Thing—Good Clean Ball, Such as Will Abound There, Ought to be an Attraction.

The Crescent Oval is quite a way out but still, with all the Riverdale boys there, baseball seems destined to be popular with the townsfolk once more. It was a rousing opening for the National game that the cranks saw at the Oval last Saturday. So pleasing was it that the old timers who braved the threatening storm and went up there, all vowed to go again next Saturday. Altogether, the beginning of the career of the Riverdale Field Club as a Plainfield organization was bright to crowd and to management.

There was another thing evident and that was that the grand-stand was a perfectly proper place to which to take a lady. The game was clean and free from all objectionable features and the accommodations were excellent. There were a number of ladies present, but the management wants the united support of the Plainfield ladies.

It was with that end in view that Manager Haley announced that he would follow the precedent set by the Plainfield A. A. football team last year and admit the ladies free to the games for the remainder of the season. Further than that, the best section of the grand-stand will be reserved hereafter for ladies unaccompanied and ladies with their escorts. The grounds, grand-stand and all, will be free to the members of the fair sex who patronize the games the rest of this season. Now, Robert C. Wood, the president of the club, and Manager Haley are racking their brains for some other way in which to win the good graces of the representatives of the fair sex in Plainfield.

The free checking of wheels was found to be very popular and will be continued for the rest of the season. Some of the spectators who did not care to invest a dime to check their wheels became rather excited when the young man in charge of the wheel racks insisted in checking them but a few words of explanation that it was all free set things right.

The management has decided to retain the old name of Riverdale Field Club and hereafter the organization will be known as the Riverdale Field Club of Plainfield. Not a bad name, is it?

Saturday afternoon, the crack team from the Arlington Athletic Association, of Arlington, N. J., will try conclusions with Plainfield's new stars. The visiting team has been doing some great work and is considered right up in the front rank. Several weeks ago they met the Orange Athletic Club and were defeated by a score of 3 to 2.

thought it was a wrong thing to increase Mr. Murray's salary.

Mr. Buckle also took exception to the raise of $100 in Mr. Murray's salary, and stated that there are others who deserve honors as well as Mr. Murray. He said that he could not vote in the affirmative on the subject unless he knew something more definite about the matter.

This ventilation of the subject resulted in the matter being laid over until the next meeting. Mr. Jennings was confirmed as second assistant at a salary of $600 a year, while Mr. Murray was made first assistant and for the present his salary was left as it is.

Andrew J. Gavett, as a member of the Board of Health, tendered his resignation on account of increased duties as street commissioner, and the same was accepted.

In conclusion, Mr. Hetfield offered a resolution that it be the sense of the Council that Messrs. Tier and Hubbard, the two local members of the Board of Freeholders, do not concur with the other members of the Board in opposing the granting of the trolley franchise on Richmond street as proposed by the Council. This resolution was adopted and copies were ordered sent to the two members. The meeting then adjourned to Monday evening, August 29th.

The streets in this city claimed as county roads by the Union County Board of Freeholders include North avenue, Richmond street and East Third street. These are the streets against which the Board has filed a remonstrance regarding the construction of a trolley road by parties not sanctioned by the Board of Freeholders. The Board claim the streets under the county road act adopted last winter at Trenton.

TWO MEN TUGGED TO STOP RUNAWAY HORSE.

An Exciting Time Made By a Frightened Horse.

ONE MAN HELD EACH REIN.

WAGON STRUCK THE HORSE'S HEELS AND HE BOLTED.

Clark Mundy and William Watt Were in the Wagon and They Were Sent Flying Through the Air When the Vehicle Was Overturned—Watt's Face Cut—Wagon Was a Complete Wreck.

With one man at each rein, a frightened horse with butcher wagon attached went flying out Somerset street last evening. It was just past 6 o'clock. For block after block the wild ride continued. Then the man on the right gave a terrible pull on his rein. The horse sprang to the right. There was a grinding sound, a crash and a series of other crashes. Two forms flew through the air and the horse rushed forth from the wreck and continued on his way alone.

It was altogether the most exciting ride that Clark Mundy, of the firm of Crane & Mundy, West Front street butchers, and their clerk, William Watt, ever had. What tended to make it particularly exciting was the fact that it promised serious injury or perhaps death for both of the men.

They were going down Somerset street in the direction of the mountain. At Chatham street the breeching broke and allowed the wagon to run up on the heels of the horse. Frightened at that, the animal bolted. Mundy grabbed one rein and Watt the other. So they went.

Watt feared to pull in the horse for fear that the wagon coming right at the horse's heels would frighten the equine even more. Mundy was for trying to stop the animal. The ride continued until they reached Linden avenue. Then Mundy decided on desperate means and gave a terrible pull on his rein. As a result the horse made a sudden swerve, the wheels struck the car track and the wagon turned a complete somersault.

As the wagon went over, Mundy shot out of the opening at the side and went rolling over the street. Watt went down in the wreck of the wagon and finally crawled out of the debris, his face partially covered with blood that flowed from a cut just under the eye. Although it bled freely, the cut was not a deep one.

The wagon was a complete wreck as was the harness, part of which had been torn off the horse when the accident occurred. The horse was afterwards caught some distance out Somerset street and brought back. It was not injured.

Next morning both men were able to return to work although somewhat bruised as a result of the tumble on the hard roadway.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

Friday night "The Real Widow Brown" Company will be seen at Stillman Music Hall. The comedy is replete with fun, fast and furious, and is greeted with bursts of applause and merriment everywhere. The mistakes of the young man who is doing his best to personate the real charming widow, are most ludicrous. He is assisted by two jolly fellows and a couple of bright, pretty girls. The comedy is full of complicated situations, the unraveling of which causes unbounded merriment. The company is under the management of A. Q. Scammon, who has many other successful comedies on the road, including "The American Girl," "The Burglar" and "Stop, Thief." He has given special attention to the selection of artists for this company, which includes many well-known favorites. The costumes are new and handsome. The plot of the play is humorous in the extreme and "The Real Widow Brown" has justly come to the front as one of the greatest successes of the day.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

One of the indignities that a boarder is obliged to put up with at the city jail, when locked up in a cell, is a swarm of flees that have their abiding place on dogs kept by Warden Martin. It is said that City Judge DeMeza instructed Martin that he must keep his canines out of the cells at all times and especially when they are empty. Martin is a great lover of dogs and keeps a number of them. It is quite enough to ask a prisoner to stop temporarily with bugs, but when he is subjected to a flee pest, it is almost too much to inflict on any one. It is said that Martin allows his dogs to roam about the jail and sleep in the cells at will. This practice is rather dangerous in very warm weather and complaints have already been made concerning he nuisance.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Ripans Medical prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing use of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general when once they are begun. I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicine, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $25 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the knowledge about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some druggists in every state in the United States. This low priced article is for the benefit of the economical class of people who do not feel able to pay the regular retail price (60 cents) for a dozen. Ripans Tabules may also be had of some grocers, general country dealers and druggists who do not care to handle the regular size bottle (60 cents).

Codington & Swackhamer Attract Marked Attention in the Corey Divorce Case.

Former Postmaster Wallace Vail is receiving lots of congratulations from his neighbors and friends over his vindication in the Corey divorce case.

As stated the language of the court was direct and positive in declaring his absolute innocence and the result is received with satisfaction everywhere. Messrs. Codington & Swackhamer have attracted marked attention in connection with the case both in Newark and in this city, and it is said that while the defense was able and complete throughout, the final arguments, running through less than seven hours, were among the most cogent and eloquent that have been delivered in the Chancery Chambers. The Court in awarding the additional counsel fee of $100 paid a high compliment to counsel and stated that the sums allowed were no measure of the value of the services rendered, but that the circumstances of the compliment had to be taken into consideration. The Advisory Master, having gone on his vacation, he will ultimately dispose of the case on his return.

REPUBLICANS FIX DATE OF CONVENTION.

Delegates Will Meet In Trenton on September 22d.

FIXING REPRESENTATION.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN WILL BE EITHER SEWELL OR HOBART.

An Interesting Fight Ensued Over the Matter of Fixing the Representation in the Convention—One Delegate for Every 200 Votes Cast for the Last Governor—Voorhees was Not There.

The New Jersey State Republican Convention to nominate for Governor will be held at Taylor's Opera House, Trenton, beginning at noon Thursday, September 22d.

This was decided at a meeting of the Republican State Committee held in Room 16th, Trenton House, Trenton, Tuesday.

There was considerable of a wrangle before the date was selected, some of those who are in favor of Foster Voorhees for the nomination fighting for an earlier day. They wanted the convention held on Sept. 14 or 15 at the latest. Their plea was give more time to the campaign. They argued that the greater length of time given to the canvass the more probable would be Republican success.

Chairman Murphy, Senator Sewell, John Kean and other leaders were not so sanguine that a long campaign would be beneficial to Republican interests, and the early-date men were smothered.

An interesting fight ensued when the committee took up the matter of fixing the representation in the convention. Major Anderson and others fought to have the representation upon the basis of one delegate for for every 200 Republican votes polled at the last gubernatorial election, by election districts, with one more delegate for every majority fraction of 200 in such districts. They also wanted to have every election district represented by at least one delegate.

This plan met with violent opposition and was defeated. The plan finally adopted was to apportion the delegates according to the vote for Governor in 1895 in each county without regard to election districts, on the basis of one delegate for each 200 votes and fraction thereof.

The work of apportioning the delegates is the several counties is to be left to the local county committees. The total number of delegates in the convention on this basis will be 814 divided in counties as follows:

Atlantic, 19; Bergen, 30; Burlington, 37; Camden, 64; Cape May, 8; Cumberland, 27; Essex, 147; Gloucester, 20; Hudson, 106; Hunterdon, 17; Mercer, 56; Middlesex, 36; Monmouth, 41; Morris, 30; Ocean, 13; Passaic, 58; Salem, 17; Somerset, 17; Sussex, 13; Union, 42; Warren, 17.

The temporary chairman of the convention will be either Senator Sewell or Attorney-General Griggs. This matter was left to a sub-committee composed of Franklin Murphy, Major Anderson and John Kean. It was said that Mr. Murphy favors the Attorney-General, while Senator Sewell is believed to be Mr. Kean's choice.

FIRE IN ELIZABETH.

Much Damage Also From a Blaze Started in a Paint Store.

Bernard Glasser, a paper hanger, and Louis Ludwig, a painter, both of Newark, bought out the paint store of Charles Bente, on Broad street, and paid $300 on account of the purchase money. At 7 30 o'clock next morning the contents of the store were burned, together with the three-story building.

Both men were in front of the store, when Ludwig saw, he says, a tank of oil or benzine, blazing in the rear. He rushed back and attempted to roll the blazing stuff out of the back door and was seriously burned about the face and head.

The building was damaged to the extent of $15,000.

SERMON WON HIM A JOB

A PASTOR WAS ENGAGED ON THE SPUR OT THE MOMENT.

Rev. Mr. Case, of Plainfield, Pleased South River Baptists so That They Engaged Him Right on the Spot.

The call Rev. Mr. Case, of Plainfield, to the pastorate of the South River Tabernacle Baptist church, was something out of the usual order of church procedures, but the call was none the less a hearty one. Mr. Case has only resided of late in Plainfield. He came from Oklahoma Territory some time ago, where he had two churches. He preached in them on alternating Sundays.

Mr. Case has a personal friend in Rev. Mr. DeWolff, of Newark, editor of The Baptist Bulletin. It was at the recommendation of Editor DeWolff that Mr. Case went to South River to preach. The first time he did so was about a month ago. He gave a fair sermon, but he made no particular impression upon the people. Last Sunday he supplied the vacated pulpit again. He then preached what one enthusiastic parishioner says was the best discourse ever given in the Tabernacle church.

The church held a meeting then and there. The result was that Rev. Mr. Case was called. It was a coincidence that the Rev. S. D. Sammis, who was pastor until a few weeks ago, was in South River on a visit the same day. He attended the church as well as the Sunday-school, and listened to the preaching of his successor.

The new preacher is about 33 years of age. His wife is visiting her sister in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He is a cousin of the Rev. T. D. Case, of Rutherford, N. J. He will take up his pastoral duties Sunday next.

HANDICAPS FOR HORSES.

FRENCH STYLE OF TROTTING MATCH TO BE TRIED.

The Plainfield Driving Club Will Inaugurate a Novel Method of Racing—Horses to Receive Distance Handicaps.

Another innovation in horse speeding is being arranged by the leading members of the Plainfield Driving Club. While the regular methods of holding the trotting contests is interesting, the members are now planning to hold a race Saturday afternoon after the fashion in vogue in France.

It has always been the custom in America that any handicapping that is done in horse races, whether trotting, pacing or running, should be done by weight, the faster horses carrying quite a little dead weight in addition to the jockeys. In France, however, the handicaps are arranged by distances, the limit horse starting at the wire and the others behind it. In this way each horse will travel at least a mile, and most of them more.

It is this French style of racing that is to be tried at the matinee races at the Gentlemen's Driving Park Saturday afternoon. Now it is by no means easy to get the horses started from their different marks and an exciting time is expected. Quite a number of the local horses are expected to enter and the contest, novel as it certainly will be, is expected to arouse a great deal of interest.

PATROLMAN TO THE RESCUE.

Officer Flanagan Made a Heroic Jump and Stopped the Horse.

What might have been a serious runaway was prevented last Monday afternoon on West Front street by Patrolman Flanagan. The horse belongs to Richard McCullough, of the borough, and the wagon was filled with building material. Louis Van-Nest was the driver in charge. The spirited horse got the best of Mr. Van-Nest and threw him out of the wagon. The animal then started on a wild run down Front street. It happened that Patrolman Flanagan was standing at the corner of Liberty street and Front street, and he made a grand effort to stop the runaway horse. At the same time a colored man living nearby ran out and grasped one of the reins. He held on until the officer could get a better hold of the horse. The animal was finally subdued and held until VanNest could recover sufficiently to take charge. He was severely shaken up and bruised in several parts of the body. Those who saw the affair say that Patrolman Flanagan displayed great courage and prevented a serious accident.

GROOM FROM NEW LONDON.

MISS MAMIE KIELY HINTED BEFORE OF MATRIMONY.

Her Parents Have Heard Nothing of the Marriage—She Has Been Living in New York—Is a Handsome Girl—Tall and of Dark Complexion—The Groom Hails from New London.

A hasty marriage in the office of Justice of the Peace took place Geiger, in Gregory street, near Montgomery, Jersey City, Tuesday night a few minutes after 11 o'clock.

The groom described himself as Charles Downs, thirty years of age, of New London, Conn., and said he was a shipping clerk. He said that he was a son of Addison Downs. The bride said she was Mamie Kiely, twenty years old, of 550 West Second street, Plainfield.

Tuesday morning a reporter called at the home of John Kiely, who lives at 550 West Second street. Mr. Kiely was away but his wife was at home. She told the reporter that her daughter, Mamie, was in New York where she was employed as a waitress. Yes, she had heard from her recently and Miss Kiely had promised to come out this very week to visit her parents. She also told them not to be surprised if she should be married. Her mother, however, thought that she was just fooling. She had heard nothing of the marriage. She did not know the name of the young man.

Miss Kiely was formerly employed in the City Hotel as a waitress. She is a tall girl of dark complexion and very handsome. She is well known in this city.

FUNERAL OF LUTHER COMPTON.

Rev. W. C. O'Donnell Paid a Deserved Tribute to Young Man's Life.

The funeral of Luther Compton took place Tuesday afternoon, and was one of the largest ever held from the Washingtonville Memorial chapel. First there was a brief service held at the house on Fritts avenue, and at 2:30 o'clock the regular services were held over the remains in the chapel.

Rev. W. C. O'Donnell officiated, and took as the subject of his talk Jesus raising the widow's son. A quartette composed of Miss Beeching, Miss Charlotte Messersmith, Horace Martin, Jr., and Mr. Acker, sang twice during the service, and once at the grave.

The flowers were beautiful, and were sent in large numbers. There were four large pieces, besides twelve smaller ones, wreathes, bouquets, etc. A handsome pillow came from a brother, and Mr. Fulton sent another. J. H. Leggett, the druggist, in whose store Compton was employed, sent a large wreath, and there was also a piece from the clerks in the store.

The pall bearers were Henry Kliner, James Walker, John Morhus, Charles Miles, James Gunn and William Acker. Interment was in the family plot in Hillside.

A BIG SHOOT.

Crack Shots Will Meet at the Climax Grounds Saturday.

The shoot of the Climax Gun Club that will be held at Thatcher's shooting grounds, Saturday, promises to be an affair of some magnitude. In addition to the contest of the clubs comprising the Central New Jersey League, the regular club shoot will be held, also sweepstake shooting in which a large number of entries are promised from the ranks of the crack shots of the country.

Election Officers.

The Republican County Committee met in the Dix building, Saturday nue, west to Raritan where he when officers for all the county polling places were named. Some discussion was had over the county candidates for office this fall, which include Assemblymen.

MANY FEASTED ON THE MOUNTAIN SIDE.

Business Men's Clambake a Great Success.

A TROLLEY RIDE FIRST.

CAR WAS HANDSOMELY DECORATED FOR THE OCCASION.

The Orchestra Played on the Car and at the Grove—Fifty Covers Set—The Party Photographed—Great Time at the Grove Tuesday Night—Speeches Ended an Enjoyable Entertainment.

A highly-decorated trolley car with an orchestra inside caused quite a sensation along the line of the Plainfield Street Railway Company Tuesday evening. Comfortably ensconced in the car, enjoying the cool breezes, were some two score of Plainfield's well-known citizens and business men. It was the consummation of a movement started by several local business men to give to such of their friends who could not go out of town a chance for an enjoyable outing and a pleasant evening right here at home. Further, it demonstrated that Plainfield has many summer enjoyments if they are only patronized.

The movement was originated through the united efforts of John Adelman, W. A. Westphal, James Laughlin and Harry Werner. It ended Tuesday in a trolley party, clambake and general good time at the Mountainside Grove.

The first part of the outing was a ride all over the lines of the trolley system in a special car. The car left the North avenue station at 6:19 o'clock and began to pick up members of the party all along the route. Some sixty were invited but several could not come and the fifty covers laid were just right to accomodate the crowd. Naylor's orchestra was placed in the front seats of the car and rendered different familiar selections as the car sped along.

The car itself was all right. Inside, Japanese lanterns were hung from the ceiling while some ten extra electric lights illuminated the car. Outside, the car was hardly recognizable. Tricolored bunting was draped about the sides, while the hand rails and posts were wound with red, white the blue ropings. Evergreens, golden-rod and great beaming sunflowers were tastefully grouped about the sides and ends while the fender was converted into a bower of flowers. The decorating of the car was done by George Conklin, William Brown, Ed Martinz, and Phil Maguire under the direction of Superintendent John Adelman.

Car No. 19, was the special one decorated for the occasion. Henry Homan was the motorman and Phil Maguire the conductor. The car first went to Dunellen, stopping at Grant avenue where a photograph of the party was taken by G. Thorn. Then they went to Netherwood, and finally brought up at the Somerset street terminus of the line from where the party walked to Mountainside Grove.

It was 8 o'clock before they arrived there and dark. Appetizing odors floated in their direction soon all were busy with a good old-fashioned Rhode Island clambake with all the needed accessories. Nat Astfalk, of Elizabeth, was the chef and he prepared a meal that was worthy of the occasion.

The grove was well lighted and the occasion was made one of general hilarity and fun. There were funny stories and anecdotes, and later in the evening a series of stump speeches were made that continued way into the night and were received with wildly enthusiastic applause.

Everybody had a good time and the whole affair was free from unpleasant incidents that might mar the enjoyment.

Watch Taken From a Tramp.

Chief Grant has received word from the Chief of Police of Syracuse, N. Y., that a tramp in case gold watch was taken from a tramp who was sentenced August 19th to sixty days in jail. The movement is No. 5,112,883 and the case No. 710,215. On the back of the case is the word "Carrie," engraved. The police thought that, perhaps, the watch was stolen from some one in this vicinity.

Water Tank Overflowed.

It doesn't interfere with your getting a first-class shave or hair-cut, however, by Mr. Maynard or one of his gentlemanly assistants.

WEREN'T READY TO BE CONGRATULATED YET.

Wedded Couple and Friends Were Both Surprised.

WERE MARRIED LAST MAY.

BUT THE YOUNG PEOPLE WANTED TO KEEP IT A SECRET.

Marriage of Miss Mamie Wilson and Theodore Martin Announced at the Meeting of Christian Endeavorers in Warren Chapel Tuesday Night—Congratulations Were Then Offered by Friends.

It was sometime during last May that Miss Mamie Wilson, of the borough, and Theodore Martin, of East Third street, decided that they would be married. Accordingly they left Plainfield and went to Roselle, where the matrimonial knot was tied according to the prescribed statutes. They returned to Plainfield, Mrs. Martin living at her home, while Mr. Martin continued to reside at his home. The two were often seen together, but not one of their many friends had the slightest idea they were married.

The fact leaked out, however, last week among a few friends, and a great surprise was arranged. Now Mr. and Mrs. Martin are active members at Warren chapel and especially so in the Christian Endeavor Society. Mr. Martin holds the position of president of the society.

The regular meeting of the society was held last evening, and, of course, Mr. and Mrs. Martin attended. The leader of the meeting, Mrs. William A. Wilson, was previously acquainted with the fact of the marriage, and after the collection was taken at the close of the meeting, she surprised the entire congregation, as well as the bride and groom, by announcing the fact that congratulations were in order. This announcement completely surprised the bride and groom, who had thought their marriage was not known. Of course, every one present congratulated the happy couple, and the meeting ended in a general social time in which the bride and groom received the best wishes of all.

The Somerset County Board of Freeholders who went to Toms River Monday to ascertain how much George J. Gould was assessed for his property in Lakewood, returned home satisfied that Mr. Gould was on the assessment rolls for a full amount. In fact the members of the committee think that the millionaire's property was overrated, as it is down at $300,000.

The committee of the Somerset Freeholders, who went into Ocean county, was composed of Chairman William J. Logan, E. B. Hoagland and James H. Ballentine, and they were accompanied by their counsel, John A. Frech. The committee is of the opinion that half the assessment made on the Gould property would have been sufficient. The Freeholders also found that in some places property was assessed at $50 an acre and that $5 an acre would have been a fair price, for the land is practically worthless.

The report of the committee will be made to the Freeholders in Somerville next month. Under the law the Freeholders of Somerset county had the right to inquire into assessments in Ocean county. When one county thinks the assessments in another are below the true figures the county can appeal to the State Board of Taxation and that body fixes a date for an inquiry.

MADE CONSTABLE WORK.

STARR WOULD NOT UNLOAD THE TRUCK, SO OFFICER HAD TO.

Starr Was Going to Move Away and His Landlady Wanted Her Rent—Store Leased for Year; Rent Paid to September.

There was plenty of excitement on West Front street, near Somerset, late Tuesday afternoon, which was occasioned by Samuel H. Starr, son of Henry Starr, who is proprietor of the Starr Clothing House, attempting to load his father's goods on a truck and get it out of town.

His endeavor was nipped in the bud by Mrs. Samuel Dreier, who owns the store and who got out a writ of attachment against Starr's goods for rent claimed, in this way keeping him in town over night. The writ was quashed this morning, and Mrs. Dreier was driven to take another method to obtain the rent she claims due.

The Starr Company leased the store last April for a year, agreeing to pay the rent, $30, in advance. This they have done, and August 1st paid the rent up to the first of September.

On these grounds Councilman Walter L. Hetfield, who represented Starr, succeeded in getting the writ quashed, claiming that the proprietor owed no rent until the first of the month.

When Starr was interrupted Tuesday afternoon he already had eight cases of clothing safe in the freight-house, and two more on the truck standing in front of the door.

Mrs. Dreier had noticed signs of preparation to move all Tuesday morning, but didn't take any action until late in the afternoon.

When the attachment was secured Constable Rockafellow went down to serve it. The son, who was in charge, refused to unload the goods already on the truck or to order anyone else to do so, so the constable himself carried in the two cases. Henry Starr, who signed the lease is out of the State, and as he cannot be reached by civil process, it is not known what steps Mrs. Dreier will take to secure her seven months rent.

HIS TROUBLES ARE DOGS.

A WEST FRONT STREET MAN CAN SPY 15 AT SHORT RANGE.

During the Hours of the Night the Canines Make the Neighborhood Hideous With Howls—They Like Chickens.

If there is a man in Plainfield with cause to feel aggrieved that man is George Morton, of West Front street, but he is a peaceable citizen and does not like to make any disturbance. Morton lives in a neighborhood that harbors about fifteen dogs of all sizes and breeds.

During the late and early hours of the night these dogs make it their particular business to keep the neighbors awake. Now, this is very annoying, especially in warm weather, when it is not an easy matter to sleep. These same dogs have a trick of bothering the neighbors' chickens, and on more than one occasion several of them have been missed.

Mr. Morton says that he can stand in his yard and locate everyone of the dogs at short range. He says that he does not believe that a license fee is paid on more than one dog out of the entire lot, and as he understands it owners must pay a license fee. He thinks it is about time something is done to rid the neighborhood of such a nuisance.

RAIDED THE SWIMMERS.

Borough Officers Captured Two Boys Who Were Naked.

Tuesday afternoon there were about one hundred small boys and young men who had a delightful time swimming in Hyde's pond, and it was not until Marshal Schanck and Campbell put in their appearance that the boys felt at all uncomfortable. No one objects to the boys having a swim if they would wear tights and act in a proper manner, but these boys were entirely out of order. The neighbors have been complaining, hence the unexpected raid.

Out of the bunch two boys were caught. They were Frank Newman, of Richmond street, and Lewis Hansen, of Weber place. They were held for a while yesterday afternoon, but when it was learned that Recorder Long had gone fishing and would not return early, the boys were released to appear for a hearing this afternoon. The other boys who were swimming made their escape and have not yet been caught.

Anyone Lost a Gold Watch?

One of the police officers found a gold watch while patroling his beat last night. It is now in the possession of Chief Grant, where the owner can secure it by giving proof.

FRED BENNETT HOME FROM SAMPSON'S FLEET

The Brave Sailor Boy Has a Forty-eight Hour Furlough.

ONE OF SAMPSON'S CREW.

HE HAS BEEN IN THE THICK OF THE FIGHTING OFF CUBA.

First Time That He Has Been Home in Almost a Year—Brought Back a Number of Interesting Relics Gathered From the Spanish Fleet That Was Destroyed—Doesn't Like Notoriety.

Fresh from scenes of strife and warfare in southern waters, and a gigantic reception in New York City, Frederick A. Bennett, a member of the crew, on board Sampson's flag ship "New York" is spending a short furlough with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Bennett, of Lincoln place.

Bennett's leave began Tuesday afternoon and will expire this afternoon, and so during the 48 hours granted to him he is making the most of his time and visiting all his relatives and friends.

Bennett entered the navy five years ago. The first three years were spent on board the Newark, but two years ago he was transferred to the New York. He is now 20 years of age. He is enthusiastic over the navy and devoted to his admiral, Sampson, against whom he will not hear a word of condemnation.

Bennett is a splendid specimen of the American sailor. Short, heavily built, with a massive pair of shoulders, deep chest and powerful limbs, he shows what training can do to develop a man, and instead of a thin, weak individual, turn him out a young giant.

Bennett was everywhere that the New York was, and saw the progress of the war from the best standpoint. He was one of the prize crew of fourteen seamen who were put on board the Christobal Colon, and brought home with him a paper box well filled with trinkets that he has picked up in his tracks. Among them is a piece of the Christobal Colon's signal flag, red, yellow and white; and a shell fired which Bennett kicked out of a gun as soon as he boarded the vessel.

Bennett also has a rusty monkey wrench which divers brought up from the wreck of the Maine, and a rusty bolt. A long Spanish dirk and a big revolver came from the Vizcaya, and a piece of sugar cane which one of the Rough Riders picked up as they were climbing San Juan Hill to take part in the battle.

Among the things in the box a Press reporter noticed a piece of iron, singularly marked with deep grooves. He was told that this was a piece of the six-inch shell which exploded on the ship and killed a man. The grooves were made as the shell left the gun.

Bennett is a quiet fellow and does not like notoriety of any kind. So averse to praise and congratulations is he that he even keeps secret his rank on board the ship.

Bennett says that the demonstration in New York harbor Saturday was something of a bore, for like many other brave men, Bennett would rather not receive too much attention. This is the first visit that he has made to his home in nine months, and before he goes away his mother insists that he have his picture taken together with the family in a group. Bennett does not know when his vessel will go next.

A WATERMELON FEAST.

Though a Thief Stole One There Was Plenty Left for Guests.

Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin W. Hand, West Seventh street, there was a social, entertainment and a watermelon feast. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental selections by B. W. Hand, and recitations by several of the young people present. An interesting feature was the address on New York' slum work by Mrs. Cox, who has spent much time in the work. Mrs. Cox is now laboring in this city and is doing a great deal of good.

The latter part of the evening was devoted to sociability and making way with a number of choice watermelons. During the evening some miscreant managed to take a watermelon from the house, but there were plenty left and everybody had plenty to eat.

Will Hear Reports at Next Meeting.

Nothing but routine business was transacted at the meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., last evening. The post will not meet again until the last Tuesday in September, when reports of the National G. A. R. Encampment to be held at Cincinnati will be presented by delegates who will attend.

THE KING OF SIAM.

ONLY A BOY OF FIFTEEN WHEN HE ASCENDED THE THRONE.

Women Police Govern the Harem—No Limit to the Number of Wives Which the Ruler May Have—His Sisters and Daughters Never Marry.

Prabat Somdetch Pra Paramindr Maha Chulalongkorn Patindr Tepa Maha Mongkut Pra Chula Chom Klao Chow Yu Hua, King of Siam, succeeded on September 21, 1853, and succeeded to the throne on October 1, 1868; and, although only a youth of fifteen, he was already the father of two children. His majesty reads, writes and speaks English with ease, and all conversation between him and the Tsarewitch—present Tsar—who visited Siam in 1891, was carried on in that language. His earliest lessons were from an English governess, and these he continued later in life under an American resident, who acted as tutor. In addition to other Asiatic languages, he possesses a knowledge of Pali, and his admirers claim that he is also a good Sanscrit scholar. The king's private life is passed in utter seclusion within the Khang Nai, or Inside, as the harem is known among the Siamese. This Inner Palace is forbidden ground to any man, European or native, except under very special circumstances, and then only when accompanied by a guard of trusted servants. It is safe to assert that no man has ever been personally acquainted, even in a remote degree, with the life or history of the inmates.

The king is the only representative of his sex who lives in this community of women—one amidst thousands! There is a force of female police for preserving order and punishing any unruly members. Flogging with a rattan is resorted to for certain offenses, and only those who are of royal birth enjoy immunity from such treatment.

It is doubtful if any European could fully explain the position of the ladies of the harem. Even if the Siamese themselves know, they do not impart the information; in fact, among them it is contrary to all etiquette to make any allusion to the subject. One of the wives is known as the "first queen" and takes official precedence of all the others. Another is often referred to as the second, and sometimes a third is mentioned. These are all near relatives of the king, and, with the other wives of royal blood, take precedence of those who may be regarded as commoners.

There is no limit to the number of women that the king may take to wife, and although they may be dismissed at will, to have been admitted as a member of the Khang Nai, far from being in any way derogatory, is regarded as an honor. All their children are legitimate.

The king's sisters do not marry, for fear of creating possible rivalry for the throne; neither do his daughters, who remain all their lives in the harem; but their female future king may offer them a position similar to that held by their mothers. So jealously are these ladies guarded from contact with the world, that in 1879 an elder sister of the first queen was allowed to dine in the presence of a number of spectators, all of one of whom was permitted to put a hand on her, even to save her from certain death.

In common with most of the Siamese, the king is a firm believer in omens, and nothing of importance is done without reference to the Brahmin soothsayers and astrologers who are attached to the palace. As an example, it may be mentioned that on June 25, 1894, his majesty returned from Kohsi-chang, his seaside residence; but as the day was considered unpropitious by the astrologers, the vessel anchored near the mouth of the Menam until the next day.

The country palace of the King of Siam is called Bang-pa-in. About forty miles north of Bangkok, on the Menam, are two islands, separated by a narrow channel, not 150 feet wide. On the smaller of these is a Buddhist temple and college, and on the other is the country residence of the King of Siam, which consists of three buildings—the official, the private and the Chinese palaces. Each is separated from the other by canals, with which the island is intersected, and which, in places, are enlarged into small artificial lakes. Sluice gates are provided between the canal and river, which serve to maintain the level of water in the former, and also for flushing; for, although some of the canals empties from the sea, the tide rises and falls between three and four feet. Through these gates pass the boats containing the ladies of the household, who, to escape public notice, are landed a few feet from their apartments.

The Ko-pra, or landing stage, is a wooden gangway, hinged at both ends, and resting on a pontoon anchored in water deep enough to allow large launches to moor alongside. At the top of the bank is a hand stand, close against a portico of classical design, which forms the entrance to the official palace, and looks down a narrow strip of walks and lawn, shaded by mango and tamarind trees. On the occasion of a grand fete, this was the site of an enormous device that was used for an electric light illumination.—Lady's Realm.

An Irishman was naturalized the other day in Philadelphia, and after the ordeal was over he expressed his satisfaction as follows: "It's not so slay for a man of little eddication to answer all the Judge's questions, but bi did it, begorra, and, thank God! bi'm now a native-born American citizen."

SQUARE MEAL IN A CAPSULE.

Take One with a Drink of Water and You Are Full of Soup.

The samples of various things devised for the comfort of soldiers and the models of implements to be used in warfare received by the President would, if placed on exhibition, eclipse the sights in the National museum. The Secretary of the Navy is also deluged with all sorts of contrivances and devices, as well as samples of improved methods of cooking and clothing. In one of the rooms of the Navy Department are shown some of these "supplies," and they are more interesting to be seen than the famous Hotel Cluny in Paris. One man has actually "bouillon capsules" that you swallow at one bolt, then drink some water, and lo and behold! your stomach is full of soup. Another genius has sent to the department specimens of bottles of prepared castor oil, to be used in connection with the edibles. A benevolent old gentleman of Pennsylvania sent a recipe, there are sixteen pages of it, for pemmican, which is full of food for soldiers sans teeth, who have only their gums to depend upon and who must either swallow soup or starve.

In the War Department the same story is told. One bright genius has put up specially prepared packages of paris green and wants Secretary Alger to require every soldier to carry one in his knapsack. The idea is that all the bugs of Cuba will thus be kept at bay, as if the Cubans were tomato plants. Some of the patent medicine men have evolved "yellow pills," which are warranted to cure yellow fever. Then there are patent splints for setting broken limbs, which almost dispense with a doctor, and little else. This last invention is the work of a well known artist, Mr. Remington. It is nothing more nor less than the ordinary bicycle wheel, carrying the framework for a cot, on which the wounded are placed and pushed to the hospital. Another curious invention offered to the government is an apparatus for peering into the depths of the ocean to hunt for cables, and keep a sharp lookout for submerged mines and torpedoes. The invention is called an aquascope.—Army and Navy Journal.

How a Panic was Averted.

The tales of the panic on board the Burgogne, which was sunk recently, brings to mind a story Gen. Hon. Ben. Cable of Illinois, tells of an experience of his in midocean. The day was foggy, and most of the passengers were attending to two evangelists who were holding a rousing gospel revival service and without the slightest warning there was a terrific crash and the engines stopped. Every one rushed on deck. The steamer had run into an iceberg. Nobody knew what damage had been done, and everybody was ready to fly into a panic. The boats were lowered, and then for the first time the two evangelists who had been forgotten in the saloon, appeared on deck. They were in their overcoats and their hats and they carried bags and handbags. They elbowed their way rudely to the rail, with the evident intent of securing for themselves first places in the boats. It was just at a time when a breath would have sent the passengers panic-stricken into the boats. The sight of the two evangelists was about to undo the work of cool-headed officers when a pert little cockney called out to the gentlemen with the rugs and handbags:

"Beg pardon," said he, tipping his cap, "'ave a cab, sir?"

And in the general laugh the danger of panic was averted.—Washington Post.

A Material Amendment.

A brace of Mormon elders have recently been carrying on a mission in Los Angeles county, says the San Francisco News Letter. In a locality where the residents are very orthodox, according to the New England standard, these Utah missionaries obtained the use of a school house for their meeting by calling themselves "Latter Day Saints," which sounded very unreligious in the ears of the good Protestants of the locality.

At the meeting one of the elders declaimed very fervently on the unity of faith, maintaining that there is only one right religious way—of course, Brigham Young's way—and nailing his argument by quoting very frequently the biblical text, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."

Then the speaker invited remarks or questions from anyone present, with a view of clinching his proselyting exhortation.

A sweet faced old lady arose, but completely spoiled the effect of the Mormon's oration by remarking, demurely:

"There are, no doubt, three New Testament unities—one Lord, one faith, one baptism. But there is also a fourth—one wife."

A Bull Fight for the S. P. C. A.

It has never occurred to the average Spaniard, who in all ranks of life is a courteous and obliging gentleman, that his barbarous bull fight is anything but a form of dramatic entertainment, as legitimate as those of the Lyceum or Comedie Francaise. A reporter tells a story which may probably be true, that when the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals proposed to establish a branch in a leading city of Spain the municipal body courteously accepted the proposal and offered to hold a grand bull fight at once to furnish the funds.—London Review.

"I wish that I could acquire a reputation for being bright," said Willie Wishington.

"There is nothing easier," said Miss Cayenne. "All you need do is to say you have heard it before whenever any one says anything clever."—Washington Star.

MILLIONS TO BURN.

HOW UNCLE SAM DISPOSES OF SOILED AND MUTILATED BILLS.

Every Day Different Banks Throughout the Country Send Packages to the U. S. Treasury for Redemption—Two-fifths of a Note Can Be Redeemed.

A million dollars a day. This is the amount that Uncle Sam makes away with. Every piece of money which becomes too dirty or too dilapidated for use may be presented to the United States Treasury for redemption. Each day there is sent from the different banks throughout the country, fully a million dollars' worth of this soiled or torn paper. Every bundle of money received is turned over to an expert, who, after carefully counting and inspecting the notes to see that no counterfeits are among them, places them together in small packages, and makes on the wrapper the amount contained in each bundle. They are then passed under a machine which punches a hole in each corner of every package; and cut into halves, lengthwise, one-half is sent to one division and the remaining half to another, to be recounted by two other people. All counts must tally with each other before the bills are ready for destruction.

The next move is to transport the money to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where it is reduced to pulp by what is called maceration. Into an immense revolving cylinder containing certain disintegrating chemicals, the bills are thrown. The pulp thus produced is pressed into sheets, which strongly resemble white cardboard. This substance, which is used for various purposes, such as newspapers, writing paper, and souvenirs, is sold by the Government for about $40 a ton, the money received paying the entire expenses of maceration.

The only kind of money not destroyed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is that issued by National Banks. These notes are not taken charge of by those having the care of bank currency. Every afternoon these bills, representing from a hundred thousand to half a million dollars, are conveyed in the basement of the Treasury Building. The door of the maceration room is secured by huge padlocks, and can be opened only by the three officials who hold the keys.

Nothing less than two-fifths of a note will be redeemed. To the holder of this fraction of a bill, the Government will allow half of the original face value. For three-fifths of a note, full value will be given.

It occasionally happens that scraps of bills which have been almost entirely destroyed by fire, or otherwise, are presented for redemption. So expert are some of the Treasury clerks in determining to what special note, or kind of note a scrap of money belongs, that the owner of the damaged bills usually receive some considerable part of their face value. A majority of the Government clerks are women, who are said to be more honest and trustworthy than men, besides having in a more marked degree the delicacy of touch required for the detection of bad money.

Some of these women are the most expert and accurate counters and detectors in the world. Their sense of touch is so highly educated that the instant they pass a bill through their fingers they know whether it is a genuine or a bogus note.—J. C. Henderson, in Success.

Feeding Plants Artificially.

A French horticulturist, M. George-Truffrent, gives artificial food to plants in the following manner: "After the analysis of the ash of the living plant, the necessary salts for a given time, such as six months, are weighed out and inclosed in a metal cover to form what is called a 'pill,' which is presumably inserted in the pot, diffusion of the salts taking place through the folds of the metal, and the thicker the metal the slower the diffusion. The salts dissolve and disappear they are replaced by a core which expands until it completely fills the 'pill' The first effect on the metal cover, which remains firm and hard. It is stated that the solubility of the salts can be so regulated that a 'pill' may be made to last three or six months, as may be desired. By this method of feeding, large well-colored plants are grown in pots of less than half the usual size."—New York Journal.

Jean Ingelow as a Child.

Miss Jean Ingelow came of a clever family, and when she and her brothers and sisters were children got up a little magazine of their own, the style being set by school-fellows of her brothers at the house of their clergyman's daughter, who owned a small printing machine. Jean could also write poems on the inside of the shutters of her bedroom window, of all odd places, and after they were one day accidentally discovered by her mother some of them found their way into print. A peculiar feature about Miss Ingelow's life was that she never entered a theatre, and an equally remarkable one about herself was that she could remember events in her life from the time she was 17 months old.

Not Afraid of Lightning.

Smith—I was reading in the paper this morning about a Texas man who was struck by lightning while he was swearing. Remarkable occurrence, wasn't it?

Brown—Oh, I don't know. If lightning was to strike a Texas man when he wasn't swearing it would be much more remarkable.—Chicago News.

The Cult of Unconventionality.

The careful cult of unconventionality began among the smart set in London some years ago, and it has been taken up and propagated by the smart set here. The most superficial signs of it are the most harmless. To wear bicycle clothes at formal dinner parties, to drive about Newport without a coat, to smoke in a lady's drawing room, to garnish one's speech at all times with blackguard slang, to describe everything, from the weather to a social function, as "rotten"—these are the silly, though none the less reprehensible signs of the truly unconventional person. A far more serious phase of it is seen in the change that has been introduced in the sphere of social intercourse between the sexes.

The finest of all the old conventions was that which imposed upon a man and upon a woman a certain reticence with regard to various themes and various facts of life. This reticence spread with respect to which every man was supposed to feel for every woman and from the respect which every woman was supposed to cherish for herself. It was a part of the slight but very real barrier which experience had proved essential to protect the woman, and to prevent a brutalizing tendency in the man. And it is the undermining of this convention that is to-day a cause for a very serious reprehension.—New York Post.

The German Emperor's Fad.

The kaiser has issued the most amazing sartorial decree to his officers, and despair has seized upon hapless lieutenants with limited incomes. For the fiat has gone forth that all officers are henceforth, when it shall please the emperor to say otherwise, to wear surcoats of palest gray, lined with satin to match. The coats are beautiful to look upon, but they are ruinously delicate and costly. With their mustaches turned around to their ears, a l'Empereur and in their pigeon-breast colored overcoats, the gay officers look like pretty comic opera soldiers.

Clothes have become quite a fad with the German imperial couple. The emperor devotes much attention to them, and adopts the most resplendent uniforms on the oddest occasions, while he first undertaken the supervision of his consort's wardrobe, she in turn demanding that all her ladies shall be dressed elaborately at all times. Recently the German empress took very little heed whereswithal she was clothed. She liked tallor made gowns and rich evening dresses, but paid little attention to details, and all is changed. The emperor will have his empress in the height of fashion, it is said—but rumor is not always reliable in matters concerning the kaiser—that he designs many of her costumes himself.—Philadelphia Ledger.

How to Lacquer Brass.

"If your brass bedstead tarnishes," said a dealer in beds and bedding, "you can send it to a repair shop and have it newly lacquered for anywhere from $2.50 to $5. It will look as well as new for as long."

He said it in all sincerity, but there was a sort of reproachfulness in his eye which suggested a hidden meaning and roused curiosity.

"How do they do it?"

"Why should I tell you a trade secret?" he replied. "But, after all, this is hardly a trade secret. It is common knowledge in all those which use brass fittings, in fact. The gas fitter and the picture frame maker, as well as the furniture man, the dealer in crates, the candle stick maker as well, if it make use of it. Nearly all brass work, either cast or on ship board, is required to present a polished and gold the labor of frequent polishing. The lacquer is simply gum shellac dissolved in alcohol. This makes a thin coat, which is applied with a small camel hair brush. Ten cents' worth of materials will lacquer your brass bedstead, and an ordinary workman will do the job inside of an hour at a total cost of from 35 to 60 cents."

Women Employers.

Miss Anna Estell Wilson of New York has found a decidedly novel occupation. She prepares music for lullabies. She says that although the healing power of music is as yet dimly perceived, nevertheless physicians acknowledge that its proper use produces high beneficial results. Under the influence of certain kinds of music the nerve cells, if depleted or too relaxed, may be stimulated to more vigorous action. Music of an opposite character will diminish too great nervous activity and tend to produce a condition of peace and restfulness. Several physicians commend Miss Wilson's system. She does not say how much she now makes different diseases of the nerves one plans in a set house is capable of producing in a very short time.—New York Sun.

Form for a Woman's Card.

The question of the proper form for a widow's card is one often discussed. Authorities on etiquette usually concede that a widow may retain her husband's name upon her cards if she desires, though the maiden name is more generally used. If the widow has a married son of the same name she may add senior after her name, if she uses her husband's. The English custom of designating the widow as "dowager" is one that has manifest advantages.

A STREAM OF GOLD.

RUNS YEARLY THROUGH THE CHANNELS OF THE PENSION OFFICE.

The Klondike of Old Soldiers—Huge Proportions of a Business That is Still Growing —One of the Most Efficient Employes is Colored.

The Pension Office at Washington fills the biggest brick building of the world, says Frank G. Carpenter, in a letter to the Washington Star. I doubt if there has ever been a building made of brick which surpassed it in size, although the baths of Caracalla, the ruins of which stand by the Via Nazionale, in Rome, were a mile in circumference. This building covers only two acres, but it is three stories high and there is a big attic up under its glass roof. It has a court in its center bigger than any barn yard you have ever seen, and the huge brick pillars which rise from floor to roof each contain enough brick to build three good-sized houses.

Both court and offices are filled with papers. There are hundreds of millions of pages of writing packed away here. There are enough files in the building in respect to which every man in the United States from the carpet a county, and the old documents among its records, if they could be pasted together, in a single strip, would be long enough to cover a steam road reaching clear around the world. The Pension Office deals in big figures. Take the mail, for instance. It was to this division the commissioner, Henry Clay Evans, and I first went. The commissioner receives 30,000 pieces of mail a day, or more than 7,000,000 pieces every year. He gets more than 5,000,000 letters in a year. If you could paste the answers to his mail together in one single strip it would make a ribbon of white cotton paper covered with typewriting reaching from New York to Chicago if he had to pay his postage at the rate of two cents per letter his stamp bill would amount to $100,000 a year, and when you figure up the labor and brains which would have a number of life times embodied in that one item, it takes forty-three clerks to handle his mail. There is one corps of men who do nothing but open letters. Another stamps the date of receipt upon them, and still another reads the letters and sends them to the proper division for answer. From four to eight thousand letters are answered every day, and the correspondence increases from year to year.

Every one of these letters has a money end to it. The Pension Office is the Klondike of the old soldier, and not a few men and women who are not old soldiers seek to pan gold out of the sands of its rivers. Last year the amount of money distributed was more than $140,000,000. This is an increase of more than $1,500,000 over the sum paid out in 1896, and the commissioner tells me that there will be more paid out this year than last. The gold miners of the world are now producing more than ever before and still the total output of them all is only about $200,000,000 a year. If the gold mines of all the world were run to their full extent for the next ten years, they could get out as much gold as this office has paid out in pensions on account of the War of the Rebellion. Up to last June the amount was more than $2,000,000,000, showing a steady increase from the close of the war until 1896, and an enormous increase since then. This sum is beyond conception, and, as I have stated, it is on the increase. It amounts to so much now each year that if every man, woman and child in the United States contributed $2 the aggregate sum would not pay the pension bills. This is equal to about $10 each year for every family in our country. Of this, over $500,000 goes abroad. Between 1,000 and 4,000 pensioners live in foreign countries and draw their money from us. These are mostly here scattered over the United States from Maine to Maine and from Massachusetts to California, and the streams of money which flow here and are dammed up in the treasury are turned into the great pension drafts which are drawn every year and carry this golden flood to all parts of the country.

During our walk through the Pension Office Commissioner Evans and myself spent some time in each of the divisions watching the hundreds of clerks at work. There were old and young men among them, and there were plenty of old and young women. I asked a number of questions as to the efficiency of th employes, and was told that while many of them were very efficient clerks, some were little good except to tie up papers. One man told e the poorest clerks he had were the old schoolmasters, and the best were the girls in his bureau were of less value than the men. One chief of a division said some of his best employes were colored, and he pointed out a young man with a face as black as a piece of cannel coal, who, he said, could take the heart out of a pension case quicker than any man he had. There are examiners and clerks scattered over the country, so that, all told, Commissioner Evans has about 7,000 men under him—an army more than half as large as that which Xenophen led on his famous march to the sea. In one division I found about seventy-five doctors. These men pass upon the medical testimony, and can see a misstatement in the evidence if it is not very carefully covered. All of them have studied medicine, and not a few of them have been active practitioners. Another division is largely made up of lawyers, who pass on the legal aspect of certain cases, and another might be said to be made up of detectives, for it is their business to ferret out frauds.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Twelve girl friends of the bride at a Kansas wedding supplied the music by whistling the Wedding March. And nobody, we are pleased to add, was rude enough to remark about crowing hens.

France has had thirty-six ministries in less than twenty-eight years, and so many Cabinet crises that the count has been lost. The chief qualification for keeping up with French politics is activity.

An American flag, with eighty-three stars, which floats over a tug in New York harbor has a history. Each star stands for a life saved by Captain Grace, commanding the boat, during the forty years he has served as captain and pilot on the river and Sound.

Maceo, the great Cuban leader, died too soon. He rode all over the island, pretty much at his will, with less than a thousand troopers. He outwitted, outflanked and, when it was necessary, outfought the Spaniards at every turn. He would have laughed at the idea of marshaling 100,000 seasoned troops to drive the Spaniards off the island.

"Old Ironsides" may be called our luckiest as well as most famous battle-ship. In her hardest fight, that with the new British frigate Java in 1812, she lost but nine killed and twenty-five wounded; though the total loss on her adversary was 161. In destroying the Guerriere, Cyrene and Levant, the Constitution's casualty list was eight killed, seventeen wounded, while that of the defeated vessels was fifty killed, 105 wounded. The London Times said in 1813: "The fact seems but too clearly established that the Americans have some superior mode of firing."

The Society for the Preservation of Historic Places and Objects wants to have the railway stations of this State beautified. It points out that "the avenues of steam traffic through the cities and villages of the State are, in the nature of things, almost invariably bordered by unattractive conditions, which, unless counteracted by more agreeable surroundings at the halting places of trains, create in the minds of the traveller an unfavorable impression of the community through which he is passing." So far so good, but wouldn't it be better for the society to begin by attending to the ugly adversing signs that border the tracks?

The announcement that Hayti has decided to live up to her agreement regarding the taxation of Americans within her borders must be taken to mean far more than appears on the surface. To be sure, it is an important success for the American Minister, Powell, to secure rights for which this country has been working for years, and by which our citizens receive the same treatment at the hands of the Haytian Government that is accorded to citizens of that land. This was a diplomatic victory, but those who have watched the course of events in the Black Republic are satisfied that had Commodore Dewey's squadron met with a reverse instead of a complete success the news from Port au Prince would have been far different.

Our diplomatic relations with Hayti are of a peculiarly intimate character. The treaties between the two countries practically make Hayti an ally in time of war, and when the President of that republic thinks, he generally turns his face toward Washington. These relations have been solidified by years of honorable and friendly dealing, both politically and commercially.

When, after the blowing up of the Maine, war between Spain and this country became imminent it was an open secret that Hayti strongly favored the renunciation of her treaties with us. Not that she was against our cause, but because she desired to assume a more neutral attitude toward the belligerent powers. There was perhaps a feeling of pique that this country had not interfered in her little affair with Germany. In any event, her executive objected to standing in the light of an ally of this country. Definite action was postponed from time to time, and now comes the announcement that Hayti has conceded the only point that she has ever contested in the treaty.

Credit Money the Real Money.

The cost and inconvenience of transporting money from one part of the country to another was aptly illustrated at Topeka the other day when it became necessary for the Rock Island Railroad to send $257,000 to Chicago. If the money had been sent in greenbacks or gold the express charges would have been $321.50; if in silver, $671.75; but the railroad people rejected all three and made the transfer with a bank draft at a cost of only 2 cents. The credit money is the real money of the country, and goes to strengthen it are wiser than laws in relation to the coinage of metal.—Kansas City Journal.

AMERICAN HOLLAND.

DIKES IN SKAGIT COUNTY, WASHINGTON, TO PROTECT THE LAND.

The Horses Wear Mud Shoes When Plowing—There Is No Bottom to the Soil Which Is Tremendously Rich — 126 Bushels of Oats Raised to the Acre.

In this great western country, where there is so much wild land, where millions of acres of soil have never felt the touch of the ploughman's share or the sharp edge of the woodman's ax, it does not seem that it would be necessary to reclaim land from the sea to obtain acres for cultivation. But that has been done, and in Skagit county, almost in the very northwestern corner of the state, can be found scores of the finest ranches in the world, lying behind dikes built to keep out the sea and the overflows of the Skagit river, the largest stream that empties into the sound.

This is the veritable Holland of Washington. Skagit county are situated the famous Swinomish flats, the Beaver marsh, the Olympic marsh and the Samish flats, all surrounded by dikes ranging in height from 2 to 15 feet. There are tide gates along the sea shore which act automatically, and by which the land is perfectly that crops are raised on land below the sea level with safety. And such crops!

For ages the big river has been bringing down from the hills the richest sediment, and there is really no bottom to the soil. If a farmer in the Skagit bottoms a little too deep he turns up clay or rocks, but if the Beaver marsh rancher holds his plow handles too high he simply digs up more of the rich loam that raises every year without fail such crops that the old ranchers of other sections cannot believe. Forty bushels of oats to the acre, and a half of hops, or five tons of hay, are common yields, while all sorts of root crops give equally large results.

In order to plow this land, which, of course, is soft and spongy, the ranchers often put "mucy" shoes on their horses, the shoes consisting of wide wooden blocks, to prevent the animals from sinking into the loam.

There are at present eight diking districts in the county, and nearly every ranch of any size is in one or another of these districts. Fully 100 miles of dikes are in the county already, and many of them are used also as roads. Very picturesque are these embankments, in many places, as they wind around through the trees. When the Skagit is having a freshet, the people turn out to watch their dikes, and by repairing them keep out the flood and inundation. Sometimes a very high tide will go over a dike and cover a number of ranches with salt water. If the water does not stand too long, this does no particular damage.

Nothing but sand and black loam to counteract the effects of, to permanent work has ever been done and cannot be until the river is so improved that it has a reasonably straight channel to the sea. Five or six forks or mouths discharge the waters of the Skagit, and the delta thus formed is excellent farming land. If the water should be confined to one channel thousands of acres of land would be reclaimed, and the danger of overflow reduced to a minimum. By this improvement a magnificent navigable river, teeming with salmon and flowing through a wealth of timber and mineral land, would be opened up and would provide employment for countless numbers of people.

The failure of crops ever known there is when the dikes break and the growing grains are ruined with water.—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

An Indian Woman a Nurse.

During the past few years an attempt has been made to instruct the young girls at Carlisle Indian School in the art of nursing. Of the score of Indian girls sent to the hospitals to learn nursing but two or three remain in the profession. Several of these have married Indians and returned to the Indian Territory, while others have lacked the patience necessary to success.

One of the most successful professional nurses in Philadelphia is Miss Kate Grindrod, a full-blooded Wyandotte Indian, who lived for many years in the northwestern part of the Indian Territory. Kate Grindrod's services are eagerly sought after by many of the leading families in the City of Brotherly Love. She is a hard-working, experienced nurse and has been very successful. She enjoys the distinction of being the only girl to be graduated from Carlisle and from the hospital. Others have been graduated from one or the other, but the honor of a double matriculation belongs solely to her.—New York World.

JULIA WARD HOWE.

CONSIDERED BY EUROPEANS AS THE FOREMOST WOMAN IN AMERICA.

Home From a Winter in Rome She Hastens to a Club Meeting as Soon as She Gets On Shore—Her Standard for Americans Still the Highest and Best.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, after her winter in Rome, passed a few days in Boston before going to her Newport country palaces. The season abroad had not lessened her devotion to the club idea, for hardly had she set her foot on shore when she found herself at a club gathering, in this case the annual meeting of the New England Women's club, of which she has been president for so many years. This in itself—this hastening to a club meeting immediately after a tedious ocean voyage—would be possible to few women in their eighties year. Yet if she could have her own way Mrs. Howe would not have hesitated to follow her ocean voyage with a journey to Denver.

After six months abroad, Mrs. Howe seemed in the best of health and spirits, and more than those of most clubs. It was Mrs. Maud Howe Elliot who first proposed to her mother, saying, laughingly: "I know that you will miss your clubs over here, and we must see what kind of literary gathering can be arranged to take their place."

What had been suggested half in fun soon became an accomplished fact, and a group of a score or more of ladies met sight or nine times during the winter to listen in true American fashion to papers on various subjects. Although ladies of several nationalities were in the coterie, all were able to speak or understand English, and, therefore, most of the papers were given in that language. The two given by Mrs. Howe herself were on "Optimism and Pessimism as Efficient Social Factors," and "A Plea for Humor." Paul Loyson, son of the famous Pere Hyacinthe, spoke to the coterie on "The Religion of Ancient Rome Traced Back to Its Latin Beginning." Signor Begnini spoke in Italian one day on the difficult problems of dealing with the abandoned children, of whom there are so many in Italy, and another Italian gentleman spoke one afternoon on "The Origin of Modern Musical Notation." Philip Sinclair Hedderley, a talented Englishman, on another occasion gave a paper on "Pope Urban VIII." In the course of one of these afternoons Mrs. Howe was asked to recite "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and she tells me with a laugh at her own expense, that when she had finished, young Loyson inquired, innocently, of Mrs. Howe, who wrote "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

It is perhaps superfluous to say that Mrs. Howe returns to America as good an American as ever, for the pleasure she has had and the courtesies that she has received in foreign countries. The American standard is still to her the highest and best, both in matters of thought and matters of life. "If our own people," she says, "wish to have an idea of what the French may become they must keep their faith in all that America finds precious and valuable—in free institutions, in popular education, and, above all, in the hearts of the people. Let Americans who go to Paris remember that they should there represent republican virtue and intelligence."

Mrs. Howe is very eloquent on this subject, adding that there would be little chance of misunderstanding with France if American tourists, instead of devoting themselves to shopping and amusements in Paris, would try to make friends with the best people there. Instead of the full trunk and empty purse, which usually mark a return from Paris, will be a full heart and a hand clasping across the water another hand, pure and resolute as itself, the hand of order, the hand of brotherly progress and charity."

It may interest those who know that Mrs. Howe has written a number of patriotic lyrics hardly second in beauty to "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The volume in which many of them appear was published in the exciting year following the war, when the nation was hardly in a condition to give the fullest appreciation to poetry. The edition of "Later Lyrics" was soon exhausted, however, and in a volume of poems to be brought out the present season will be included several of these earlier poems.

As an active worker in the American Peace Society, whose doctrines she has promulgated in public addresses, both in this country and in England and France, Mrs. Howe would naturally prefer arbitration to war, but if a wrong can be righted only by the sword there is no more earnest patriot than the author of the "Battle Hymn" in supporting the policy of her country.

GIRLS WIELD BROOMS

A HANDY AND NOVEL WAY TO DEVELOP THE ARMS.

Thin Girls Who Desire Rounded Arms Need Not Go to a School of Physical Culture But Simply Sweep Hard Several Times a Day.

Those flowing sleeves for girls are unusualy pretty this year, but, judging from a conversation I chanced to overhear the other day, they are driving the girls with scrawny arms to distraction. I didn't mean to play eavesdropper, but I'm glad now that I was within hearing distance, for I made a discovery which I am sure will be of interest. You see, the sleeves are very transparent, and that is why the group of girls seemed filled with woe. They were all talking about how thin their arms were and discussing tennis and golf as a means of rounding them out.

"Golf never up the hill will do it, girls, nor tennis, either," exclaimed one plump looking miss—the only plump one, by the way, in the group. "Look at my arm," and in a trice she had unsnapped her cuff links and, pushing the pink puff sleeve to her shoulder, displayed a beautifully modelled arm, dimpling in soft rounded curves.

"Yes, but yours were gifts of the gods," cried a scrawny one. "You didn't have to do it means to be bothered about them."

"I do, too! Wasn't I almost a scarecrow a year ago? You remember how thin I was for months after I left school. I tried everything—tennis, golf, massage and physical culture, until I didn't care whether I was lither I had plump arms or skinny ones."

"But do tell us what you did do finally to bring about such ideally lovely curves."

"I not only did,' but I still 'do' it every day of my life. Now don't laugh when I tell you that I have swept my sitting and bed room five times every morning since last August. Haven't you noticed that housemaids nearly always have rounded, shapely arms? The idea popped into my head one day while Nita was sweeping the halls. She had her sleeves rolled up, so I saw her arm from shoulder to wrist, and it was the most beautiful in symmetry that I have ever seen.

"I just didn't wait another minute, but rounded up the stairs into mamma's room and told her I had made a discovery, and that she must go right down town and order a load of imported brooms. I began that very hour. I swept my room over and over again. I tired myself out so much, in fact, that I went to bed at 7 o'clock. But in a week's time I noticed an improvement. My arms were more firm, and before a month had gone by I was in the seventh heaven of delight. But, just think, girls, I haven't neglected this exercise but twice since I began, and then I was in sleeper going and coming from Chicago, where the halls.

"Of course, it's an awful bother, but when one considers the comfort it brings, why, you never once think about that. I just hop out of bed into my cold plunge, and the first thing one comes right after. It really is a tip-top exercise for one all over, too. My cheeks are all aglow when I finally poke the broom away.

"How many brooms do you reckon I have worn out? Just five, that's all, and my carpets have been renovated twice. So, you see, it is not any more economical than going to a physical culture madame, but it's a deal more gratifying in the end."

"But how on earth do you do it," asked one of the thin girls. "I don't know how to hold a broom."

"Hold it the best way you can. That's all the information I can give," laughed the pink bud. "But you want to buy those with good large sticks, because they do not break so easily."

You must wear chamois gloves, or your palms will be blistered, and get some silk dust caps to slip over your hair. You've no idea how funny one looks gotten up so. And if you go to work with a long skirt on it will most surely get tired dragging it around over the floor. Put on a golf skirt; they are just lovely for sweeping."

The thin girls were profuse in their thanks, and went away rejoicing.

The Stockings She Wears.

Resplendent in all the hues of the rainbow are milady's stockings. Silk ones in gay plaids have first choice, and then lisle. So low have the lisle been brought down in price that there seems no excuse for any woman wearing the clumsier cotton this season. Gay reds, blue and greens are blended together in plaids and stripes and find equal favor. Blue polka-dotted ones are very popular, and no woman seems to fear the opprobrius title, "Vas bleu." Many patterns in vogue years ago have been revived and vie with those of later model. Silk open-worked ones in long lacey effects are delightful over a tight cut the front are very smart for evening wear with slippers. Plain bright shades in these last-mentioned predominate, while the plaids and stripes usually have a black background.

Short Waterproof Coat.

We have something new in waterproof. This is nothing more nor less than the short waterproof cloak. It is of pale tan, with pipings, collar facing and buttons of dark green silk. The coat is double-breasted, loose fitting both back and front, and has very full bishop sleeves. The cut is, indeed, admirable for any sort of cloak, so that even if the uses of a short waterproof are not at once apparent, the garment is sufficiently smart to recommend itself on that score alone.

THE SULTANA WRECK

BONES OF THE VICTIMS RECENTLY EXPOSED BY THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

In April, 1865 Her Boilers Burst and 1,500 Union Soldiers Were Killed or Drowned —River Has Now Undermined the Graveyard Where Recovered Bodies Laid.

The last time in this port for several hours discharging a cargo of molasses, and started up the river early on the morning of the 27th. She had proceeded about six miles, being opposite Hen and Chicken Island, when, without any warning whatever, her boilers burst, her big chimneys parted and the shattered wreck caught fire. As many as 1,500 soldiers were killed or drowned as a result of the accident, and for four days dozens of floaters were captured every hour or so.

Many bodies were recovered near the scene of the wreck, and these were buried at Mound City. At that time the people in this vicinity cared precious little for Yankee soldiers, though they gave them a decent burial. No tombstones were erected, however, and the graves were not kept green.

When the Sultana's victims were buried at Mound City the impromptu graveyard in which their last sleep was to be slept was far from the river's bank, but the Mississippi, seemingly with a fiendish desire to claim the bones of these victims for her waters to ripple over, as they have rippled over for years the bones of other victims of the same catastrophe, has gradually worn away the ground until now she sweeps the graveyard with a steady, sullen murmur, and bones and ghastly skulls look down on the water from where they lie, a few feet away.

The wreck of the steamer Sultana, which occurred on April 27, 1865, and which sent a shudder over the entire length and breadth of this land, has been recalled by the action of the Mississippi river, on those broad bosom the catastrophe took place, as those cold embrace hundreds of soldiers went down to rise no more.

The Sultana was a very large Mississippi River packet, which was engaged by the United States Government as soon as the Civil War was ended, to convey Federal troops from the far South to their homes. The steamer took on a large number of troops at Vicksburg, and took on several other smaller detachments on the way up. When she arrived here, on April 26, she had 2,500 Federal soldiers aboard.

Short Sight.

Short sight is very prevalent in cities and countries where education is more highly developed; in rural districts and villages it is rarely met with, and among uneducated people and practically unknown. The inhabitants of towns and cities have their vision limited by their surroundings, and seldom exercise their sight at long distances. They are also much more given to reading and visiting, so that their children are thereby more likely to inherit the defect, and the grown-up people transmit the tendency to it. Apart from other reasons for its acquirement there will always be found among children a greater percentage of short sight, and worse sight, than in the army every man where the desks are low and unsuitable, and the light bad, thus necessitating much more stooping than in those where these things are arranged in accordance with common sense. The remedies for short sight in village schools is small, in higher educational establishments it is great, and in the universities and colleges is very great. In some parts of Germany, where the writer has lived and spent his youthful years in college, there are 50 per cent. of the students troubled with short sight; so that it seems that in a few generations the whole country will become short sighted if the present rate of increase of the defect be maintained. Fortunately for the human race, science rarely finds a remedy in the necessity for it arises, and as the defect increased of late years, so also has the knowledge of how to combat it. There never need be a case of short sight if parents and teachers should only be educated before the defect is acquired those regulations that have to be observed afterwards.

Mischief Made by a Muskrat.

A little muskrat caused more trouble in Buffalo the other night than is ever known to have been caused by one of the animals. This particular muskrat succeeded in cutting off the electric light supply of nearly the entire city, and it was only an hour before the cause of the trouble was located and removed. With the exception of an isolated district here and there the entire town was wrapped in total darkness. Main street was one long avenue of gloom, relieved only by lights in windows by private plants. Everything had been running smoothly at the power station of the Buffalo General Electric company when the startling discovery was made that the water in the boilers was getting low and was rapidly going down. An examination of the valve that lets the water in through the big feed pipe that runs out into Buffalo river was made, but the valve was open as it should be. The valves on the boilers and condensers were examined, and they were found to be all right, too. The water in the boilers dropped lower and lower, until finally, in order to avoid an explosion, it was found necessary to bank the fires and shut off the draughts. This done, the dynamos no longer supplied current for the lamps, and the lights went out. The trouble man was called to the station. He quickly located the trouble in the feed pipe. It was cut, and after some fishing around he dragged a muskrat out of the pipe and dropped it on the floor.

CUBAN CAMPAIGNING.

SPANISH-INSURGENT WARFARE DESCRIBED BY A CUBAN COLONEL.

The Cuban Soldiers Heroes in the Eyes of the North if They Are Poorly Armed and Fed and Weak in Numbers—Gave up Land and Possessions to Join Insurgent Army.

The Cuban soldiers, poorly armed and poorly fed and weak in numbers, are heroes in the eyes of the people of the kind North. True, we have heroes among us, and we all try to fight bravely for our country. We willingly give up lands, professions and quiet to join the torn ranks of the little army; and to win many wonderful victories. These victories are due, to a great extent, to the fine qualities of our own men—to their dash and skill—but partly to the inexperience of the troops sent against us by the Spanish government. Boys of 17 and under are forced to take up arms against men with whom they have no real feeling of enmity. They are rushed about through a country they do not know; they are treated like dogs by most of their officers, and harassed by us from daylight till dark. Few of these wild troops are left to fight us. They were men of mettle and knowledge of warfare, and often proved too much for us, man for man. But the new recruits are fighting unwillingly, in a cause they do not love, and if we have any pity we will leave from our own people it is for them.

The Cuban in his early boyhood is trained in the use of the machete. In time of peace he uses it to cut cane and firewood, and as a tool in carpentry work; but when he comes to the front it becomes more deadly than the American army sabre or the old-time rapier. Every countryman, white or black, owns a machete, so in this respect our men are easily armed. Many of our cavalrymen are without carbines, but make up for the loss by the effective method of breaking the enemy in our guerilla fighting, the man with nothing but his machete is not entirely useless. When the Spanish commanders hear that we are somewhere in the vicinity and march out in force to subdue us, our horsemen divide into small squads of ten or twelve and our infantry lie in ambush. When the Spaniards are near enough to make sure targets we open fire on them from the brush. Sometimes they answer in this volley and charge in the smoke, and sometimes they turn back and make a dash for safety. In either case our little band of horsemen break in upon them from every side and cut and retreat. The Spanish officers may try to form their men into solid squares, but very often their attempts are unsuccessful, so we cut them down as they run. This is our way of coping with the superior numbers of Spanish regulars sent out to beat us back into servitude. Sometimes the victory is ours often it is theirs—for once in the open their numbers tell. We would not be able to carry our system of ambush and deadly attack into operation but for our replays of scouts who keep us well posted of our army notified of every movement of the enemy.

Most of the colored soldiers fighting for the Cuban cause are in the infantry, being too poor to own mounts of any description. Our army every man supplies his own horse, or else goes on foot. We have been under arms for over three years, and during all that time have known no such thing as payday.

Americans have too great a fear of catching yellow fever in Cuba. The truth of the matter is that our pastoral districts and our hills are as healthy as any country in the world, and that the disease rages only in the vicinity of Havana, and there it is partly due to the carelessness of the Spaniards in their sanitary arrangements.

A Remarkable Fact.

It is a remarkable fact that while the Christian churches of the United States are sending missionaries to the far East to convert the people of the land that was the cradle of the Aryan races, that same land is sending to this country the philosophy that has there been practiced for thousands of thousands of years, and its teachings are finding adherents among the most enlightened of our Christians, who say that it is nothing but more light shed upon the teachings of the Great Master, whose principal and often repeated maxim is that only through the love of humanity and the exercise of charity and self-sacrifice can the kingdom of heaven be gained.

Every kind act toward your suffering or ignorant brother carries with it its own reward, because it makes you a better man.

Surely there is something divine in the idea that a noble thought lives on forever even if not uttered, and that those thoughts are highly applauded by the angels, who come to him who fits himself for their reception through his own actions and life, and as the thought is the beginning of all action so our lives are assisted by noble thought.

Indian Fighters in Cuba.

The Indian warfare on the plains has developed as gallant soldiers as can be found in any army in the world. The campaigns against the murderous Sioux, Utes, Apaches and other hostiles have been for patriotism and not for some wars, but they developed soldierly qualities and made veterans equal to the best in the world. Many of the officers in the regular army and a great part of the men have seen active service against the Indians. They are ready for an ambushed, treacherous foe. Their discipline, keenness, resourcefulness and hardiness splendidly qualify them for service in Cuba. They were educated in the best school of the soldiers, the Indian campaigns in the West.

CAROLINE ISLANDS.

POSSESSIONS OF SPAIN WHERE PERPETUAL SUMMER REIGNS.

They Stretch About 2,000 Miles From East to West—Thermometer Rarely Goes Above 90 Degrees—The Natives Are Semi-Savages and Warlike.

If the United States should obtain control of the Philippine Islands, it would then be only a question of a short while until the Caroline Islands pass into American rule. The Caroline Islands over which Spain now holds sovereignty, stretch about 2,000 miles from east to west, and though near to the equator, and in a climate of perpetual summer, the thermometer ranges from 74 degrees to 87 degrees through the year. Within the group there are five islands, of basaltic formation, some of them having high mountains from 2,000 to 3,000 feet high. These are Kusaie, Ponape, Ruk Yap, and Pelew. Kusaie and Ponape have been called the "Gems of the Pacific." For over thirty years the micronesian mission has flourished in the islands, island after island having been visited by Christian teachers. No one now visiting there, ever saw any sign or ever had the remotest thought that any European nation claimed sovereignty there. There were no Spaniards on the islands, no Spanish vessels in the waters. The people are absolutely independent and their chiefs were not even asked to recognize any authority outside of their islands. The Caroline Islanders are elaborately tatooed, but their clothing is of the slightest. The characteristics vary somewhat on the various islands but none of the people are savage and warlike. While not noted for cannibalism, it is said that on some of the islands there is not an adult who has not tasted human flesh. In 1888 more than thirty different islands were occupied by micronesian teachers trained under American missionaries; the people were Christianized; liquor and tobacco were banished from the islands and "the Ten Commandments" became a code of laws. There were established forty-seven churches, with 4,500 members and fifteen native pastors. Such was the condition of the islands in 1888 until a question of territorial rights was disputed by the European powers because of Spain's enforcement of her claim of sovereignty. The matter in dispute was referred to the pope for arbitration who in his discussion gave the Marshall Islands to Germany, the Caroline Islands to Spain, and the Gilbert Group to England. After that a Spanish governor at Ronkiet, a bishop, priests and fifty Spanish soldiers were sent to Ponape. Since then no American missionary has been allowed to remain at Ponape. The Micronesian missionary boat has been forbidden to touch at any point of the islands except at the Spanish harbor. Recently, after years of delay the Spanish government has paid $1,500 for the American mission property destroyed. Spanish vessels seldom appear in the Ruk and Kusaie islands, and they have no difficulty on these islands.

Other Lands Than Ours.

Russia is busy on the west as well as at the east. She is improving her harbor at Vladivostock and taking possession of Port Arthur and Talien-Wan and completing her great railroad thither. At the same time she is pushing toward the Atlantic ocean, too, and preparing to establish a great ice-free port thereon. We have hitherto told of the renaissance of Archangel and the opening of a railroad connecting that ancient city directly with Moscow and all Russia. That is an important step. But it is not enough. For Archangel is near the Arctic sea, is ice-bound, and that sea opens into the Arctic ocean. What is wanted is a port on the Atlantic, or at least on the Arctic, near the Atlantic, and that is exactly what Russia is now endeavoring to secure. The first step is the opening, or reopening, of the old port of Kola. That is on the Murmanian coast, well up toward the Norwegian frontier. At that point the Arctic ocean is practically always navigable, and not for many months choked up with ice, as is the White sea at Archangel. And it is 500 miles nearer the Atlantic than is Archangel. It has the disadvantage of being in Finland, and not connected with them by river or railroad. But the enterprise that runs a railroad across Siberia can be trusted to build one across Finland and Lapland. Large appropriations have been made from the imperial treasury for the improvement of the port of Kola, or rather of Ekaterina, a little lower down on the river, and that place will doubtless soon become a considerable center of commerce.

Compensation for Accidents.

A new law adopted in Italy requires that every employer shall, at his own cost, provide all his workmen compensation for all accidents in consequences of which last more than five days. The compensation under the law is as follows: If there shall result from the accident disablement of a complete and permanent nature the compensation shall be an amount equivalent to five times the man's yearly wages, but in any case not less than $600. This amount is, as a rule to be invested in a life annuity for the benefit of the injured workman.

Around Mt. Rainier.

This mountain is the grandest in the United States. It is more than 15,000 feet high, is covered with ice and snow, has beautiful parks and noble forests at its base, and is much frequented by camping parties, tourists and mountain climbers.

WOMEN PUBLISHERS.

A REMARKABLE DAILY NEWSPAPER HAS APPEARED IN PARIS.

La Fronde Is Managed and Made by Feminine Brains—Mme. Marguerite Durand the Head of the Project—Celebrated People on Her Staff.

The latest development of "feminisme"—a word having no exact equivalent in English, but which means the assertion in a natural, unaggressive way of the feminine personality—takes practical shape in the appearance of a Parisian daily newspaper entitled La Fronde, which is edited by women for women. Not a solitary male being is employed on La Fronde in any capacity whatever. The office "boys" and "printer's devils" are active young maidens, smartly attired in simple dresses and coquettish aprons. The "pressmen," machinists, compositors, telegraphers, photographers, lithographers, proofreaders, clerks, advertising agents, delivery and circulation agents, the "foreman" of the pressroom, the "foreman" of the composing-room, reporters, artists, foreign correspondents, dramatic, musical, and literary critics, society writers, musical writers, scientific writers, fashion writers, cookery writers, novelette writers, leader writers, the day editor, the city editor, the financial editor, the night editor, the business manager, and the editor-in-chief are women, one and all of them, and as in Paris all the above mentioned offices are kept by women, it may fairly be said that La Fronde is even sold by women.

To realize the importance of the present movement it should be remembered that the women of France have hitherto refused to join together in any organized association to attain by steady, systematic perseverance the degree of freedom enjoyed by their English-speaking sisters. There has been plenty of individual energy and disconnected effort—a great deal of guerilla warfare—but this is the first time that feminisme has been marshaled and united under one banner, with one common object in view. This centralization is due to Mme. Marguerite Durand de Valfere, who, at the Women's congress at Brussels, was made a high commissioner, intrusted with the task of collecting and classifying the most urgent needs of modern woman, and bringing them in the most effective manner before the proper authorities.

As can readily be imagined, the step from these duties to the founding of a newspaper was a very natural one. Mme. Marguerite Durand has been selected by her countrywomen as the editor-in-chief and manager of La Fronde. Belonging to no pronounced sect or faction, and having no entangling alliances of a political character, she was able to group about her women of undoubted talent, but whose special fads or fancies might otherwise have kept them apart.

Mme. Marguerite Durand, who has gathered together this brilliant staff of writers, is one of the most charming and intellectual women in Paris. There is nothing about her suggestive of the "blue stocking" or of the popular conception of the "new woman." She is essentially feminine in all her ideas and tastes. When quite a young girl Mlle. Marguerite Durand entered the Paris conservatory, and after three years' study there was graduated from the dramatic department with a first prize. She received an engagement at the Theatre Francais, where she made a series of debuts in the classic and modern repertoires with marked success. Mlle. Faillon selected her for an important role in "Le Monde ou l'on s'ennuie." Mlle. Marguerite Durand was regarded as one of the most promising of the younger artists of the Maison de Moliere, but her stately beauty and graceful, and her sylphlike figure, her fair hair, and sparkling, light-blue eyes were greatly admired. Owing to a sudden caprice she abandoned the stage. Although still young enough to assume theatrical parts, she now prefers to devote her life to the feministe movement, and it is with intense earnestness that she is now pursuing her duties as founder and editor-in-chief of La Fronde to which she has been called by her colleagues.

In the course of an interesting conversation with the writer Mme. Marguerite Durand said:

"I hope that the present movement will not be misunderstood in America. It is not at all a revolution, as some people seem to suppose, but an evolution, which we are resolved to carry out with untiring perseverance and with that ceaseless vigilance which can be most effectively insured by a daily newspaper. It is by combined action that we shall succeed. French women have now entered the stability period in addition far in advance of the degree of independence accorded them by law and custom. Public opinion is already alive to this; but the Legislature in France, as in most other countries, is essentially an automatic instrument, and, like an eight-day clock, has to be wound up otherwise it comes to a standstill. This winding up will be done by La Fronde whenever necessary and the Senators and Deputies will not be allowed to forget that the women of France have their eyes upon them and expect them to act. We are, however, not going to be aggressive in any way, but, of course if we are attacked then La Fronde may be implicitly relied to 'talk back,' to use an American expression, and will do so most vigorously."—Cor. NEW YORK LETTER.

Special Correspondence.

While it is true that no man is indispensable, there are some men who cannot well be replaced. The late Antoni Seidl was undoubtedly the greatest interpreter of Wagner since the death of the composer himself, with whom he once had close personal relations. As a conductor in Wagnerian opera Mr. Seidl gave much of his attention to the more delicate characteristics of the score, and avoided anything in the nature of coarseness in the stormier passages. He died in his prime at the age of forty-eight. His last work was to engage in the organization of a permanent orchestra for New York, and funds to support it for several years had already been guaranteed.

Asphalt Kept Dry.

The bicycle riders in New York have made an energetic and apparently successful effort to have a strip of each asphalted street left dry for their accommodation. Wet asphalt is a great nuisance to the wheelmen, and also to the horses and carriages of the slippiness; but dry asphalt, under the conditions prevailing in most American cities, is an equal, if not greater nuisance to the citizens generally. Dust vies easily over its smooth surface, and arises in annoying clouds upon every disturbance. There is a judicious medium by observing which the asphalt can be kept damp but not wet, and in this condition it is good for footmen, wheelmen and horsemen alike.

Fashionable Dining Is Begun.

Traffic on the Brooklyn Bridge takes an unusual direction on Thursday evenings, when a crowd of unusually large proportions sets out toward the Manhattan side. This Brooklyn contingent is concerned with a matter no less important than dinner. Thursdays and Sundays are critical days in the existence of every Brooklyn family. Then the "girl"—as the present elevation of her position requires her to be called—goes out. That means that dinner goes out with her, and it must be sought. So the patient procession of hungry Brooklynites starts toward New York and scatters itself among the uptown restaurants. There are not many restaurants in Brooklyn, and the citizens who are obliged to go out for dinner abroad prefer to make the trip to New York and combine some festivity with the necessity of the occasion. It is on Thursday and Sunday nights that those Brooklyn clubs which provide table d'hotes are most crowded, and that their liberality in admitting women to the club restaurants is said to be due to the strictness of the ancillary outings. It certainly sends a small crowd to New York as surely as the apostles went around the Strassburg clock whenever the hour strikes.

Sage's Dissatisfaction.

Such haste has been made by that ever admirable patriarch, Mr. Russell Sage, to express his dissatisfaction with the offers of the Rapid Transit Commission, that it is said that he proposes, to suspect the existence of some apprehension on his part lest the other Manhattan directors should be disposed to give the proffered franchises careful, if not favorable, consideration. Mr. Sage, of course, is opposed on principles to the spending of money for any purpose whatever, his ideal corporation being one with receipts as large as possible and no expenses at all. It is not probable that he expects even the elevated roads to be run in this perfect manner, but he has kept the lofty mark ever before the eyes of its managers, and naturally objects to a plan which plainly hints that public convenience and interest must be put almost on a level with the dividends of stockholders. That the view which some of the Manhattan directors have shown a disposition of late to take, and Mr. Sage can hardly be blamed for getting in an anticipatory argument against any such weak yielding to popular clamor. He is well aware that rapid and prospective profits have no such attraction for him as do those which are immediate. Extensions of the elevated road into parts of the trans-Harlem region where vacant lots still abound do not promise instant returns, and therefore he opposes them. His partners in this business of selling pink tickets are younger, and it is just possible that his arguments will be no more impressive when uttered in the board room than they are when printed in the newspapers.

Change of Editors.

Henry Dumars has resigned the editorship of the Criterion, his successor being J. I. Clarke, who has won an acknowledged position in the profession. He was at one time editor of the Mirror, after which he was managing editor of the Journal, and hence is well fitted for his present position. The spring brings many removals, in which journalism bears its share, and Outlook has left its have now and for a stability pretty and graceful, and her sylphlike figure, her fair hair, and sparkling, light-blue eyes were greatly admired. Owing to a sudden caprice she abandoned the stage. Although still young enough to assume theatrical parts, she now prefers to devote her life to the feministe movement, and it is with intense earnestness that she is now pursuing her duties as founder and editor-in-chief of La Fronde to which she has been called by her colleagues.

CYRUS THORP.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms--$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Bad Brand of Editorials.

The Washington, (N. J.) Tidings prints ten editorials, occupying two columns of space, each one of which is an attack on the editor of the Star of that place. If that editorial page strikes all of its readers with the same impression that it makes on us, the editor of the Tidings must be classed by the quotation "What fools these mortals be."

Editorial animosity between two papers may be indulged in once in a while in a good natured way without encroaching on the patience of readers, but when it appears in such abundance and vindictiveness as the Tidings' columns evidence the editor makes himself ridiculous. In reading the screeds the editor who penned them undoubtedly feels personal satisfaction in the idea that he has lambasted his competitor in a vigorous manner, but in the conduct of a newspaper there is a higher ideal for the editor to strive for than assailing a brother journalist for the purpose of placing self.

Notwithstanding the fact that the ceaseless competition between the newspapers of New York is a matter that attracts public interest and that there is something fascinating in knowing of the internal workings of these great news purveyors and moulders of opinion, the recent bitter editorial attacks on one another indulged in by the New York Sun, World, Journal and Herald has become sickening to their readers. The editors of these great journals who pose as men of giant intellects and conservative minds are bordering close on to pigmies in both qualifications in the way they have let their jealously and enemity to one another become emblazoned to the world in the cold type of their editorial pages.

Costs to Daily With the Law.

It don't pay to be negligent with the law's demands, as one Plainfield property-owner has found out. He owed the city 85 cents in taxes, the failure to pay which at a certain time made him a delinquent and caused the account to be inserted in the advertisement of the delinquent tax list which has been running in the local papers for the past few weeks.

This week the taxpayer appeared at the collector's office to pay the delinquency and was much astounded to find that officer demanding $1.58. At first the taxpayer couldn't understand how the tax bill could increase to that amount in such a short time, but when the collector showed him the incidental expenses that occurred by the account becoming delinquent the disgruntled property-owner could do nothing but pay the amount of actual tax three-fold increased.

Truth In It.

Editing this journal is a nice business. If we publish jokes people say we are too "rattle headed." If we don't we are an old fossil. If we publish original matter, they say we don't give them selections enough. If we give them selections, they say we are too lazy to write. If we remain in the office, we ought to go out and hustle. If we go out, then we are not attending to our business. If we wear old clothes, they laugh at us. If we wear good ones, they say we have a "pull." Now what are we to do? Just as likely as not some one will say we stole this item from our exchanges, and so we did.

Down With The Tramp.

Civil government having failed to solve the problem of driving the tramp from off the face of the earth, or even certain sections of it, the women of New Jersey have undertaken the job. Nutley is the scene of the endeavor, and the work of eliminating the tramp from the floating population of that town is represented in the imposing title of the Ladies' Home Protective Association. It is a well-known fact that the genus hobo depends for existence upon his ability to impress the housewife with a pitiable take of woe and a subsequent "hand-out" of cold victuals. Deprived of that, the tramp would become a rare specimen of the American citizen.

The Nutley women have issued a circular in which attention is called to the large number of idle men who are to be seen in the township. The circular says that while the men are apparently in quest of food and clothing, their real object is to steal whatever they can.

In order to discourage the strangers, the members of the society have agreed not to feed or give clothing of any kind or allow it to be given at their doors, unless the applicant is recommended by some responsible person living in Essex county. Each member also agrees to notify as far as possible other members of the association and the proper authorities whenever the tramps solicit food or clothing at their doors. The members are confident of ridding the township of the tramp nuisance.

Must Keep the Dust Laid.

Section 9 of the ordinance now in course of progress of adoption by the Common Council, granting the Plainfield Street Railway Company the right to extend its lines over Richmond and East Second streets to the city line, is particularly gratifying to The Daily Press. In view of the persistent advocacy by The Daily Press for the street committee of the Council to incorporate into this ordinance a stipulation that the streets along which the street railway tracks are laid shall be copiously sprinkled during the summer months, it ought not to be difficult for readers to understand that this particular section refers to this matter.

Section 9 prescribes that all tracks of the Street Railway Company now laid or hereafter to be laid, are to be copiously watered throughout their entire length and for the space of two feet on each side thereof, twice in each day, from the 15th day of May to the 1st day of October in each year; once before 11 a. m.; and once after 2 p. m., and in case of the failure of the Street Railway Company to do so, to the satisfaction of the street commissioner or the street committee, said company shall pay to the treasurer of the city of Plainfield the sum of $20 per day for each and every day such failure shall continue or exist; such payment to be considered as liquidated damages for such default.

For this section Councilman Barrows and the other members of the street committee will receive the thanks of a large number of residents along the streets on which the trolley cars have heretofore stirred up clouds of dust as they whizzed by.

Voorhees May Resign as Senator.

The latest report in connection with the ambitious designs of Governor Voorhees is that as soon as he is nominated for a long term he will resign as Senator for Union county, the resignation not to take effect, however, until next January.

By taking that course a new Senator for Union county could be chosen at the regular election in November. Then, in the event of his election as Governor, the county would not be without representation in the State Senate when a vote would be ordered for a United States Senator. The Governor, it is said, intends to write his resignation as Senator and then file it to himself. It would be accepted by him and filed with the Secretary of State, when a writ of election to fill the vacancy would be issued.

Many think that such a course would be of doubtful legality. But it is asserted that the courts have decided cases of alike character as legal, and an opinion written by the late Justice Knapp, and reported in eleventh Vroom, is cited as an illustration. The ground is taken that the actual vacation of the Senatorship by the Acting Governor would not occur until two months afterward was not different in fact from the present system of electing Senators and Assemblymen in November. Their predecessors continue in office until the following January, and would be those who would sit if a special session of the Legislature were called in the meantime.

Plainfield for Voorhees.

It doesn't require a very close observer of political affairs to see that Plainfield Republicans are to a man in favor of Foster Voorhees being the nominee for Governor at the approaching State convention.

Naturally, being a Union county man, the Acting-Governor and nominal Senator has a strong pull on the friendship and support of the G. O. P. in Plainfield for sectional reasons alone, but beyond that no one can gainsay the statement that Voorhees is far and above any other Republican politician in personal popularity in this city.

Of course, the chance of making Mayor Fisk State Senator to succeed Voorhees in the Legislature has its element of strength in the support of Voorhees, but even without any direct honor coming to Plainfield as a result of the latter's nomination for the high office it is almost certain that he would be the most popular candidate for Plainfielders.

Sanguine Merchants.

One swallow does not make a summer, nor does the experience of one city necessarily measure that of every other. But in the vast mechanism of trade the conviction is reasonable that there must be a generally diffused energy to make the complicated machine clatter with a whiz of wheels. Local and fragmentary prosperity would not do this. One may conclude then that the August trade opening in New York city is at one with the same forces operating in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans, Denver and San Francisco as well as in innumerable lesser trade marts.

The report made by the secretary of the Merchants' Association of New York is a very remarkable one and worthy of comment. Merchants from all parts of the country are buying profusely in every department of business. The show of confidence surpasses that of any previous year since 1892, and the words of all express the intense conviction that national affairs are on the full impulse of a swiftly rising tide. There is scarcely a branch of business activity which does not reflect the powerful impulse. It need scarcely be said to any student of economics that this very feeling tends to augment the condition which it recognizes.

Aside from the waste of war, a loss quickly recouped by other accompaniments of national conflict, in many cases of triumphant war, the influence of the episode of which we are approaching the end have been stimulating rather than retroactive. The universal sense of resourcefulness and power which the war has brought to the surface in an unequaled degree has been stimulated through and through. While war is not to be sought in any spirit of medievalism which seeks for glory in what is terrible and destructive, the consciousness of strength, when it is active to strike crushing blows as well as potential, has the highest bracing vigor in other pursuits than those of arms. The convergence of all our energies and sympathies to one center of focal splendor in the erasure of lines of north and south, east and west, is another most effective incentive to the sanguine attitude of the public mind. Everything is operating to convince the people of the land that they have reached the mountains of Beulah. There is scarcely a drawback in the general sentiment of confidence. It is natural, then, that our merchants should be more than hopeful. It is not merely, either, one is fain to hope, a bare question of sordid money making which is at the root of the satisfaction. It is the thought in many a mind that additional labor will find employment; that the miseries of the poor may be alleviated in the general good; that the fortunes of the nation, as a power in the world, may find their due expansion. The man of business in seeking his own profit may be credited with some degree of pride in contributing to the greatness of the people, of whom he is a humble member.

The bill introduced into the British parliament providing for loans to colonies under certain specified conditions is in accordance with the general policy of the country in binding its dependencies by the most genuine helpfulness. But it is difficult to see what practical end can be served. The same conditions which the proposed bill specifies are so confirmatory of the solvency of the borrowers that they would justify the easy sale of colonial bonds. If Great Britain wishes to help its colonies in this way, it would be a more easy and direct way to indorse the bonds, thus giving them still greater security. The same purpose would be effected in a way possibly more acceptable to colonial pride. It looks as if this measure was an entering wedge for the revival of the great Chamberlain scheme, of which there was so much discussion a year or two since.

General Lord Wolseley is an enthusiastic Americomaniac. To Hiram Maxim, about to set sail for America to preach the new Anglo-Saxon alliance, he wrote: "I think your proposed 'campaign' would be worth to us far more than a dozen Wei-Hei-Weis or Sudans and to the United States far more than Cuba, Manila and the whole kingdom of Ferdinand and Isabella thrown in."

"The moral amelioration of man constitutes the chief mission of woman," says M. Comte, the philosopher. True. And the pursuit has always been so tantalizingly elusive and bewitching that it has remained a labor of love with her from the first.

The Chinese mandarins were firmly convinced that locomotives were devils when they first saw them. With the commotion made in China by the railroad question today this notion about the diabolism of the iron horse will not be very soon dissipated.

The small worries of life wear out the spirit more than the great misfortunes. Against the one the mind rebounds and often gathers new strength. The attack of the other is the constant friction of the dropping water.

It took Lord Albermarle and the English fleet more than a month to capture Havana, and then he succeeded only by breaking in at the back door. Instantly Uncle Sam was ready, he took it by one shot from Washington.

Hero Worship.

One of the most salutary traits in human nature is its passionate admiration for those who rise far above the average life of their fellow men through the medium of heroic deeds. This superiority may be evinced on the battlefield, in the saving of human life by risking one's own, or by moral heroism in the domain of politics and statesmanship, or in other ways too numerous to cite. But it is to the hero of battle, through the full blaze of publicity which focusses the world's attention at a single point and the showy splendor which accompanies military exploit, that the fullest meed of admiration is generally given. The hero of peace may be quite as deserving of admiration as the sword bearer, but his deed lacks the splendid frame to set forth the color and proportions of the action. It may be set down as reasonably true that the man capable of great enthusiasm in the admiration of great deeds and their doers, is himself capable of doing something rightly noble when the opportunity occurs. It is this kind of admiration which is akin to the sentiment for a higher ideal even under commonplace and depressing conditions. It has been a favorite theme of some of the great modern philosophers and essayists to consider, how far the stimulus given by war through the spectacle of heroic deeds to the mass of men who look on as spectators may compensate in moral elevation for the waste and bloodshed of war. At the time of the Crimean campaign of 1855 one of the essays instituted a symposium on this subject, to which many of the leading thinkers of Great Britain contributed. The consensus of judgment was that the tendency of such an influence was clearly to lift public opinion and practice out of the rut of the sordid and the commonplace.

It does not need to go as far as Thomas Carlyle's doctrine preached in a thousand forms with such a fury of eloquent power that the hero-man was the only savior of society, before whom all must bow down and worship if they would find salvation. But one cannot escape from the belief that the contemplation of the heroic deed tends to propagate similar actions by force of example and imitation and to put the admirer in a nobler frame of mind. Men forget at such times all that is mean and habitually unworthy in themselves to drink at a purer fountain of feeling. And as for women it is easy to see that for them to thrill with joy and adoration at heroism as it is to breathe the air of heaven.

War, then, has its elevating as well as its seamy side. Our war has not lasted long. Its opportunities for splendid deeds of daring and hardihood have not been profuse. But some have been achieved which will shine on the great muster roll of heroism as worthily as any performed during our five years' civil war. The rapturous admiration with which the country responded to such an exploit as that of Hobson, for example, shows that the wellspring still bubbles clear and deep in the national heart after a quarter century of money making peace. The golden calf on occasion is easily and quickly dethroned for a mightier idol.

Canon C. H. Robinson in a Nineteenth Century paper gives a very interesting account of an African civilization developed mainly from within. The country known as Sokoto is completely cut off from European influence, and, so far as it has known exotic modification, this has been derived from Arab and Abyssinian sources. The Hausa tribe constitutes the bulk of the population, and it possesses a written language, the only one evolved, so far as known, by any strictly negritic people. The characters are adapted from the Arabic alphabet, and the date of their introduction runs back more than 1,000 years. Their literature proves to cover nearly this period and is made up of a great variety of interesting traditions. The Hausas, though now governed by a Mohammedan dynasty, under whom they claim to have lost much of their former greatness, are energetic traders, skillful workers of cloth and metals, and they manufacture a considerable number of other commodities. Canon Robinson's description completely disposes of the contention of the ethnologists that there is no people known of a substantially self derived civilization among the black African peoples.

Ex-Senator Warner Miller and Senator Morgan, who have been from the outset the sturdiest supporters of the Nicaraguan canal, have again been urging the matter on Mr. McKinley. The measure of the president is that he will ask for prompt legislation from congress at their reopening. It is said to favor governmental ownership in toto.

A litigant at law should have three bags—one full of papers, one of money and one of patience. Of all the three bags the first goes on increasing in bulk, while the others rapidly get empty. Yet great writers have pronounced law to be the highest and noblest fruit of civilization. They were lawyers, however.

The Russian court ladies have been immensely exercised over the prohibition of the czarina directed against smoking cigarettes in the royal presence. The etiquette could never have been very severe if it has been allowed at any time. It is all a matter of taste, however.

The Worth of a Child's Life.

The Rhadamanthus of a New Jersey court, Judge Gummere, has been made the target of widespread criticism, not to say attack, on account of the charge he gave in a recent litigation. The case was a trial for damages against a railway company, and the matter at issue was the valuation of a child's life. The judge declared to the jury that, according to the law, damages could only be assessed on the basis of the actual financial damage the loss of the child had been to the father, not on any punitive grounds nor yet by any sentimental measure. Of course there can be no absolute justice in such a case, and the best possible is only a proximate rule. Many children remain expense to their parents rather than advantage, viewed as a matter of arithmetic. Even in the case of working children the ameliorated factory laws have greatly reduced the financial aid which they give to the family. In the affair referred to Judge Gummere decided that the jurors would be justified in valuing that assistance at $1.

The torrent of popular animadversion appears to have been misdirected. It should have been aimed against the law, not the interpreter; the legislature, not the judge. If such matters are made questions of court assessment, sentiment must be completely banished from any consideration in balancing the scales of justice. From the standpoint of sentiment no money damages could possibly compensate a parent. Wounds to the affections, amounting sometimes almost to heartbreak, cannot be measured in terms of gold and silver. In going to any court for compensation the parent deliberately puts himself out of the realm of emotion and sentiment and confesses that he remits for the advantage of the defendant any influences flowing from these powerful springs. When he chooses dollars and cents as the measure of value, he defines the sole basis from which the problem must be treated. This thought appears to have been confused in the minds of many who have been made indignant by the words of Judge Gummere's charge. It should not be stigmatized as the measure of the value of a child's life. It is the answer which the cold blooded law gives to those who seek to draw balm from it in a cold blooded way.

An Odd Situation.

The hostility of the English and Dutch in South Africa has bred many an interesting imbroglio, in some cases leading to battle and bloodshed. But the dilemma now agitating Cape politics, while it does not involve war with the Boer republic, is a queer complication, full of important consequences to the whole future of South Africa. It is not dissimilar in its elements to that political condition of suffrage power existing in America before the civil war which gave a preponderance to the south in congress for so many years by making the slave population the basis for an increased representation.

As things now stand in the Cape Colony it takes about half as many votes to elect a representative to parliament in a Dutch district as it does in an English district. When the division of seats was made, it was a fair one, but as the rural districts, where the Boers have the majority, have grown slowly and the towns and cities, where the English are ascendant, have advanced in wealth and population rapidly the just ratio has been completely upset. The Boers, who always vote against English interests and in sympathy with the wishes of their fellow Dutchmen in the neighboring republics, have so far fought successfully against a redistribution of seats. The forthcoming election will probably settle the question for the English side, but create a most passionate ill feeling, which may lead to dangerous consequences. The same anomaly as to distribution of political power exists even today in some of our own states in America. For instance, a rural hamlet in Vermont with seven voters sends as many representatives to the legislature as does Rutland or Montpelier, both goodly cities.

"Love makes time pass, and time makes love pass," says a satirical proverb. In the case of conjugal love, when, if it has not passed, it has become threadbare, there is nothing to put gloss and nap on it so quickly as occasional judicious absence. It is consistent with the spirit of Hamlet's reflection on the callousness of the gravedigger, "The hand of little employment hath the daintier sense."

Massachusetts has snubbed Canada. The Boston fathers have nuked up a statute under which Highland cadets can only join the coming Scottish gathering at the Hub by dispensing with broadsword and targe and musket. This is only tit for tat. A year or two since the Montreal authorities perpetrated a similar prohibition at the expense of a company of American militiamen.

Sarah Bernhardt is about to visit India at the invitation of a prominent native potentate, where she hopes to do some tiger hunting. Should "Stripes" become the hunter instead of the hunted, as he sometimes does, he will have a finer tidbit than the divine Sarah would have proved when a French caricaturist dubbed a picture of the actress and her lapdog "A dog watching a bone."

CHANGES IN DRY GOODS STORE.

Woodhull & Martin to Make Numerous Changes in Arrangements.

Woodhull & Martin, the dry goods men, have begun a general overhauling of their West Front street stores, preparatory to making several changes in the arrangement of their goods this fall.

The suit department in the rear of the store has been moved, and in its place will soon be found a grand display of lace curtains. Rods will be hung and on them the curtains will be spread to the best advantage. Most of the changes will be made in the store formerly occupied by Doane & Edsall. The elevator has been taken out and the stairs leading to the cellar removed.

This store has been used for house hold furniture, but now will be given up to notions, kid gloves, hosiery, etc. All the small wear will be found on this side of the store. New counters will be built and several new lines of goods exhibited. The firm have decided to put in traveling bags, satchels, trunks, etc., and a complete stationery department. Other lines will be decided upon later.

A Young Offender.

A young colored girl, barely fifteen years of age, was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza this morning, charged by her grandmother with being disorderly and directing a flow of improper and abusive language toward the aged relative. The grandmother wanted the girl committed to the Industrial School. A new home was found for the girl by Warden Martin and she sobbingly promised to be good in the future if not sent away.

State Endeavor Convention.

The twelfth annual convention of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Societies will begin Wednesday, September 28th, at Asbury Park. There are sixteen societies in the Morristown local Christian Endeavor Union. They held an informal meeting Monday evening in the parlor of the South Street Presbyterian church. The Rev. E K. Murgatroyd, of Nashville, and J. Claude Armstrong made addresses.

FAITHLESS LOVER MUST ANSWER GRAND JURY.

Justice Mosher Decides in Favor of a Jilted Sweetheart.

DRAKE GOT MONEY WRONG

HE SAYS MISS CASSIDY GAVE IT TO HIM WITHOUT PROMISES.

But He Couldn't Explain Away a Certain Letter Which He Had Written to the Complainant, Asking for $25, so the Justice Held Him to Await the Action of the Grand Jury—Bail Furnished

It was a case of love at first sight on the part of Maggie Cassidy towards Edward Drake, according to the latter's story Monday afternoon in Justice Mosher's court. Drake sat upon the witness stand and tried to impress upon the court that Maggie had given him different sums of money from August, 1896, to January, 1898, aggregating in all $125.25, and had given them out of pure charity and a desire to be benevolent.

Maggie is a buxom Irish girl who is employed as servant in a Mercer avenue home and Drake is a young brick maker, who was married to Miss Anna Belle Snyder by Rev. T. Logan Murphy at the rectory of the church of the Holy Cross Thursday afternoon. The couple's honeymoon was cut short an hour afterwards by the arrival of Constable Rockafellow with a warrant for the bridegroom's arrest on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses from a former sweetheart, Miss Maggie Cassidy.

Drake's hearing was set down for Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Long before that hour the court room was crowded, and spectators stood in the hall, so anxious were all to hear the testimony to be given in this novel case.

The hearing was a disappointment to many, for the case was hurried through, and no sensational testimony was given. Miss Cassidy, the complaining witness, came into court accompanied by her lawyer, W. S. Angleman, and a friend. Miss Cassidy is plump and speaks with a broad Irish brogue. She was dressed in a pink figured lawn trimmed with red ribbons, and as she sat beside her counsel cast many a look at Drake, her past lover, who sat opposite. Mrs. Drake, the four-days-old bride was also present. She sat in the rear of the court room and looked demurely at her pink fringe as Miss Cassidy told how Drake used to adore her and obtain from various sums of money from her with honeyed words about some building lots he wanted to buy.

Miss Cassidy had kept account of all the alleged loans, which she said were made upon Drake's promise to marry her, and had her accounts in court. The papers showed that in August, 1896, she had loaned Drake $10. This, she explained, he wanted to buy a watch with. September 9th, a few days afterwards, she had recorded a loan of 25 cents. December 27th Drake had borrowed 10 cents, and January 25th and 29th had borrowed $25 each time. There were other alleged loans, but the charge was brought on only one, $25 given to Drake Jan. 20th last.

Maggie said that she met Drake nearly three years ago. He kept steady company with her, she said, and they were to be married in October. This money loaned, she claimed, Drake wanted to pay on the lots he had purchased near Grant avenue. She said Drake had never told her he wouldn't marry her, and that she had waited until Friday to bring the suit against him because she had no reason to doubt him until he really was married to some one else. Drake called frequently at the house, she said, sometimes as often as four times a week.

Drake's story was an entirely different one. He claimed that the girl was infatuated with him, followed him about, and when he had no work in the winter time, pressed her money upon him, "to do what he wanted with."

Drake admitted taking the money, and never paying it back, but maintained that it was all a free gift. He could'nt explain how a girl receiving $14 a month as wages, could bestow $125.25 on him in eighteen months time, and consider it all as a gift.

One time, he said, she gave him $10 to take her out for a trolley ride, and didn't want the change back. Other sums, he claimed, were given him for other purposes, sometimes it would be a quarter, sometimes only a dime. To prove that Drake had made no secret of his approaching marriage to Miss Snyder, he produced a copy of a Plainfield paper bearing the date of July 25th in which his engagement to Miss Snyder was announced.

Drake declared that he only went to see Miss Cassidy once in a while, but when pressed admitted that she used to meet him on the streets nights, and "hang around him" until he saw her home. He declared that he had never written a letter to her, although one was produced in court signed with his name, and which read:

"Lend me $25. I want to use it. Will pay it back in a month. I have to have it this a. m. Will see you Sunday night at the depot. You can give it to my sister."

Charles Haggarty, Drake's only witness, swore that he overheard these words in conversation between Drake and Maggie, who had met on the street: "I don't want to have anything more to do with you."

Here the defense rested. William G. DeMeza represented him.

Mr. DeMeza did all he could for his client, but the evidence against Drake was strong. Justice Mosher decided to hold his decision in the case until Monday, however, and at 10 o'clock announced that he would hold Drake in $200 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury. John Albert, his uncle, went on his bonds.

SOMERSET WILL BE HEARD.

OCEAN COUNTY TAX ASSESSMENT.

Counsel for the Freeholders Will Now Have a Chance to Present Evidence if He Chooses.

(Special to The Daily Press.

Toms River, N. J., August 23.—The State Board of Taxation met here Monday to take testimony in the complaint preferred by the Board of Freeholders of Somerset county that the assessors of Ocean county had undervalued real and personal property in their assessments.

All the assessors of Ocean county were summoned and sworn as to their methods of assessment, but the only breeze raised was when N. B. Robbins, assessor of Lakewood township, was questioned in regard to George J. Gould's assessment of $1,00,000 on real estate and $200,000 on personal property. Major Lentz got the assessor to admit once that he understood Gould to be worth from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 but the assessor qualified the statement immediately by saying it was only a rumor. However, it brought out the fact that Gould belongs to the village fire company, for which he is given an exemption of $500 on his valuation.

The Board adjourned the case to give the counsel for Somerset county an opportunity to present evidence if he chooses.

DID MAN-EATING SHARK BITE CHARLES BOONE?

Peculiar Experience of Plainfield Boy in Swimming.

HIS LEG BADLY LACERATED.

WHAT EVER IT WAS ATTACKED HIM IN TEN FEET OF WATER.

He is a Candidate for the $500 Prize Offered for a Man Bitten by a Shark North of Cape Hatteras—A V-Shaped Wound and Twelve Distinct Incisions Apparently Made by a Large Shark.

Charles E. Boone, son of Dr. W. C. Boone, of 450 West Seventh street, is a theological student in a Maryland Catholic College and at present he is spending a portion of his vacation at the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, at Mount Loretta, Pleasant Plains, Staten Island. He is 22 years old, of athletic build, and a good swimmer.

Directly opposite the main building of the mission on Prince's Bay the surf rolls in on a rather steep beach. Bathers do not have to go far before they are in deep water. Boone and several companions plunged into the water Monday afternoon and swam around about thirty feet from the shore. Suddenly Boone was struck from beneath, and as he described his sensations afterward to the surgeons in the Smith Infirmary at New Brighton, he felt only a slight penetrating pain which at the time he ascribed to an attack of cramps.

He was swimming in about ten feet of water, and when he felt the pain he put one hand on the spot. Something slimy brushed against his arm, and then he felt a slap on his stomach, made apparently by the tail of a fish. He began to feel weak and swam quickly toward shore. He called to George White, one of his fellow-swimmers, that he had been hurt.

White swam to Boone's assistance and found that Boone was bleeding from cuts in the right leg. Dr. Walker Washington, of Totteville, and Dr. W. B. McNichol, of Pleasant Plains, were summoned. They saw that the wounds were of such a nature that Boone's life was in danger. The leg was bandaged and Boone was taken on a rapid transit train to Stapleton, where he was transferred in an ambulance to the Smith Infirmary. Drs. W. C. Waiser and F. P. Budd took charge of the patient. They found that the wound was in the form of the letter V. It was about eight inches long on the under part of the leg and ten inches long on the upper part. The cut on the under part was a clean one and the flesh was torn away. The cut on the upper part of the leg showed plainly the marks of teeth.

Dr. Budd counted twelve distinct incisions which were evidently made by teeth. The places where the teeth are supposed to have penetrated were about one inch and a half deep. It required thirty-two stitches to sew up the cut, and unless blood poisoning sets in the patient has a fair chance of recovery.

It is a peculiarity of sharks, when attacking their victims, to turn on their backs, thus giving a better play for their under teeth. The under teeth of the fish that tackled Boone did the worst execution, as the cut on the back of his leg shows.

Boone's mishap was the talk of Staten Island, especially at the summer resorts, Monday. Many persons were inclined to believe that Boone had been attacked by a dogfish, which is a small shark. Jeff Powers, a South Beach fisherman, declared that no dogfish that ever lived in these waters could spread its mouth far enough to inflict a wound like that of Boone. The dogfish, Powers said, is a coward in the water, but is game and wicked when hauled out.

Years ago Herman Oelrichs offered, through The New York Sun, a reward of $500 to any person who could cite an authentic case of a man being bitten by a shark north of Cape Hatteras. Up to December, 1896, which is the last record The Sun has on the subject, he still held to the belief that man-eating sharks do not come north of Hatteras.

FRIDAY IS HIS LUCKY DAY.

F. H. Palmer Was Married on That Day and Chose It to Start a New Factory.

Friday has no terrors for F. H. Palmer, one of the principal stockholders of the Palmer Manufacturing Company, which will establish a new town to be known as Palmer, just outside the city limits of New Brunswick. Mr Palmer was married Friday, and every event in his life which has been associated with Friday has been successful.

In accordance with the belief that Friday is his lucky day Mr. Palmer had ground broken for the new factory Friday, and later on Friday will be selected for the starting of the plant. It is hoped to have the plant in full operation within three months.

SAFE HOME FROM WAR.

LIEUT. ELY, OF SHAFTER'S ARMY, ARRIVED IN PLAINFIELD MONDAY.

He Was Not Expected But His Welcome Was a Rousing One—Was in Charge of San Juan Hill—Twice Attacked by Fever.

There was rejoicing at the home of Thomas B. Brooks, of Rockview avenue, Monday. The cause of it all was the arrival of a man wearing the natty uniform of the United States regular army and with face bronzed by continued exposure in the tropical sun. Lieut. Frank D. Ely, of the Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A., returned to his wife after being reported missing and passing through the stirring times in the campaign against Santiago de Cuba.

Three years ago Lieutenant Ely wedded Miss Brooks, daughter of T. B. Brooks, of Washington Park. They then went to live at the officers's quarters on Governor's Island until the war came and Lieutenant Ely was among the first to be ordered to the front. His wife then came to this city to remain at her old home in his absence.

During the time he was at the front, Lieutenant Ely was promoted from second lieutenant to first lieutenant. He was with the Thirteenth Regulars and took place in the famous charge up the San Juan Hill. He went all through the campaign against the city of Santiago and fell a victim to the fever. It was before that that he was reported missing, but his family afterwards received word that he was still alive and well.

He suffered from two attacks of the dreaded fever but fought them off and returned to Montauk Point with the rest of the command. On his arrival there he applied for a leave of absence and was granted one for ten days. He left the camp Monday and came right through to Plainfield.

His wife had no idea of his coming so soon. When he walked in Monday afternoon, shortly before 2 o'clock, there was as stirring a welcome as the soldier husband could desire.

When seen by a Press reporter on his way home, the Lieutenant said that he was all here and had passed through the campaign without a scratch. He spoke lightly of the fever that threatened him.

Lieut. Ely looked well and was exceedingly tanned. His uniform looked spick and span as if he was coming from the parade ground rather than a hard and rough campaign. He is a tall man, well proportioned, and his blue uniform becomes him well.

ROAD TO INN LIGHTED.

Owners Place Lamps to Illuminate the Way to the Popular Hostelry.

The road to the Mountain Park Inn from Somerset street is no longer in darkness. Ten oil lanterns with powerful reflectors now make it light enough for anyone to pick their way up or down with ease. The lighting of it marks the end of a fight between the owners of the Mountain Park Inn and the property owners in that section and the township committee.

Every year in the spring, summer and fall, there are many who pass up and down the hill in daylight and dark. The woods that boarder the road on either hand make it dark indeed unless there is a full moon to give its kindly illumination. For three years, efforts have been made to get the township committee to light the road but they have steadily refused.

Now the owners of Mountain Park have tired of waiting for the township committee to act in the matter and have gone ahead. A series of posts have been planted along the drive and large lamps placed on them. Every evening an attendant from the Inn comes down and lights them and keeps them in order during the night.

A PROMISING LAD DEAD.

Luther Compton succumbs to a Sudden Hemorrhage of the Stomach.

Luther Compton, the eighteen-year-old son of Myers Compton, of the borough, died Saturday night after an illness extending over a period of six weeks. Compton was a faithful employe of J. H. Fisher, the druggist, and had been with him for three years The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the Washingtonville chapel. Interment was in Hillside.

Compton was taken ill over a month ago, and since then has had a complication of diseases. Mr. Leggett, who was much interested in the lad, sent a nurse to the house a week ago, and from that time till Saturday night he showed improvement.

Saturday night Compton was taken with a hemorrhage and expired. Compton was a quiet lad and had many friends. He was an attendant at Washingtonville chapel.

CLAMBAKE TO OPEN CAMPAIGN.

County Committee of the Republicans Arrange an Outing.

The County G.O.P. Committee held a special meeting Saturday afternoon to make arrangements for an active opening next month of the fall campaign. It was decided that in view of the success that attended the first annual outing and clambake given by the County Committee last year at Neptune Heights, Avon-by-the-Sea, to hold another there September 13th, to which all the leading Republicans of the county, together with all the party workers, will be invited. This will be really the opening of the Republican campaign in Union and the gathering will give the leaders a chance to exchange views and also to consult the ward and township workers.

LOST THEIR NERVE FOR ONE INNING.

Then the Riverdale Field Club Scored Six Runs.

REST WAS HARD FOUGHT.

THE HOME TEAM DEFEATED THE ARLINGTONS 7 TO 1.

The Nines Were Evenly Matched But For One Inning When the Visitors Were "Hobsonized"—Lots of Talking in the Game — Westervelt Pitched Well—A Fair Crowd Was Present.

"Hobsonized" was the term that Will Smith coined to express the delightful fashion in which the Riverdales handled their rivals in baseball from the Arlington Athletic Association Saturday afternoon. There was one inning of it and the rest of the game was as close as the most ardent crank could have desired. As to that one inning, the advice of Billie Fox, the giant second baseman of the Arlingtons, was good. "Forget it," said he, "and remember the Maine." All of which was quite patriotic considering the naval demonstration that was in progress at New York then. In brief, the Riverdale Field Club defeated the Arlington A. A. by a score of 7 to 1.

It was the second appearance of the Riverdales at the Crescent Oval as a Plainfield team. The naval parade was a big rival and carried away many of their patrons, so too did the excursion to Asbury Park. There was, nevertheless, a fair crowd present.

Now one thing there was that made the game specially pleasing to management and audience. That was the absence of the rooters. Never, since baseball has been seen at the Crescent Oval, has there been heard such weird whoops and sirenic yells that came forth from time to time. The old cranks were out and they made themselves heard. Now there always has been plenty of applause, but not of the good old-fashioned kind that made the days of the old Crescents so memorable.

Two facts were evident at the beginning of the game. They were that the visitors could talk as well as play ball. From the first baseman to the manager and the bat-boy, they all united their voices in a grand chorus for the benefit of the team. If a kick was made, it came so united that it fairly dazed the umpires. And as for rooting, the players kept up a string of running comment that was startlingly funny.

To hear Dobbins, the genial catcher of the Arlingtons, talk from the side lines as coacher, was worth going miles.

"You osn't throw the ball straight," he emphatically told Harry Westervelt. "You! you! I mean you! he shouted as he jabbed his finger in the direction of the Riverdale twirler and jumped into the air in his excitement.

As to the game itself, it was good, barring perhaps that one inning, and the teams seemed well matched. In the first inning the visitors filled two of the bases and sent a man home only to have him put out at the plate. Another man came in on a grounder which made the third out and so didn't count.

After that it was nip and tuck until the fifth inning. The Fox opened the inning for Arlington by a grounder to "Reiny" who threw him out at first. A clean hit by Clough landed him at first. Hollywood came up. A wild pitch sent Clough to third. Then Hollywood sent a fly to Fred Smith. Dillon came up and three strikes were called on him. Hays dropped the last one. He had it in a moment, however, and Clough started for home. Hays looked at clough and made a moment to throw to third, then he drove it to first to catch Dillon. He delayed too long, however. Wood fumbled the throw and both runners were safe, Clough scoring. A hit by Higgins was fielded in time to catch Dillon at the home plate.

A hit by Reinacker, a stolen base and then a sacrifice by Easton, and singles by Fred Smith and Hays brought in the first run for the Riverdales, Reinacker scoring. In the sixth inning, the Riverdale boys started in for blood. It was then when they "Hobsonized" the Arlingtons.

Westervelt opened with a hit, to be forced out on Hardy's infield drive. Romig batted safe and sent Hardy to third and stole second himself. Fox fooled Wood's grcunder and Hardy scored. A double by Reinacker scored another run. Easton was hit by the ball and filled the bases. Then Fox juggled Fred Smith's hard drive and Wood scored the third run. A long hit into right field by Hays sent in two runs while Smith slipped round to third and scored on a passed ball. Will Smith and Westervelt ended the inning. Six runs were the result.

Then the visitors steadied up and played a hard game for the rest of the time. Neither side scored after that, although both sides tried hard.

The Riverdales played an almost errorless game. Easton ran clear over the bank and became so tied up in the high weeds that he fumbled a long fly. Wood dropped Hays' slow throw to first in the fifth inning, but it is doubtful if the ball was there in time anyhow.

Harry Westervelt again pitched a remarkable game. At the last, when the Arlingtons did their best to rattle him with their continual chaffing, he did magnificent work, striking out a number and holding the visitors right down A word should be said for the fine throwing of Hays to second which resulted in catching several attempts to steal.

The individual scores were as follows:

HAS SIX YEARS OF WORK.

MISSIONARY WHO WILL GO TO CHINA.

Miss Glenk Has Mastered the Chinese Language and Will Go to the Flowery Kingdom Next Month.

Miss E. Margaret Glenk, of Long Island City, N. Y., formerly a well-known church-worker, left Saturday for High Bridge. Miss Glenk has been studying for the past three years to be a missionary in China, and has particularly well-fitted herself for the work. She has learned the Chinese language and has an excellent acquaintance with the history, manners and customs of the people of the Celestial Kingdom.

Miss Glenk leaves next month for China, where her duties as a missionary will occupy her there for six years before any leave of absence. During her short stay in Plainfield, Miss Glenk looked up a number of her old friends and bid them farewell before starting on the long journey. She has many of them here, all of whom wished her a pleasant time and a successful trip across the Pacific.

Basking Ridge Won.

The game between the Stirling and the Basking Ridge teams in the race for the pennant was played at Stirling Saturday afternoon and proved to be a rattling good game. Richard Rogers was in the box for the Basking Ridge aggregation and kept the Stirling batters guessing, allowing them only six hits, two of them being scratch hits. The features of the game were the two-base hit of Carman Sutphen, the home run of Dick Rogers, and the good fielding of Walsh. The score by innings was as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Basking Ridge	0	0	0	0	8	0	2	0	0	—10
Stirling	3	0	0	0	2	1	0	0	1	— 6

The standing of the league is as follows:

	Played.	Won.	Lost.
Berkley Heights	16	10	6
Stirling	17	10	7
Basking Ridge	16	7	9
New Providence	16	5	11

A Disorderly Couple.

Mrs. Hayes and Fred Downs were arraigned before City Judge DeMeza last Monday on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. The complaint was made by Patrolman Jerry Cash, who made the arrest. He claimed that they came down Park avenue acting in a very improper manner. He claimed that they abused him with foul language. Both pleaded not guilty. Mrs. Hayes accused Cash of throwing her into the cell like a dog.

2,000 PEOPLE HEARD THE "SWAMP ANGEL."

A Great Crowd at the Camp Meeting Sunday.

DR. WARNER WAS CAUSTIC.

NOVEL VIEW OF RELATIONS OF WHITE AND COLORED PEOPLE.

Dr. Warner, Who Once Ran For Governor of Alabama, Said That the White People Had Made the Colored People What They Are and if They Didn't Like It They'd Better Try Again.

Sunday was a great day at the camp meeting grounds The crowd was simply enormous and there were present several prominent speakers who proved a great attraction. It was by far the most successful day of the camp meeting. The attendance for the day numbered up into thousands and that of the evening must have been close to two thousand people.

The chief attraction of the day was the "Swamp Angel," Rev. Dr. Warner, secretary of the Church Extension Society. Dr. Warner was Republican candidate for governor in Alabama at the last election. Of all the speakers who have addressed the services in the grove this year, there was none more original or entertaining than Dr. Warner. He was not ashamed of his race; on the contrary, he was proud of it. He took a decidedly novel view of the relations of the white and colored people. In his address of the afternoon, he told the white folk that they had made the negroes what they were, and if they didn't like it they had better try again. Meanwhile they were responsible, having Christianized the negroes and taken away their little wooden gods of Africa, to see that the negroes had a place to worship. His appeal was answered by a large collection.

One of the pleasing features of the services Sunday was the singing of Martin's Jubilee Singers, a double quartette arranged by the Martin brothers. The colored people knew many of the good old jubilee songs which they gave in delightful fashion. "Roll, Jordan, Roll," was a special favorite with the crowd and half the audience unconsciously joined the singers in swaying their bodies in time with the music.

It has been decided to continue the camp meeting another week owing to the rainy weather of the last week, which almost prevented any services being held. Next Sunday night the camp meeting will be closed after the fashion of those held in the south, when the worshippers all rise up and march around the camp singing.

A THREE WEEKS' CRUISE.

A Party of Plainfield Boys to Turn Jolly Jack Tars.

For the next three weeks Barnegat Bay will be the scene of the exertions of a party of young men from this city who will cruise in that vicinity. Monday at an early hour, Walter B. Bittenbouse, of East Sixth street; George A. Horne, of Willow avenue, and James A. Stafford, of Grandview avenue, left for Bay Head, N. J., where they will start in the yacht "Teal," for a three weeks' sail down Barnegat Bay and through the neighboring inlets.

The yacht is completely equipped for cruising and has a large cabin. The young men took with them a quantity of equipment, fishing tackle and provisions. They will be their own cooks and navigate their yacht without any help. They will make Beach Haven their headquarters and will there receive their mail.

The yacht is one of the speediest in the bay, winning in her class at the regatta last year. She is almost new. Besides the American flag which will float constantly from the mast head, the young men took along a number of pennants, the gifts of their fair friends, each of which bears suitable initials on it.

Henry B. Drake, of Duer street, and Charles B. Morse, of Franklin place, will join the cruising party at a later date and remain with them until the return, three weeks from now.

Small Chimney Fire.

A small chimney fire broke out Saturday afternoon last at 4:15 o'clock at the home of Fred Dunn, of Sandford avenue. Miss Dunn, the daughter, was the only member of the family home and she sent word to fire headquarters. A hose carriage was sent to Mr. Dunn's house and in quick order the fire was put out. The damage was trivial.

On Board the Oregon.

Theodore Roder, of this city, was among those who went to New York Sunday to see the battleships. He was aboard the Oregon, and was an eye-witness to the scene of where women extracted bristles from the pig "Blanco," who was taken from the Spanish ship Vizcaya, and kept them as souvenirs.

Arthur Heath, of Central avenue, spent Sunday at Asbury Park.

"MONEY OR YOUR LIFE"

WORDS THAT A BICYCLE RIDER HEARD ON A LONELY ROAD.

James Miner Held Up By a Gruff Acting Man on the County Road—He Used His Fists With Good Effect.

James Miner, a stout colored man living on West Fourth street, was held up Saturday night on South avenue, between Fanwood and Netherwood, and had he not used his hard fists to good advantage might have suffered badly at the hands of the highwayman.

Miner is a wheelman and gives lessons in riding and managing a bicycle.

Saturday night he rode to Fanwood about 9 o'clock, and gave a lesson there. He left for home about 11:30 o'clock. He was riding one wheel and "leading" the other, and was going at a good clip. When near Jack Benner's roadhouse he was startled and almost frightened out of his wits to see a man step out from behind a telegraph pole, seize hold of his wheel, and at the same time call out in a hoarse voice, "Money or your life."

Miner says that he slid off his wheel as soon he could and with the words, "All right," struck the would-be highwayman a blow which felled him to the road bed. Miner then gave him a parting kick or two, and mounting his bicycle road on as fast as he could, fearing that the man might have some pals in the bushes who would come to his rescue.

Miner says that the fellow looked like a tramp, was tall and thin, and had a smooth face. His clothes were shabby. Miner had about $2 00 in money about him, which he saved by his quick work with his fists.

THE "DON'T CARE" PEOPLE.

Robert E. Speer Devotes a Smart Talk on a Missionary Subject.

Robert E. Speer, of Elizabeth, a well-known and enthusiastic Christian worker and speaker, addressed the men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. As additional features there was singing by a choir of mixed voices, and a vocal solo by Councilman Wm. N. Bunyon. Mr. Speer spoke of the irresponsibible view taken of spiritual things by the world, and of several needs of the world. He said that so many people had a feeling of "don't care," and "Its none of my business."

"Not long ago," the speaker said, "I attended a missionary meeting in this State, and at that meeting one of the richest men in the country was present. During the meeting the leader of the meeting exhibited some views of the suffering masses in the foreign fields. Most everyone who looked upon the picture expressed a feeling of sympathy, but when the richest one of them looked at the photos I waited to hear what he would have to say, and was pained to hear him remark 'Ain't them funny looking folks?' He didn't care and was not interested. The view of the world that Jesus took is good enough for men, and we can all afford to take that view."

A JEWISH WEDDING.

Barant Block Takes a Hoboken Girl for His Helpmeet.

Barant Block, manager for M. Abrams, a West Front street shoe dealer, and Miss Annie Goldberg, of Hoboken, were married Sunday at 9 o'clock in the Jewish Synagogue on West Front street. Rabbi Fine performed the ceremony, which was followed by a generous collation and a dance which lasted until the early morning hours.

The groom is well-liked among the Jewish community in this city and the wedding was a large one. The bride was dressed in white silk and carried white roses. She wore a veil. Mr. and Mrs. A. Becker, from Hoboken, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Block, of New York, stood up with the couple.

The couple now are living at 233 East Fourth street, where they will reside for the present.

COURTESY AND KINDNESS IN HEROES

Grneeful and Deserved Tribute From the Pulpit for the Warriors.

Rev. Charles Dunn, of Freeport, Ill., who preached Sunday at the First Baptist church, gave excellent sermons, morning and evening. His morning sermon, "Unity in Diversity and Strength Adorned With Beauty," was full of interest and deep thought. His reference to the conduct of our late heroes, who had added to their strength and power the sweet graces of courtesy and kindness was most opportune and pleasing. His exhortation to build character on the strength of the Lord Jesus, with the graces of Christian character for its adornment was most impressive.

For the Clarks.

A. E. Bushnell, of the Clifton building, Park avenue, has sent a bundle to The Press office containing quilts, sheets and some linen clothes for the use of Jim Clark and his wife.

Inspected Gun Carriages.

Captain L. L. Bruff, of the Army Building, New York, was in the city Saturday and inspected another completed gun-carriage at the Pond Tool Works.

CONVENTION DATE NOT YET SETTLED.

Democratic State Committee Meet at Atlantic City.

LEADERS ARE HOPEFUL.

DALY AND SEYMOUR THE ONLY ONES WITH ACTIVE BOOMS.

Sub-Committee Will Issue the Call for the Convention—Between Now and Then the Idea of How the State Platform Should be Framed Will Be Secured —Settling the Basis of Representation.

Twenty-one members of the State Democratic Committee met in Atlantic City, Friday and decided, after arranging for the representation to the State convention, to leave the naming of a date for the convention to a committee to be selected by Colonel E. L. Price, chairman of the State committee.

This action was taken after a long informal discussion by members of the State committee, who expressed the opinion that it might under existing conditions be wise to have the convention held at as late a date as could be agreed upon.

The most urgent reason advanced in favor of the plan was that few committee meetings had been held and, consequently, the representatives from the various sections of the State had little or no knowledge as to the views of their colleagues as to what the issues of the campaign ought to be or who would prove the most available candidate for Governor.

By its terms the committee was to consist of six members appointed by the chairman, including himself, and the following were named: Senator Daly, of Hudson; David S. Crater, of Monmouth; James S. Lanning, of Mercer; William J. Keys, of Somerset, and William B. Pugh, of Bergen.

This committee will meet at an early date, issue the call for the convention and between now and then hold several meetings and conferences with Democrats in different sections of the State for the purpose of obtaining ideas as to how the State platform should be framed. It will then submit the same to the committee on resolutions, to be appointed by the convention.

A remarkable incident connected with the meeting of the committee was the large attendance, notwithstanding the fact that nearly all the members present were protesting against having been called such a distance to simply fix the representation of delegates to which the State convention at one delegate for each 200 Democratic voters and fraction in excess of 100 at the last election, and then delegate the fixing of a date for the convention to a committee. The representation agreed upon provides that each district shall have at least one delegate, and that means that the total number of delegates will be about 1,050.

Oliver Kelley, while expressing the opinion as a loyal son of Middlesex that Senator VanCleef might prove a formidable candidate, said that in his opinion the candidate would be either Mayor Seymour, of Essex, or Senator Daly, of Hudson.

James M. Lanning, of Mercer, said it was probable, notwithstanding the reputed candidacy of General Donnelly, that Mayor Seymour would have the Mercer delegation, and William J. Keys had the same to say of Bergen.

In fact, every member of the committee present appeared satisfied that the sentiment was in favor of Daly or Seymour, and the Hudson Senator appeared to be so impressed with what he had learned that while insisting that he is and will continue to be a candidate until a decision has been arrived at by the convention, he says it looks like Seymour.

"If it should be he or any other equally as good a Democrat," said the Senator, "I will take off my coat and work just as hard for his election as I would for my own."

Most of the business of the committee was transacted in an informal way, and before the committee was called to order, and apart from what appears above, it consisted largely of a discussion of the proable features of the party platform.

Views of the Naval Parade.

There was a host of photographers, both professional and amateur, on the Hudson river and in New York bay Saturday. Of all the sets of photographs there obtained, it would be difficult to obtain a nicer one that the views taken by Eugene Richard. He was stationed on the pilot house of a large steamer where he had an uninterrupted view of all the warships and obtained fine photographs of them all.

Contracts for New Residences.

The new house to be erected on the corner of Stelle avenue and Field avenue by Mrs. Ladd is to be started at once. A. L. C. Marsh is the architect. Contracts have been signed by John Abbott for the carpenter work, and with Seaman Williams & Co., for the mason work.

TROUBLE IN A CHURCH

FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST MAY LOSE ITS EDIFICE.

Members Disagreed With the Pastor and Withdrew—Interest on the Mortgage Due—The Members Talk Openly.

For some time past the First Church of Christ, otherwise known as the Christian church, located on Grove street, has not been in a flourishing condition. It is no secret, and the members are the ones who talk most freely about the church troubles which seem to grow more every day. The membership has materially decreased, and it looks as though the building might be closed up by the executors of the Stewart estate, who hold a mortgage of $3,100 on the property.

The serious troubles of the church began soon after the present pastor, Rev. H. W. McKane, took charge.

The first person of importance to leave the flock was Rev. B. W. Hand, a layman. Mr. Hand's reason for withdrawing was that he could not agree with Pastor McKane's method of running the church.

The membership was so reduced that the pastor called a meeting to inquire into the troubles that threatened the destruction of the church. Mr. Hand plainly told Mr. McKane that he did not belive in his methods and he would not continue to labor in the church.

Pastor McKane was not moved, however. He stood firm, and some of the members withdrew. Thus taking their support away from the church, the pastor has felt the loss very much. He gets about $4 a week, it is said. Frequently he gets up socials, entertainments, etc., for benefit, of the church but generally the attendance is small.

Another thing which is a great drawback to the church is a debt of $2,100. The original amount was $2,000, but $100 has been added for interest.

B. W. Hand and Fred Canfield are executors of the Stewart estate, that holds the mortgage on the church property, and they say that a settlement will have to be made very soon to satisfy the heirs. Pastor McKane is trying to have the Church Extension Society loan the members the required amount to satisfy the estate and then give the members another chance to pay off the debt.

RUN DOWN BY A WHEELMAN

I. W. Stout the Victim—Was Walking Along a Side Path Between Lincoln and Bound Brook.

At or near Lincoln, I. W. Stout, the well-known contractor of Lincoln, was run down by a reckless bicycle rider Saturday night and received injuries that will force him to take a vacation for a few days.

Mr. Stout was walking along the side path between Lincoln and Bound Brook. It was about 8:15 o'clock when he reached the new road through East Bound Brook, where it was very dark. Mr. Stout kept on the side path on the right of the road.

Suddenly he was struck from behind by what he know was a bicycle. He remembers no more until he came to his senses, bleeding from a dozen wounds on his head and face. He looked for the wheelmen, but the latter had kept on without stopping to see whether he had disabled Mr. Stout or not.

Mr. Stout walked to Bound Brook where he had his wounds dressed and later returned to his home. Judging from the number and nature of the bruises, the bicycle rider must have been travelling at a pretty fast pace.

HIS VISIT IS NOT WANTED.

ALLENTOWN'S BAD MAN IN THE TOILS.

A Convicted Burglar Found Wandering About in a Suspicious Manner by Patrolman Higgins.

William Cole, ex-convict, and altogether one of Allentown's most disreputable citizens, arrived in Plainfield Sunday on a freight train. Next afternoon he departed on a passenger train at the expense of the city. He was also furnished with a chaperone to escort him to the limits of the county jail at Elizabeth where he will sojourn for a month.

Cole and his old partner, George Leslie, arrived in the eastern end of Plainfield. Cole says that they laid down under a tree and went to sleep. When they awoke, Cole says that he started off alone. He could not explain why he did it; guessed he must have been asleep.

The police have a theory of their own. Patrolman Higgins found Cole wandering about the city early that morning and locked him up. They believe that the two pals separated to look for a good "crib" to "crack." They are now watching for Leslie.

Says He Acted in Self Defense.

Harry Eaton, of Grant avenue, was arraigned last Monday on the charge of quarrelling and fighting on Grant avenue. He told a straight-forward story about the matter and claimed that he had merely acted in self-defence. His case was laid over until the others could be arraigned.

L. A. W. SUSPENDS LOCAL WHEELMEN.

G. H. Kenyon Permanently Ruled Off L. A. W. Tracks.

A TRACK BLACKLISTED.

ALL CAUSED BY UNSANCTIONED RACE MEET THERE.

Kenyon Did Not Care to Pay $5 for Sanction and so Chairman Mott of the Racing Board Acts—Thirteen Local Riders, Including Sims and Richter, Suspended for a Month.

In the many years that bicycle racing has flourished in Plainfield, it has never occurred until now that the officials of the League of American Wheelmen, who are considered the guardians of amateur racing in this country, have been called upon to discipline any of the local race meet promoters for violation of the racing rules of the L. A. W. Now, George H. Kenyon, a bicycle dealer of this city, has been permanently ruled off any L. A. W. track in every capacity, a local track has been blacklisted, and thirteen local riders have been suspended for a month.

The cause of all the trouble was a meet given on Maltby's track several weeks ago by Mr. Kenyon. It was only for local riders and was rather an informal affair throughout. It was Mr. Kenyon's first attempt at race-promoting, and he had never been brought into connection with the L. A. W. before. Consequently, he was not acquainted with the methods. When Local Consul T. A. Cumming learned of the proposed meet, he notified Mr. Kenyon that he should secure a sanction.

There was a misunderstanding regarding the cost of a sanction, Mr. Kenyon getting the idea that it could be obtained merely on application. He applied and was instructed to send the fee of $5, on the receipt of which his sanction would be granted. Deeming L. A. W. consent too expensive for such a little affair, Mr. Kenyon went ahead despite the protests of the Local Consul.

In duty bound, the consul notified the chairman of the Racing Board of the race, but made a plea for leniency for the men, as most of them did not understand the situation. Since then the matter has rested in the hands of Chairman Albert Mott, of the Racing Board. He first planned to make the suspension for the men six months, but the request of the local consul, accompanied by his explanation of the circumstances, reduced it to one month's duration.

G. H. Kenyon, Plainfield, N. J., is permanently ruled off all L. A. W. tracks in every capacity for promoting unsanctioned races, after March 1st, 1898.

The Maltby track, Plainfield, N. J., is placed upon the list of those to which sanction will be refused, because of an unsanctioned meet held upon it.

The following racing men are suspended to Sept. 20th, 1898 for competing in the above unsanctioned meet:

Harry Condit, Ed. Duck, Joe Harkins, Arthur Chapman, Paul Otto, Charles Westerfield, Eugene Richter, Joe Burke, Peter Sims, M. Burke, M. Owens, J. Sorrenson, William Dodd. Albert Mott,

AN UNEXPECTED MARRIAGE

JAMES H. CRANE WEDS MISS GRANT.

Went to Westfield Sunday Afternoon in a Quiet Way Where the Nuptial Knot Was Tied.

Two of Plainfield's young people, Miss May Flora Grant, of LaGrande avenue, and James Henry Crane, of Carlton avenue, were quietly married Sunday afternoon at Westfield, by Rev. Mr. Ketcham, of the Congregational church. The young couple were unattended.

Miss Grant for some time was soprano soloist in the First Baptst church choir. The groom is the second son of Rev. Arthur Crane, the evangelist. The groom is employed in the New York office of the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Crane has been boarding at McVey's Hotel for about a month past, and both he and Mrs. Crane will live there for the present.

A reporter called at the bride's former home next morning, but Mrs. Grant refused to talk about the marriage. A member of the family was seen, but would disclose no information about the marriage. Mrs. Crane, the groom's mother, admitted that the couple had been married, but referred the reporter to the young husband who had gone to New York on an early train. The bride was out all morning, and when finally seen at dinner this noon, in the hotel, seemed resolved also to keep secret all the facts about the marriage, and said Mr. Crane would see the reporters tonight.

Operation on a Soldier.

Dr. Zeglio, of Somerset street, has performed an operation on Frank Vosseller, of this city, to remove a trouble attendant upon the growth of a fistula, which was removed while the patient was in the regular army in the south.

CITY AND COUNTY TROLLEY

The Common Council Think They Have The Best of The Contention.

HAVE POWER TO REFUSE THE RIGHT OF WAY.

Councilmen Say That The Squire Law Protects the Interests of the City. Against County Aggression—Freeholders Position May Mean a Long-Drawn-Out Fight.

In this, the dull season of the year, Plainfield is suddenly confronted with a situation that promises to be of great interest to every citizen of Plainfield. A conflict seems imminent between the Common Council of the city and the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county. The Board claims certain streets in Plainfield as part of the county road system and holds that the Common Council has no right to give any trolley company permission to lay tracks on those thoroughfares. The Council, in turn, holds the balance of power in regard to the proposed county trolley scheme for, according to law, the permission of the governing Council must first be obtained. Objection by the Freeholders may result in retaliation by the Common Council and a dead-lock may be the ultimate finish.

Now everybody who is at all posted on the present status of trolley affairs in this section knows that the Bergen county trolley scheme are not exactly hand and glove with the capitalists who comprise the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company and the Plainfield Street Railway Company. In fact there has been constant skirmishing by both sides who were always on the lookout to slap their opponents by some well-timed move. Much of the opposition to the county boulevard and trolley line, it is said, came from these trolley corporations and their friends along the line. While, on the face of it, that has nothing to do with the present state of affairs, yet it virtually becomes a contest between the county trolley line and the private corporation's proposed route.

While the present situation burst so unexpectedly in the faces of the Councilmen, the circumstances that led up to it are, many of them, of long standing. At a recent meeting of the Legislature, it will be remembered, the State legislators gave to the chosen freeholders of the different counties the power to designate certain roads in their counties as county roads, giving them the same power over them as the county roads regularly constructed by the county authorities.

A short time ago, when the county boulevard and trolley line was being agitated, an act was introduced and finally passed, giving the chosen freeholder power to widen, change the course and grade of all county roads and also to grant to some corporation, for such compensation as they might see fit, the franchise for the trolley line.

This franchise, as has already been told in this paper, was sold to John Kean for $250,000 by the Board of Freeholders at a meeting August 16th.

Now part of the course of this county trolley was through the city of Plainfield, entering on North avenue and following that thoroughfare through to Richmond street and thence to East Third street, ending at the North avenue station. At a meeting of the Board, these portions of the streets named were designated as county roads according to the county road act already mentioned. This, in fact, was done several months ago.

Now there never was much publicity about it and the city went on caring for those so-called "county roads," the county authorities making no effort to take charge of them. Plainfield people, with a few exceptions, were ignorant of any change.

It is over a year since the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company tried to get a line through from Scotch Plains to Plainfield. They accomplished their part of it, getting the necessary permission as far as the city line. Since then the Plainfield Street Railway Company has been endeavoring to connect its present line with the Scotch Plains branch.

After various attempts at different routes, the Company and the Council, together with a sufficient number of the property owners, seemed to favor a line starting from the city line on East Second street and coming west to Richmond street and thence to East Fifth street, connecting with the present line of the Street Railway Company. The ordinance was introduced and came up for second reading at the meeting of the Common Council Tuesday August 16th.

There are a large majority of the citizens of Plainfield who favor the idea of the county trolley. That is, they like the general scheme. Nobody expected, however, to see any trouble between the Common Council and the Board of Freeholders.

The communication from the Board of Freeholders, made through their attorney, former Assemblyman W. R. Codington, Tuesday evening, was brief and rather suggestive. To the surprised Councilmen it sounded ominous. It stated that Richmond street, between North avenue and East Third street, is a county road, having been designated so by the Board according to the county road act. It also stated that the Board would oppose and fight any effort to place a trolley on that part of the street without first obtaining the consent of the Board.

Now the communication did not say whether that suggested permission would be granted. Most of the Councilmen are inclined to think that it meant that it would not, else why the notice. One of them placed the burden of the note as saying to the Council "That's our road, keep off."

It is needless to say that there was a decided interest shown in the matter by the Councilmen. Councilman Barrows, chairman of the street committee, who has thus been personally identified with the negotiations with the trolley company, feels very strongly on the subject. He does not think that the county officials have the constitutional right to thus dictate to the city authorities just what they may and may not do on certain of the city's streets.

The only formal vote on the subject, showing the opinion of the Councilmen, was that on the resolution offered by Mr. Hetfield that it was the sense of the Council that Messrs. Mier and Hubbard, the local members of the Board of Freeholders, do not concur with the other members of the Board in opposing the granting of the trolley franchise on Richmond street as proposed by the Council. That resolution was unanimously passed, and showed very plainly just how the members of the Council stood.

Now, while there has been no action on the subject, there seemed to be an undercurrent of opinion among the Councilmen that the city should not give up what they consider one of her rights, the right to say whether or not a trolley company shall lay tracks in her streets, without a fight.

According to the agreement with the Plainfield Street Railway, that corporation agrees to fight any lawsuit that may be the result of the laying of its tracks. In that case, the corporation and the city would range side by side in the fight with the county governing body.

If the city goes ahead and grants the franchise, then legal complications are certain. Under such circumstances, the city will appeal to the Supreme Court claiming that the law is unconstitutional and grants the county board excessive powers in city affairs that they are not entitled to. From the Supreme Court, it would probably be appealed to the Court of Errors and Appeals where the question of the constitutionality of the act would be finally decided.

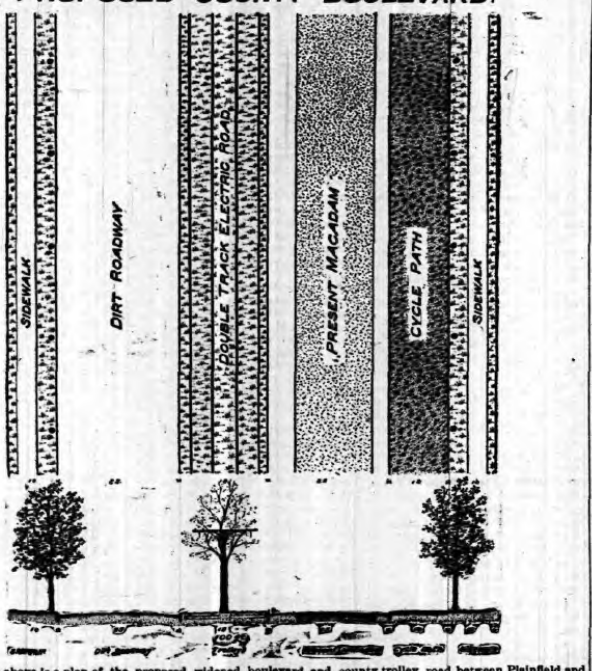
The only inference to be drawn from the action of the Board of Chosen Freeholders is that they wish to keep that portion of Richmond street in question for the use of the county trolley line. But before they can put that line through they will meet an unexpected barrier.

According to the county boulevard and trolley act, fathered by Frank Bergen, it is necessary to obtain the assent by ordinance of the Council or governing body in every municipality through which the line passes. Under ordinary circumstances, the Plainfield Council would undoubtedly pass such an ordinance, but at present, such permission is likely to be refused. And it will not be a long time, possibly a question of a few weeks, before the Board will have to ask the Plainfield Council for that permission. A refusal would mean a deadlock and unless some compromise was made, a lengthy legal controversy would follow.

To a Press reporter yesterday afternoon a prominent Councilman stated that he had no doubt but that if the Board of Freeholders would withdraw their objection against the granting of the franchise by the Council, there would be no difficulty in having the Council agree to allow the county trolley system to go through the same thoroughfare over the route intended by the originators.

—Mr. Hansen, formerly a hackman at the North Avenue station, has secured a position as motorman on the trolley cars.

PROPOSED COUNTY BOULEVARD.



The above is a plan of the proposed widened boulevard and county trolley road between Plainfield and Elizabeth, the consummation of which has caused a clash between the Board of Freeholders of Union county and the Common Council of Plainfield. The Board of Freeholders have accepted an offer of $200,000 for the right to operate the trolley road along the proposed boulevard.

J. OAKLEY NODYNE DEAD

ONE OF THE OLD-TIMERS WHO CONNECTED PAST WITH PRESENT.

Died in Jersey City Tuesday Night—At One Time He Was a Prominent Lawyer, and a Friend of Horace Greeley

Death has stepped in again and severed a human link that connected the early days of Plainfield, when the place was but a country village, and the present bustling city. It is in the passing away of J. Oakley Nodyne, one of the old-timers.

In Greenwood cemetery Aug. 18 the body of Mr. Nodyne, who died in his home in Jersey City Tuesday August 18th, was interred. He was born in New York in 1816, and once was prominent in Brooklyn and New York. He lost a fortune through speculation. He was an alumnus of Union College and a member of the bars of New York and New Jersey. When in good health he was an active Mason.

In early life Mr. Nodyne lived in Plainfield for many years. In the fifties he took an active part in politics as a Republican. He was Librarian and Registrar of the New York Free College shortly before the war. Horace Greeley charged him in the Tribune with promoting a movement to make General Spinola, a Democrat, Registrar of Deeds.

Mr. Nodyne and Mr. Greeley afterward became good friends. In 1861 Mr. Nodyne was elected Alderman of the Tenth ward of Brooklyn. It was said he was the first Republican Alderman elected below the Harlem Bridge. Later he served as Street Commissioner in Brooklyn. He twice declined a nomination for the Assembly. He was the friend of A. T. Stewart, Chester A. Arthur and Governors Seward and Hoffman.

Justice Nodyne was a resident of Plainfield for about fifteen years, during which time he occupied himself chiefly with the justice of the peace business. He was at one time overseer of the poor in this city and filled the position with credit. As a member of Trinity Reformed church, he was a faithful attendant at the services when able. The funeral services were held Thursday from the residence of his son, William H. S. Nodyne, 257 Warren street, Jersey City, at which place he died. Mr. Nodyne had not lived in Plainfield for some time past, as it was more convenient for him to reside with his son in Jersey City.

Cut on Barbed Wire Fence.

A horse belonging to Ellis Campbell, of Avon Park, became frightened at the lightning Thursday and galloped around the field. The horse attempted to jump the fence which was made of barbed wire and caught his hind leg in the wire. The leg was badly cut.

A Training Stable.

Daniel W. Mundy has opened a training and boarding stable at the stock farm of Michael Quinn, of Avon Park. Mr. Mundy has the best of references and is qualified in every way to look after horses under all circumstances.

THREE PAST FOUR SCORE

A TRIO OF AGED PEOPLE WHOSE AGES AGGREGATE 249 YEARS.

Met at the Eighty-third Birthday Celebration of William B. Stewart at South Plainfield—Host was Hale and Hearty

To have lived four score and three and still be comparatively hale and hearty is the particular good fortune of William B. Stewart, who celebrated his eighty-third birthday August 17th. The auspicious event was attended by about a dozen of Mr. Stewart's friends and relatives. Together with two of his old comrades, a combined age of 243 years was shown—the other long-lived people being Peter P. Dumont and P. VanArsdale, of Plainfield. There is only ten months difference between the age of each of the three men. The youngest guest of the celebration was Mr Stewart's four-year-old grandson.

The day was spent in social intercourse and the serving of refreshments. During the day Mr. VanArsdale read the following acrostic which he had composed in honor of the occasion:

We come today to see your smiling face,
In this old home, your presence doth it grace.
Let us enjoy the pleasure it doth give,
Live for each other's welfare while we live.
Increasing years doth lessen our old friends,
And yet, our Lord in His rich mercy sends
Such of His love, on which our life depends.

Between us "Mizpah" is our word today.

Surprised though you may be, we've all to say
'Tis three and eight, years since you were born.
Each year developed strength, like ripening corn.

We gladly honor and assure you, too,
A wish that days like this we may renew.
Rewarding blessings waits beyond this life.
Together may we meet above earth's strife.

DOG DIED HARD.

It Took Eleven Shots to End Career of Mad Canine.

A strange and suspicious looking canine found his way into Elmwood place late Thursday afternoon and the neighbors were inclined to believe that he was mad. He acted very queerly and had several fits. Word was sent to Patrolman Mattox and he hastened to the scene of the trouble. By this time the dog had gained entrance to Julius Williams' yard, and was there when the officer arrived. It required eleven shots from two revolvers to kill the dog. After nine shots were fired the officer thought the canine was dead and was just going away, when he happened to look around. It was well that he did, for the dog was found walking about the yard, more shots put the animal out of misery, and the remains have not yet been taken away.

A Fractious Horse.

Friday afternoon on West Front street two women had an exciting experience with an unmanageable horse. The horse backed the wagon up on the sidewalk in front of the Schepflin building, but the one woman jumped from the carriage just in time to catch the horse by the head and hold him down. Assistance was given by T. J. Carey and Mr. VanFleet, merchants on the street. The names of the women were not learned.

CLARKS PROVIDED FOR OLD COUPLE'S IMMEDIATE NEEDS HAVE BEEN SATISFIED.

Plenty to Eat and More Comforts for Their Home—The $5 Cash Contribution Will be Used Later on for Needs.

Mrs. Wallace Vail paid her second visit to the home of the Clarks Thursday and found it a little more cheerful than it was, thanks to the interest which the description of the old couple's condition in The Daily Press brought about. Mrs. Vail says that she thinks they were on the brink on starvation, but now they are well supplied with groceries for the present.

The $5 in cash which was contributed by G. W. Lowerre, of Grandview avenue, and which The Daily Press put in charge of Mrs. Vail, the latter has decided to hold till a little later on when the old couple will need some winter clothing and other necessities. Their judgment in the matter of finances is rather poor, and it is feared that if given to them now it will not be used to as good purposes as later on. For the present their needs and comforts have been provided for. Mrs. Vail has received the following contributions for the family: Mrs. Dr. Adams, clothing; Mrs. James Manning, clothing; William H. Shotwell, bag of flour; William Schwarts, three pair of hose; V. L. Frazee, tea, soap, sweet potatoes; Mrs. Marcley, bread; Mrs. McVey, mattress, two comforters; Mr. Beerbower, Sr., suit of thick clothes, with other useful articles.

Henry Rogers will see to it that the contributions are transported to the home of the Clarks.

A DOUBLE WEDDING.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Marries Sisters to Men of Their Choice.

A very unusual event took place Thursday afternoon at the rectory of the Church of the Holy Cross, when a double wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of the church.

The contracting couples were Edward Drake and Miss Anna Belle Snyder; Frederick Floyd Diem and Miss Julia Louise Snyder, the brides being sisters. The ceremony was performed in a quiet manner at 3:30 o'clock, and the parties married were unattended, and after the ceremony they returned to their homes where they will reside in the future.

Looking for a Farm.

The Board of Managers for the State Village for Epileptics, recently appointed by the Governor has organized and elected the following officers: President, Rev. Dr. James M. Buckley, of Morristown; second, Prof. S. Olin Garrison, of Vineland; treasurer, Dr. Thomas J. Smith, of Bridgeton. The managers are now looking for a farm of three hundred acres, for a village which will shelter the State's two thousand epileptics.

The Inter-State Fair.

The Inter-State Fair at Trenton will open September 26th and continue five days. The bicycle races are scheduled for the opening day, and more than $2,000 will be divided among the winners.

DUGWAY ROAD IMPROVED

A DETERMINED ATTEMPT TO PUT IT IN CONDITION.

North Plainfield Township Committee Has Just Had It Turnpiked and Gutters Paved—Was Washed Away by Storm.

The country roads of Jersey, as well as other States, have been poor enough to satisfy the most exacting. The system of macadamized roads that is gradually stretching all through this part of the State is changing things so that progression over those roads is fast becoming a pleasure. In the hilly sections, however, the efforts to repair the roads and place them in good condition are frequently met with serious obstacles. Such has been the history of the efforts of the North Plainfield Township Committee to put the Dugway road in condition.

Every time there happens to be a heavy rain, the Dugway road is immediately converted into a mountain torrent and drains the surrounding mountainside, carrying the water down the steep hill into the brook in Washington Valley.

Now, several months ago, an effort was made to have the Dugway road macadamized. So a top-dressing of crushed stone was laid over the big boulders that form a firm roadbed and all was carefully leveled. Two days after a big storm came, and the Township Committee found that their crushed stone had been carefully deposited at the foot of the hill while the road was bare. This was not encouraging.

The road is largely used by the neighbors, and complaints at its terrible condition again started a movement in the Township Committee. This time they arranged to have the road "turnpiked," that is, graded with the centre high and the gutters low and set with stones. This job has just been completed and the Committee is hoping that the extra sum spent in paving the gutters and grading the roadway will prevent the wholesale departure of the stone for the foot of the hill.

DEATH OF D. E. TOWNLEY.

Passed Away Early This Morning at His Daughter's Home.

The death of David Edwin Townley occurred Saturday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. B. S. Braider, on Manning avenue. Mr. Townley has resided in the borough for the past ten years and during that time he has been in feeble health. His death was due to heart failure and dropsy.

Mr. Townley was born in New York in 1815. His chief business was that of a clothier, and he and his brother conducted such a business in the city for many years. He was a member of the Baptist church at Scotch Plains for many years and was always active in the support of the church. Four daughters survive him, Mrs. B. S. Braider and Miss Townley, of the borough; Mrs. Turnbull, of Orange, and Mrs. M. A. Ford, of Berkshire, N.Y. The funeral services were held from the house on Manning avenue last Monday afternoon and was private.

A UNITED STATES DEPOSITORY.

City National Bank Honored by Government Appointment.

Cashier Wm. F. Arnold was yesterday notified by telegraph by the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington that the City National Bank had been appointed a United States depository for public funds. This is quite an honor for that institution.

Dandruff is Dangerous

When dandruff appears it is usually regarded as an annoyance. It should be regarded as a disease. Its presence indicates an unhealthy condition of the scalp, which, if neglected, leads to baldness. Dandruff should be cured at once. The most effective means for the cure is found in AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It promotes the growth of the hair, restores it when gray or faded to its original color, and keeps the scalp clean and healthy.

"For more than eight years I was greatly troubled with dandruff, and though a young man, my hair was fast turning gray and falling out. Baldness seemed inevitable until I began to use

Ayer's Hair Vigor

The dandruff has been entirely removed and my hair is now soft, smooth, and glossy and fast regaining its original color."

PULLED OUT HANDFUL OF FRITZ'S WHISKERS.

A Desperate Encounter Between Landlord and Tenant.

PITCHFORKS USED, TOO.

COMPTON RETREATED TO THE BARN FOR SAFETY.

Bad Blood Between the Men for Some Time and Last Thursday Compton Accused Fritz of Making Noise and Disturbing a Sick Boy—Hostilities Were Immediately Commenced—No Arrests.

Adam Fritz, the horse-dealer, was around town last Thursday genial as ever. A portion of his side-whiskers are missing and there is a big cut in his scalp, but he does not care.

Fritz lives on Somerset street, where he has made his home for many years. Along side runs a lane, on which is a row of houses owned by Mr. Fritz. In one of these lives Morris Compton and his family. Of late there has grown trouble between them.

Thursday morning, Fritz, assisted by William Uhrbahn, was unloading earth from a wagon. Compton came out of his house and, it is said, ordered them not to make so much noise as his boy was very ill. Fritz replied that no one was making any noise. One word followed another. Then, it is alleged, Compton made a dash around the wagon for the veteran horse-trader.

Fritz's flatic artillery was evidently successful, as his tenant retreated with a damaged face. He disappeared in the barn and then came out again, armed with a pitchfork.

When Compton advanced, Fritz became possessed of an idea that the fork ought to change hands. He awaited the attack with his fists closed like big battering-rams. Then the fork was swung and Fritz made a leap at the wielder. The pitchfork came down. Fritz raised his hand and partially broke the force of the blow with his hand. Then the shoulder of the fork struck him on the head and the red blood began to flow. Quite a cut was opened up on his scalp, but it never phased the big horseman. He grabbed the fork with both hands.

Fritz had both hands on the handle of the fork and Compton but one. Compton's unoccupied hand was soon twined in Fritz's side whiskers. Great handfuls he pulled forth and distributed about the scene.

With a mighty effort, Fritz shook Compton loose from the fork and stood ready to continue the battle. Then the tenant retreated to the fastness of the barn, blocking the door so Fritz could not get in. Neighbors came and tried to soothe the wrath of Fritz, and Compton departed, one of the neighbors leading away his horse and buggy.

A WORTHY WORK.

Lack of Funds Deprive Exhilirating Air to Suffering Babies.

As there is a lack in the funds to carry on the work of the camp on the mountains for the little children, which is supported by voluntary contribution, the committee wish to make an appeal to the people of Plainfield. This is such a worthy object and the nurse is doing such grand work that it seems as though the people here should be interested enough to give their assistance.

In some cases the little ones lives have been saved just by this little change and by the tender care of the nurse while at the camp.

It cost $3 a day to take these little ones to the camp. If you only knew what a great benefit this little change is to them yous hearts would be touched and you would gladly give us a little towards our funds.

The physicians send us more applicants every day than we can really take care of, owing to our small amount of money.

Money is what we do badly need and we hope for a large response to our appeal, and all contributions can be sent to Mrs. W. A. Coddington, 409 East Second street, and the Committee will greatly appreciate your help.

The Camp Committee.

Cleaned Out the Gutters.

Health Inspector William Addis deserves much credit for his forethought in having the gutters on Park avenue cleaned last Wednesday afternoon previous to the heavy rain that fell in the city. This work belongs to the street commissioner's department, but Mr. Addis took it upon himself to have the task performed in the absence of Mr. Gavett. As a result the water made its escape from Park avenue quickly and gave pedestrians little trouble.

Civil Service Examination.

A civil service examination will be held in this city between the 1st and 15th of October next for the grades of clerk and carrier in the postal service. Applications must be properly filled out and filed before the hour of closing the postoffice on September 1st. The examination is open to all reputable citizens of the United States.

SUPPORTS MANY TONS.

FLOOR IN WING OF LIBRARY BUILDING GIVEN A SEVERE TEST.

Three Tons of Pig Iron was Piled on a Space Two Feet Square. But the Floor Only Sagged 1-32 of an Inch.

The new wing to the Public Library is rapidly nearing completion. When finished it will be the most completely fire-proof structure in the city and of sufficient strength to easily carry the load of valuable volumes intended for it

Tuesday the concrete floor was tested as to its ability to withstand any strain put upon it, and the results of the test were more than satisfactory to Building Inspector T. O. Doane. The floor is something new made by the Columbia Fire-proofing Company. The floor is primarily supported by 9-inch steel beams, resting on brick piers. There are 4-inch cross beams to which steel rods are fastened every 16 inches. About this a special concrete is laid 3½ inches in thickness.

At the test Tuesday three tons of pig iron was heaped on a space two feet square in the centre of one of the panels, 5 feet by 8 feet, 2 inches. A rod was so arranged as to show the slightest deflection. With all that load the floor only gave a hair's breadth. Architect Evarts Tracy estimated it at 1 3-2 of an inch.

Then Inspector Doane, Architect Tracy, The Press reporter and several workmen climbed on the heap adding 891 pounds to the weight. The weight per square foot was 1,705 pounds. All dwellings are supposed to have floors to withstand a pressure of 75 pounds per square foot, in store houses it is 150 pounds. It is estimated that the floor of the library will support a weight of 200 to 300 pounds per square foot. The test showed its ability to carry five times that amount. The floor is also absolutely fire proof.

HER CHILDREN SAVED HER.

Innocent Blue Eyes of a Little Tot Kept Mrs. Hayes Out of Jail.

The acquaintanceship of Fred Downs and Mrs. Hays will not be renewed for two months at least. Their little racket together Saturday night was deemed sufficient by City Judge DeMeza at the hearing yesterday afternoon to send Downs down for sixty days straight. Mrs. Hayes might have gone, too, but Patrolman Jerry Cash took pity on his prisoner and asked the Judge to make it as light for her as he could on account of the children. Jerry always had a kind heart and the innocent blue eyes of the little tot in the court room was too much for him.

There were some five witnesses sworn and they told how the couple had appeared Saturday night. They both pleaded not guilty but the Judge decided otherwise.

Home From the South.

Fred Krom, of Buena Vista, Dade county, Fla., is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Krom, of Madison avenue. Mr. Krom went to Florida about three years ago and took up some State or Government land. He began raising produce for the northern markets, and this is his first visit home. Mr. Krom has been rounding it since he went south, and has seen the southern pioneer in all the shades imaginable.

PRIVATES LONG FOR HOME.

BUT OFFICERS ARE WILLING TO STAY.

Third Regiment Men are Becoming Disgusted With Their Life in the Army.

A rumor to the effect that the Third Regiment would proceed to Sea Girt on Wednesday is being freely circulated in camp. The officers pretend to know nothing of it, but do not seem inclined to talk about it. The staff, with the possible exception of one, and nearly all the line officers are yet ready and anxious to remain in the service of Uncle Sam, but a number of the men, especially the married ones, are just as anxious to go home. The single men, with few exceptions, are ready to join the provisional regiment and are yet hopeful of hearing the birds sing in Cuba, Porto Rico or the Philipptnes.

The enormous fines being imposed for absence without leave has caused some members in Company I to get up a protest, and unless the fines are more lenient they threaten to take the matter to Washington.

A member of Company L, for a second time going on French leave, was yesterday fined $20 and sentenced to ten days at hard labor.

GET OUT OF MY COURT."

Justice Mosher Summarily Fires a Complainant Who Had a Weak Case.

"Get out of my court, and don't you ever come inside of it again unless you are brought here on a warrant," were the emphatic words with which Justice Mosher dismissed John Vantella, a complaining witness against Willie VanNest, a fourteen-year-old boy, Monday night. Vantella accused young VanNest with stealing a knife valued at 75 cents, but was not able to prove his case, and VanNest was discharged.

Vantella is a shoemaker living on West Fourth street. Thursday night VanNest went to his shop to have a shoe mended. Vantella says that when VanNest left the shoe he took with him the shoe knife.

Vantella's only witness to the alleged theft was his nine year-old daughter, whom Justice Mosher refused to allow to be sworn, and the shoemaker's case fell flat. Law student Willis Sweeney represented VanNest, and made a strong fight for his client. The shoe maker' scase against the boy was so weak that the Justice was disgusted, and dismissed the affair in the expressive words already quoted.

CHURCH WELL LIGHTED.

Electric Lighting System in First M. E. Church Now Completed.

The wiring of the First M. E. church is now practically completed. Sunday evening the church was illuminated with electricity for the first time and all the congregation present was greatly pleased with the decided improvement in the manner of lighting. The three-wire system is used. The church is now the only building in the city in which that modern system has been used. The wiring was done by Walter B. Bittenhouse, of this city.

The organ was greatly improved by its cleaning and general overhauling. Power for the organ is now furnished by a water motor which is a great improvement over the old hand power heretofore used.

PLAINFIELDER ABROAD.

REV. DR. W. C. SNODGRASS WRITES OF HIS ENGLISH TRIP.

Tells of Visits to Interesting Places—Was at Bosworth Field—Saw the Home of the Author of "Pilgrim's Progress."

Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, now in England spending his well earned vacation and recuperating for the active work of the winter. He has written to the Daily Press an interesting letter telling of the incidents of his trip. The letter was written from London, August 10th. He says:

"We had a long but delightful voyage and many of the passengers expressed regret when it ended. The six days I have been in England have been spent in visiting places I had not seen before and in visiting some points which one wishes to see more than once.

"On the way up from Liverpool I visited Nuneaton, the 'Milby' of George Eliot's 'Scenes in Clerical Life,' and called on the vicar of the parish in the very study which the story has made famous. I also visited the battlefield of Bosworth in company with a gentleman whose ancestors fought there. Then I went to Northampton and visited Queen Eleanor's cross.

"From there I went to Bedford, John Bunyan's town, and saw many things which make Bunyan more real to me than before. Hitherto he has been to me something more than a name. Hereafter he is a real man. I have been in the house he occupied in Elstow, have stood on the site of the Bedford jail, now destroyed, have seen a door from that infamous old building, and handled various articles that Bunyan once owned. The pastor of the Bunyan church, the sixth from the great dreamer, showed me many courtesies.

"All the Englishmen I have met are rejoicing over the American victories and the prospect of speedy and honorable peace. I have had the rare privilege of hearing Lord Salisbury and a number of other peers speak in the first debate on the vaccination bill in the House of Lords.

"Very truly,
"W. C. Snodgrass."

SUIT TO RECOVER A NOTE.

Charles Kane Makes Executors of Dead Sister's Estate the Defendants.

Charles Kane, of Philadelphia, and Michael Ettinger, of Cottage place, are brothers-in-law, but are on such terms at the present time that they have gone to law over a note for $100, which Kane claims he gave Mrs. Ettinger during her life time.

Mrs. Ettinger is dead and several weeks ago Kane, through Codington & Swackhamer, brought suit in Justice Mosher's court against the widower for the recovery of the loan. Councilman Walter L. Hetfield defended Ettinger and secured a nonsuit for his client on the ground that Kane should have sued Ettinger and Michael Coyne jointly, as executors of Mrs. Ettinger's estate, not Ettinger alone.

Another suit was brought accordingly and the case was tried Monday at 10 o'clock. Both Ettinger and Coyne were sued and the trial lasted until noon, when court adjourned for luncheon and to allow Justice Mosher to take John King's deposition. Mr. King was a witness for the defense and was too ill to leave his home on West Second street. He only testified that he, as an insurance agent, did all his business with Mrs. Ettinger, not with her husband. The parties then went back to the court room and finished the case at 4 o'clock, Justice Mosher reserving his decision until Monday morning.

TROUBLE AT A BRICK YARD.

Eastwhile Partners and Friends Take Their Troubles to Court.

There is more trouble at the brick yard at Berkley Heights. The erstwhile partners and friends, Mararoni and Varette, speak no more. Each runs a separate kiln now and is entirely independent of the other. Mararoni's existence has not been a peaceful one of late.

Last week three of Mararoni's men started suit against Mararoni to recover wages alleged to be due. The suit was started in Justice Newcorn's court. Then Mararoni had Billie Cromo Bimbo arrested on the charge of inciting men to riot. The other two men who sued their employer were Carmino Ruso and Antonio Gaita.

Monday Bimbo was arraigned before Justice Kelly in Summit. Mararoni tried to make out that Bimbo had attempted to persuade his men to stop work and threaten him. Bimbo was represented by H. C. Runyon, of this city. The complaint was dismissed.

Bimbo was immediately re-arrested on the charge of assault and battery preferred by a Frenchman named Francisco. He was held in $100 bail for his appearance before the Grand Jury.

Wants a Separation.

Mrs. George Hughes, of Manning avenue, has applied to the courts for a decree of separation from her husband. Senator Reed is her counsel.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

The building of stone roads has resulted the same in Somerset as in other counties. When first talked of there was opposition everywhere, but now there are applications pending that cannot be acted upon for a long time ahead. People are as impatient now to get the roads built as they were before when the subject was ever broached. There is no better way to encourage the building of stone roads than to have a few miles constructed as an illustration of their advantages over the dirt roads so long used by the farmers. Under the system now in vogue in New Jersey the expense to the property owners is so small for the benefits derived that there is seldom any objection to the roads.

In Union, Middlesex, Passaic and Essex counties the increase of suburban homes alone has much more than made up in value to the counties what they have paid for the road construction. The system of stone roads in the State is proving a most beneficial one, and will add greatly to its wealth and beauty. Only those of ample means wanted them at first, but now the farmer sees their advantage both as an actual saving in carting his produce to market and as a drawing card to wealthy investors in suburban property.—Unionist Gazette.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

A visit to the war ships in the New York bay is most interesting. They can be easily reached from here by going to New York and taking a Staten Island ferry boat from the Battery to St. George. At the latter place there are a number of steam launches plying back and forth to the boats that charge 50 cents for the trip. When the visitor is landed on a boat he is given a ticket by the launch captain that entitles him to return. It often happens that the launch does not show up, and then it will cost 50 cents to get ashore. The safest way is to pay going each way. Admiral Sampson has decided that the freedom of the ships shall be extended to every one between the hours of 10 in the morning and 5 in the evening until further notice.

A few days ago while Charles Sebring, of Greenbrook, was having excavations made near his water plant, he ran across an old-fashioned hammer that is supposed to be nearly one hundred years old. The head is of the very old-fashioned kind, while the handle is of a style very seldom seen. It is in a good state of preservation and is good for many years to come. It was found at a considerable depth in the ground close to the water, and no doubt the water kept the handle intact. Mr. Sebring prizes the hammer very much and intends to take good care of it.

Freeholder Charles R. Whitehead, of Washington Valley, has in his possession one of the oldest coins known to be preserved in the country. It is a penny marked with the date 1786. On one side are the words "E Pluribus Unum," and on the other is a horsehead and plough. The coin was found on the Bernardsville road near Glen Alpin, by a workman digging on the road.

THE COURTS.

JUSTICE MOSHER.

Summons issued—In the case of Plainfield Bicycle and Sporting Goods Company against Stubell, on contract, returnable August 29th.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?" He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is largely due to the intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style product containing ten RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper box, the whole for sale at a low price, FIVE CENTS. This carton is intended for the poor and those who think they cannot afford the regular size bottle (60 tabules) now on sale by druggists everywhere. One dozen of the 5 cent cartons (5 gross) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Ripans Tabules may also be had of some grocers, general country dealers and of street peddlers in some localities. The RIPANS TABULES will be sent for five cents. RIPANS TABULES may also be had of some druggists, generally in the cities and towns where they are not on sale by peddlers. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists in most foreign countries. One gives relief.

have their vineyards stocked of the same grape, the only vineyard of the kind in this country, the vines were imported and planted here over forty years ago. The Speer Port wine and Burgundy are now regarded the finest in the world, their rich, full body and high character is unexcelled. Invalids, weakly persons, especially females, and the aged are made strong and vigorous by its use, as a medicinal wine it has no equal; as a family wine it has no superior. First class physicians all over the country, here and in Europe, who have tried them recommend them as the best.

A close study by physicians on the effect of different brands of wines on the system convinces them of the superiority of the Speer Passaic wines for their patients.

HUSTLING FOR CONSENTS.

An Important Part of the Work of the County Trolley Scheme.

The Elizabeth City Street Railroad Co. begun an active canvass for the consents of property-holders on Westfield avenue and streets in Elizabeth to construct a trolley line between Elizabeth and Plainfield, for which right was accorded to John Kean, by the Union County Board of Freeholders, for $250,000 The county is to widen the avenue, which work will cost all the money received and probably more. The canvass for consents has proved highly satisfactory, and it is believed that the actual work of the county in widening the road will soon commence, when the laying of rails will quickly follow.

In the meantime bids are being asked for material. When completed, the new road or boulevard will be one of the finest thoroughfares in the State. It is expected, however, that the county will have to contend with a number of suits for damages by dissatisfied land-owners, those in Cranford being particularly aggressive.

Goes to Attend Conference.

A party consisting of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Lewis, of West Seventh street, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Main, of Central avenue, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hubbard, of West Seventh street, Mrs. D. W. Run a Nail in His Foot.

Frank Plummer, aged twenty-nine years, colored, living at 36 Raymond avenue, was received at Muhlenberg Hospital Tuesday for treatment. Last Friday Plummer ran a shoe nail in his foot and it gave him considerable trouble. He decided, as the pain grew worse, to have it properly treated and that was done this morning. No serious results are anticipated from the injury.

Tred C Lounsbury and Leonard M. Spangenberg Mentioned as Possibilities for the Mayoralty on the Citizens' Ticket—Two Factions Would Like to See Councilman Barrows Put Up.

It is rather early yet to be talking about the municipal election that takes place next December but still, it is a topic that is beginning to interest Plainfielders and promises to be an absorbing one before the campaign is over. Viewed from afar off, the coming campaign promises to rival those of many years past for liveliness and excitement. It was an interesting fight when Mayor Fisk defeated the "Farmer Orator," James E. Martine, in the mayoralty contest, but the organized ranks of the G. O. P. was too strong for the boom of the Democratic candidate. Last fall saw one of the fiercest elections that Plainfield has witnessed in many a year. Despite their great advantage of organization and regular workers, the Republican forces were practically beaten. The Citizens' ticket, the sudden outgrowth of a long felt, widespread discontent, made a showing that fairly dazed the members of the Republican combination.

The wonderful showing made by the Citizens' party in the last election has given those who headed that movement renewed energy. Although apparently they have been quiet, they have been steadily at work all the spring and summer preparing the way for their fall campaign. Even now the campaign is pretty well mapped out while the Republicans have done comparatively nothing.

It is pretty safe to predict a lively fight in the contest for the municipal candidates this December. Most important of all, a new Mayor will be chosen. Then there will be a city treasurer, a city collector and a city judge. There will also be four ward Councilmen to be elected.

First of all will come the struggle for the two nominations, that by the Republicans and that by the Citizens. There is likely to be an exciting time about the Republicans in the choice of their candidate. Mayor Fisk will not try for a re-nomination. That seems assured. Among those who have been spoken for the place are former Judge Nelson Runyon, former Assemblyman W. R. Codington, Councilman Elliott T. Barrows, Councilman Wm. N. Runyon and School Trustee F. C. Lounsbury.

In the minds of many, Judge Runyon would make a decidedly good candidate. He is a local business man and one who has had some experience in local government. He is also considered a conservative man of good judgment, who would follow the dictates of his own conscience rather than be at the beck and call of every politician. Former Assemblyman Codington has very slight chances for a Mayoralty nomination. The majority of the local workers consider that he has had his share of patronage and that the office should go to some one who has not already been so highly honored by his party.

There are two factions who would like to see Mr. Barrows at the head of the ticket, one that they might make him Mayor and the other that they might pay off the ancient grudge they bear him. It is a recognized fact that Mr. Barrows is not thoroughly in accord with all the Republicans of the city. The younger Runyon is usually understood to be running for the city judgeship rather than the office of chief executive and laughs at the suggestion of himself for Mayor.

Mr. Lounsbury came very near being the Republican candidate last time, but his identification with the Citizens' movement last year will probably kill his chances in the regular organization should he care to try.

The Citizens' nominee for Mayor is an unknown quantity at present. If the leaders of that movement have any idea who they are going to put forward, they have had little to say about it. Of course there are stories afloat about the probable man and both Leonard M. Spangenberg and F. C. Lounsbury have been mentioned. It is doubtful if either of these men have yet been selected as the probable candidate. Whether they will be chosen at a later date remains to be seen.

THE ROAD RACE TODAY.

LAST OF H. K. LISTER'S RACES TO TAKE PLACE.

It Will Be Held On Park Avenue This Afternoon Starting at 4.—Sixteen Entries So Far—The Officials.

The last of a series of three road races, arranged by Harry K. Lister, will be held this afternoon on Park avenue. The two previous contests have been very exciting and each has formed the topic of many discussions in the wheeling circles of the city. With commendable energy, Lister has planned and conducted the two events which have greatly added to the general interest in cycle racing in this vicinity.

The last of the series is scheduled to go this afternoon, to begin at 4 o'clock promptly. The distance will be the same as the last, fifteen miles, and over the same course as the others.

The start will be made on Park avenue, Lear Randolph road, and the course will be out Park avenue to Pumptown, via Oak Tree, return to Avon Park, turning about Campbell's road house and back to Pumptown. Turning again at Pumptown the riders will come back over the same course, finishing at the starting point on Park avenue, near Randolph road.

While the other races have been held in the evening just before dark, it was decided this time to hold the race in the afternoon as the darkness at the finish of the last race interfered with the checking of the riders. The officials will be the same as those at the last race. Harry K. Lister will act as starter and clerk of the course. The judges will be Nathan Titsworth, Thomas A. Cuming, Chauncey F. Stout, Charles B. Morse and Raymond A McGee. The timers will be J. W. VanSickle, Charles E. Vail and H. C. VanEmburgh.

Sixteen entries have now been received. While the number is not as great as in the last race, most of the contestants are well known riders of ability from Plainfield and the surrounding towns. The handicaps have not yet been announced. The Plainfield entries are Yep Sorensen, Henry Angerbauer, Ed Duck, George Apgar, Harry Cuming, Morris Sorensen and Joe Burke. The other entries are W. Downs, of Newark; Charles G. Embleton, of Westfield; M. T. Fifer, of Elizabeth; W. J. Mooney, of Rahway; J. T. Conquest, of Perth Amboy; John Allgair, Jr., of Somerville; Charles Vandeveer, of Cranford; W. W. Robinson, and one unnamed rider from Elizabeth.

STATE FAIR.

Forty-fifth Exhibition to Open at Waverly Next Week.

The annual exhibition of the New Jersey State Agricultural Society will open at Waverly Park Monday of next week. The grounds will be in readiness for the reception of exhibits Saturday.

From promises received the officers are encouraged to claim that this year's exhibition will compass all former ones, both as regards largeness of display and quality of exhibits.

They have bent themselves to the work of prefecting the hundred and one details; the grounds have been carefully looked after and every building put in shape, so that when opening day arrives there will be place for everything and something for every place.

The accessible location of the grounds, added to the natural picturesque beauty of its park facilities, makes it a perfect place to thoroughly enjoy a day's outing. The whole enclosure of 60 acres, by reason of its terraced and rolling lands, forms a natural grandstand, from which the visitor can view with comfort the various attractions and races, and at the same time delight the eye in gazing upon the quiet beauty of the landscape.

Besides the excellent service of the Pennsylvania, Lehigh Valley and Central Railroads of New Jersey, the electric cars from Newark, Elizabeth, Paterson and Jersey City deliver passengers at the main entrance to the fair grounds. These improved means of reaching the grounds will induce thousands to go there this year, giving exhibitors a much larger audience than they have had heretofore. The officers of the State society always make it their business to please visitors, so that when leaving the grounds they are satisfied that they have had full value for their time and expense.

Found a Purse.

Louis MacLaughlin, of Somerset street, who went to Asbury Park Tuesday with the First Baptist excursion, picked up a purse containing $5.75 on the beach, and returned it to its owner.

FOUND GREER AT LAST.

He Was at Work in Jersey City When Told About His Son's Death.

Central Railroad Detective Dougherty's search for Alexander Greer, father of Joseph Greer, the seven-year-old lad who was killed by falling under the cars Monday, was kept up with a persistence that was finally rewarded by finding him working in the Erie Railroad roundhouse in Jersey City.

A brother of the dead lad, Robert by name, was found in Nyack, where he had gone to attend a conference of the Christian Alliance. Robert is a moulder by trade, and lives in Elizabeth. Both father and son came home Tuesday and made arrangements for the funeral.

They were horror stricken when the news was conveyed to them, but made arrangements to come here at once.

The lad will be buried today at Elizabethport, where the mother lies.

PRIZE OFFERED BY MR. RUNKLE.

He is One of the Leading Members of the Hotel Champlain Golf Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Runkle and Dan Runkle, of Plainfield, are among the leading members of the Hotel Champlain Golf Club. Tournaments here are of daily occurance and dates for exchange matches with other clubs cover all of September.

One of the most expensive prizes of the season was a handsome solid silver cup, made for the occasion by Theo. B. Starr, of New York, and offered by Harry Runkle. It represents the championship of the club, and will be played for each season until permanently claimed, the conditions being that it must be won twice by some player before ownership is granted. The fortunate winner this season is Charles E. Johnson.

Another valuable prize, given by Mr. Johnson, was won in open handicap by Wm. Runkle, of Orange, the finale having been played by him and Edward H. Graves last Saturday. It was a regulation size solid silver putter, with ebony shaft and lizard warping.

THE NEW GOLF COURSE.

Both the Links and Clubhouse Will be in Use Next Monday.

Arrangements are about completed for a gala day at the new golf club house of the Hillside Club on Monday next, Labor Day. A large gathering of club members and their friends will no doubt be present. The new golf course will be open for play, and it is in fine condition.

Luncheon is to be served to members from 12 until 2 o'clock, and the formal reception will commence at 3:30 o'clock.

Small Boy and Matches, Loss $10.

The combination of small boy and matches was the immediate cause of a blaze at the home of William Neuman, of West Second street, Saturday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. The fire started in a closet on the second floor where the combination happened to meet. A lad passing by saw the smoke and yelled "fire." The neighbors rushed in and extinguished the flames while Neuman was hurriedly summoned from fire department headquarters where he happened to be at the time. The damage will amount to $10, which was covered by insurance.

An Attempted Burglary.

Dunellen, N. J., Aug. 31.—Sometime Sunday night burglars tried to enter J. M. Chapot's house, on Church street, but were frightened away before they had secured an entrance. The family were not aware of any such attempt until Monday morning when they discovered that two panes of glass had been cut out of one of the bow windows in the parlor. The burglars must have been scared by some noise either inside or outside of the house, and left their job uncompleted.

The Westfield Avenue Widening.

Elizabeth, August 31.—The Union County Board of Freeholders will meet in Elizabeth tomorrow, when the session will be occupied chiefly with the discussion of the proposed widening of Westfield avenue for the construction of a trolley line between Elizabeth and Plainfield, the franchise for which was recently sold to John Kean's company. It is said that a number of protests from property-holders will be read. The canvass for consents is still going on.

The Endeavor Convention.

Asbury Park is making preparations for the Christian Endeavor State Convention which meets there on September 28th, 29th and 30th.

Regimental Reunion.

The survivors of the old Thirty-fifth Regiment will recall memories of the Civil War at a reunion in Elizabeth today.

A COSTLY LEGAL FIGHT.

CHARLES KANE'S EXPENSES WILL EQUAL AMOUNT HE SUES FOR.

He Loaned $100 to His Sister and Now Seeks to Recover it From Her Estate—Will Carry Case to the County Court.

The complicated legal muddle into which Charles Kane, Michael Ettinger and Michael Coyne are involved does not seem to be any nearer unraveling than it was a week ago, for now Kane has taken an appeal from Justice Mosher's decision, and will wage his claim for a hundred-dollar loan before the court at Elizabeth.

The case has been fully noted in these columns. Kane's sister married Ettinger, and during her life Kane loaned the couple $100. Mrs. Ettinger is dead, and Kane, through his lawyers, Codington & Swackhamer, sought to recover that amount by bringing suit against Ettinger, the husband. Ettinger secured the services of Councilman Walter Hetfield, who secured a non-suit for his client on the grounds that Kane should have sued the two executors of Mrs. Ettinger's estate, the husband and Michael Coyne.

This Kane did, but included Ettinger in his personal capacity in the suit. Kane lost his suit against Ettinger, but secured judgment for the full amount of his claim against the estate. Kane claims that the estate isn't worth $100, so he has appealed the case. It is said that already Kane has expended for lawyers' fees, costs, etc., more than the whole sum sued for.

MANY RARE MINERALS.

John Dalziel Has Returned From Colorado With Valuable Collection.

Back from several weeks' vacation spent in the bracing air of Denver, Col., and vicinity, and with a mind broadened and enriched with lore picked up out of the vast mineral accumulations to be found there, John Dalziel, principal of the Plainfield Academy, is prepared to reopen his institution for preparing young folks for practical and college life September 12th.

During his sojourn in the mountains Mr. Dalziel has gathered together and brought home with him a collection of Colorado minerals, among them being several pieces of value and rarity.

There is a piece of rose quartz containing several rodenite crystals and bright pieces of nickel. Rodenites are very rare, but Mr. Dalziel also secured a wolferite crystal, the rarest of all. A garnet crystal, large and regularity cut and highly polished, was presented to him by the superintendent of the Bureau of Mines.

A spot of great interest to eastern people is the Garden of the Gods, at Manitou, four hours' ride from Denver. The garden contains rocks of all different sizes and shapes, and of elaborate and beautiful coloring. It is the delicate shades of the rocks which make a grand effect when the sun shines upon them that has given to the garden its notoriety.

The rocks seem to be a quartz conglomerate, and Mr. Dalziel brought home several pieces of them of several colors. He also has an agate, said by Professor Cannon, an approved authority on such subjects in that State, to be a part of the gizzard of an immense antediluvian bird. It is a mixture of pebbles and hardened substances which the professor says was food.

While Mr. Dalziel was in Denver his fame as a teacher of drawing became known, and he was invited to address the pupils in the Normal School upon that subject. The address was so interesting and well liked that he was asked to teach the classes in drawing during his stay there. Mr. Dalziel also made several excursions to points of interest, and on one of them climbed to the top of Pike's Peak.

Dispute Over an Account.

A dispute over a book account resulted in a lawsuit that came to trial at Justice Nash's court yesterday between Woolston & Buckle and Ambrose Male. Woolston & Buckle were represented by Counselor W. S. Angleman and brought suit against Mr. Male for a book account alleged to amount to $62.44. A jury of twelve men was called and listened to the evidence. C. L. Murphy, of Murphy & Blatz, spoke in court for the defendant. A verdict was then brought in for the plaintiff for the full amount.

Death of an Infant Son.

Maxwell S. Thompson, infant son of John P. and Jennie Thompson, of West Third street, died at the home of his parents yesterday after a brief illness.

Oysters Said to be Poor.

The oyster season in the Delaware Bay and Maurice River Cove will open today. The oysters are said to be very poor.

WANTED TO CLEAN HOUSE.

As a Result of This Unseemly Wish, Peterson Has Taken a Vacation.

John Peterson was a colored man upon excitement bent. He found it in two ways Tuesday. He drank and he drank and he drank once again. Then he forgot that there was a police force or a city court and went home to clean house. House cleaning is all right in its place, but last evening did not seem the most appropriate occasion for any such performances. The neighbors on East Third street say that he cruelly beat his wife. At any rate it grew so warm that she had to appeal to the police for protection from her husband.

Yesterday Peterson was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza on the charge of being drunk and raising a disturbance. After hearing the testimony of the wife and policeman the Judge proclaimed Peterson guilty. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $25 or go to jail for sixty days.

Now Peterson is not in the best of circumstances and $25 bills do not hang on every tree so John has decided that a vacation will do him good. While Elizabeth is not exactly the place he might have chosen, yet it's a change. Peterson will probably be committed this afternoon.

HE CUTS THE RED TAPE.

Governor Voorhees Takes Steps to Secure Supplies for Troops.

Trenton, Aug. 31.—Colonel Alexander C. Oliphant, who with General Meaney, went to Camp Alger some days ago at the request of Governor Voorhees to ascertain how many soldiers of the 1st New Jersey Regiment desired to remain in the service, and to inspect their camp, and especially their hospital accommodations, returned yesterday and made a verbal report to the Governor.

The latter spent the greater part of the day at the State House. Colonel Oliphant told him that the men of the First Regiment seemed weak and debilitated, and his impression was that if they were not soon moved away far more serious results might follow. An epidemic of typhoid fever among the troops had undoubtedly been averted by the strict discipline maintained and the watchful care of Colonel Campbell. The regimental hospital tent was overtaxed. Requisitions had certainly needed supplies had been made, but they had not been forthcoming. This was true especially of tonics.

Governor Voorhees immediately wired to Major Allers, surgeon of the First Regiment, and subsequently talked with him over the telephone. In this way the Governor learned what was needed by the regiment, and Thursday he will go to Washington to see that the supplies are forwarded at once. The Governor also telegraphed to Quartermaster-General Luddington, calling his attention to the lack of supplies, and he received word before he left the State House that another hospital tent would be sent immediately to the regiment from Baltimore.

FLAG COMES FROM HONOLULU.

First One Hoisted Over the Custom House There is Now in Elizabeth.

The first American flag hoisted over the Custom House at Honolulu, Hawaii, August 13th, on the annexation of that country to the United States, has been presented to Company C, Phil Kearney Guard, of Elizabeth, Third New Jersey regiment.

The giver is George C. Straternieyer, surveyor of the port of Honolulu, who raised the flag, and who formerly lived in Elizabeth and belonged to the Phil Kearney Guard. He has been twenty-four years in Honolulu, and for a long time has been port surveyor.

The flag is fourteen feet long, and is a handsome one. An official certificate as to it being the genuine emblem hoisted August 13th, accompanies the gift. The certificate bears the signature of the Collector General of Hawaii, and has the Government seal attached.

SLID ON HIS FACE.

Unpleasant Results of Alighting From a Moving Train.

As one of the afternoon trains was just about to stop at the North Avenue station Tuesday a stranger attempted to alight. The train was going faster than he realized, and when he reached the ground he was thrown with considerable force. He landed fairly on his face, which was badly cut and scraped on the rock ballast that forms the roadbed.

He went to the office of Dr. M. B. Long where his wounds were dressed. The man was a stranger in this city, but was about to visit relatives here. He did not give his name.

—The regular monthly meeting of the Borough Council will be held Friday evening.

DUNELLEN'S FIRST CAR.

IT WENT BY HORSE POWER BUT WAS WELL RECEIVED.

Trolley Line In Dunellen Was Opened Last Night With the Assistance of a Band — Distinguished Visitors Rode.

Dunellen, August 31.—Out under the full moon they rode like a grand triumphal procession. The staid horses pranced at the unaccustomed sounds, and the little band car bumped along over the rails with its load of distinguished guests. Such was the opening of the Dunellen trolley last night. The shrill notes of two fifes, the roll of the drum and the dull boom of the bass drum announced the approach of the first car for miles around.

As far as Dunellen is now concerned, the trolley line is completed. The tracks have been laid from the junction with the Plainfield Street Railway's line at the eastern boundary of the borough right through the town to the borough line on the west connecting with the line to Lincoln. Further, the streets have been graded and last night all was ready for action.

The arrangements for supplying power to the cars being still incomplete, the officials of the Brunswick Traction Company decided that horse power would do for the first ride. There was a little hand car there which has been used by the construction gang to carry tools and materials for the line. This was temporarily converted into an observation car. Several of the Councilmen, prominent merchant and business men of the borough were invited to lend their presence to add to the general effect.

They came and so did the drum and fife corps of four members. Several fish horns and the united voices of the guests more than equalled several brass bands. They crowded onto the car, stood up, sat down and tried hard to be comfortable. Then the music began and the two horses set forth amid the wild huzzas of guests and spectators.

It was a grand ride while it lasted, and to the eyes of the passengers the town took on new beauties before their very eyes. The road was an even one and the little car ran along easily. There was great rejoicing throughout the borough. A few of the unprogressive ones viewed the whole proceeding with disfavor and commented on the noise and various troubles that they thought they saw. They were a very minute portion of the population, however, and the rest seemed glad to see something moving at last.

The excitement continued well into the night and it was past midnight before the band and its followers ended their selections and departed homeward.

DEATH OF M. L. SAULSBURY.

He Formerly Worked in This City as a Civil Engineer.

Word has been received in this city of the death of M. L. Saulsbury, a civil engineer, who, until last June, was in the employ of F. A. Dunham and other civil engineers in this city. Mr. Saulsbury was taken with typhoid fever at his home in Maryland and died after a week's illness.

Mr. Saulsbury was located in this city for about two years. He was about twenty-eight years old, robust, and apparently in good health. In June his brother died suddenly, so Mr. Saulsbury went to Maryland to take charge of the business.

He was a Methodist, and an earnest worker in all church work, and during his short stay in this city made many friends.

Recovering From a Severe Wound.

Ephraim Ackor, of Washingtonville, is just recovering from a serious accident he received two weeks ago. He was cutting wood for Mobus brothers on their wood tract near Washingtonville when his axe slipped and cut a deep gash in the fleshy part of his leg. He dressed the wound and was back at work next day. A log of wood fell against his leg and opened up the wound again. He went to Dr. Tomlinson who dressed it. Ackor has been confined to his home ever since the second accident but will now soon be able to go out again.

Lawyers Unfortunate Gesture.

Charles J. McNabb, the lawyer, met with an accident a few days ago which has deprived him of the use of his right hand ever since. He was visiting with a brother lawyer, and just before he left Mr. McNabb threw his hand around, and went directly through the glass in the door. The palm was cut, but Mr. McNabb had the wound dressed and apprehends no bad result.

In Memoriam.

A mass will be offered this morning at 8 o'clock for Marion Louise Anderson at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church.

GREAT DAY FOR THE SMITHS AT PEAPACK.

The Annual Picnic of the Multitudinous Family.

NO FAKIRS ARE ALLOWED

DRESSED IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE THEY SHAD A FINE TIME.

Patriarch Isaiah Exercising a General Supervision Over the Festivities—Picnic Ground is Sacred to the Name of Smith—Rev. Mr. Wells Tells the Smith What Great People They Are.

Peapack, August 31.—You may journey from Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and you'll find Smiths in every hamlet and section of this broad country, but wherever you may travel you'll never find so many Smiths to the square foot of territory as this section of New Jersey can show. There are other commonwealths that show more population than New Jersey, but when it comes to Smiths the little State leads them all. It doesn't require a census to tell this; all that is necessary is for the doubting Thomases to visit Peapack, up in the hills of Somerset county, and then the Smith claim would have been cheerfully agreed to.

Yesterday was the time set for the great and glorious Smith family of New Jersey to hold their picnic. A gracious and obliging weather prophet knew when he was well off and furnished a delightful day for the nearly 3,000 Smiths who gathered to enjoy the festivities of the great Smith picnic. The weather man has spoiled many a harvest day and many a crop, but never has he been able to spoil a crop of Smiths or their gathering on the last day of August for the past twenty-two years, and so he just acquiesced with pleasant weather.

The Smith family picnic is forty times a greater attraction to the people of that name than any county fair or circus ever possibly could be. All day Tuesday the Smith wives were busy cooking great lunch baskets of goodies, the Smith husbands were hustling and the Smith children were waiting for the morrow when the great picnic would be held. Sunday-go-to-meeting attire and other holiday details were resurrected and brought out and donned at an early hour in the morning.

The annual meeting place of the Smiths is on ground sacred to generations of Smiths. It has been in the Smith family since the times of King George's rule, and always will be if the Smiths have anything to say about it. The picnic grounds proper are in the orchard on the farm of Abner Smith, but the multitudinous family spread out all over the farm. All day Tuesday Abner and the other officers of the Smith Family Association labored hard getting the picnic ground ready for their relatives today.

One of the first arrivals at the grounds yesterday was Isaiah Smith, president of the association, and patriarch and caretaker of the morals of the tribe. Isaiah claims to be a lineal descendant of the celebrated John of Colonial times. He looks looking on in general for the pleasure of the picnicers, the patriarch's especial business is to see that no red lemonade, peanuts or other catch-penny devices find their way into the picnic grounds. Last year Isaiah got himself into a lot of trouble trying to eject an itinerant photographer from the grounds, but profiting by his past experience he was accompanied yesterday by Constable Koch, who notified all the fakirs as fast as they arrived to "git out" on penalty of instant arrest and subsequent incarceration in the Somerset County Jail. In order to outwit the fakirs Isaiah had secured the privileges of the adjoining farms. A concert band was on hand early and discoursed music as the Smiths came in constant streams by all sorts of conveyances from early morning till past the dinner hour.

A few politicians had come to the picnic, but they didn't have much chance to talk politics to the Smiths. The Smiths were too busy talking about the Smiths. The older folks gathered in groups to renew acquaintances and indulge in reminiscences. The Smith boys and girls divided into couples and played various games. The Smith babies just rolled around on the green grass and cooed to themselves. It was a happy lot of Smiths.

At noon the lunch baskets were brought forth and the Smiths set down to eat holiday nic-nacs. After the dinner hour there were exercises

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

White in all sorts of materials stands high in popular favor this summer. It is usually combined with some dainty color, and a gown of this spotless fabric can hardly be called quiet. For the girl who may only possess one thin summer frock, white organdie is the most desirable, while a sash of red, blue, pink, or some dainty shade gives the necessary touch of color to it.

These diaphanous gowns are generally made over a drop skirt, sometimes of silk, but oftener of one of the many imitations, which are much lighter in weight and serve the purpose quite as well. Another addition to the present summer skirt is the circular flounce, a fashion which, though quite common, does not lose its popularity, but seems to gain in favor as the season advances. This is chiefly owing to the fact that they are made in so many different designs, there is very seldom a repetition of the same pattern. Some are made straight all around, others are narrow in the front and grow wider toward in the form of rippies. Many persons, however, prefer the three dainty lace trimmed ruffles just at the foot of the skirt, while others bosst tiny ruffles from the waist line down one after the other.

There appears to be no end to the many lovely accessories for adorning the neck and encircling the waist of the fair summer maid. Whether intended for the severe tailor made girl or the maiden attired in all the finery necessary for an afternoon tea or an evening dance, they are all extremely stylish and up-to-date. Ascots, fore-in-hands, and string ties in every shade and material are the proper neck fixings for the shirt waist girl, although many fancy the fluffy ties of new or mull brought twice around the neck and tied in an immense bow beneath the chin. White taffeta ribbon employed in this manner is also popular, and there is no doubt that these adornments are more becoming than the stiffly starched white collar.

For dressy wear long scarfs of fine lace, accordeon pleated chiffon and stocks and collarettes of every description are worn. One of the newest neck adornments is the stock of shirred silk or chiffon, fitting closely to the neck and held in place by four handsomely jeweled slides, placed at equal distances from one another. The Medici ruff, attached to the back of the high collar and extending up under the ears, is becoming and stylish, but is also exceedingly uncomfortable and warm for hot weather.

With the exception of the princesse there are very few gowns which do not need a belt or sash of some description, and there is without doubt a goodly array to select from. For wear with the shirt waist the leather belt is probably the most appropriate. They are made of the finest materials, sometimes studded with precious stones, but the preferred style is the plain leather, clasped with a gold or silver buckle

Bonnet Bags.

In travelling, and particularly for summer journeys, when dust is most plentiful bonnet-bags will be found very useful. Even on short journeys to keep a hat protected from cinders and dust for a few hours adds much to its appearance upon arrival. For a long overland journey such are almost indispensable. Some women buy very large-sized sponge bags, their rubber linings having special reference. For very large hats, however, it is impossible to get one of sufficient size, and a bag of any closely woven fabric is equally useful. Occasionally careful wives provide these coverings for their husband's hats as well, though this seems almost unnecessary, as men's head coverings can be readily rid of dust. A traveller was seen recently slipping the jacket of her travelling suit into a long, light bag provided for the purpose, which when drawn together at its mouth by the shirr string and hung in a sleeping car section, kept the jacket as perfectly as if it were lying at home on a closet shelf. This same woman had ove her expensive seal and gold mounted hand bag a handsome cover of black cloth. It fitted neatly with flaps conveniently arranged for the opening of the bag. When the latter was closed, the cover strapped down so as to cover it completely with the exception of the handle. A large monogram was embroidered on the side of the cover in gold floss.

Red Tape in Russia.

Every time a Russian Minister leaves town his colleagues are notified of the journey, besides the Council of the Empire, the Cabinet of the Emperor, the Empire's Controleur and Secretary, the Sacred Synod, the Emperor's Military Secretary, the Empress, the Governors of Moscow, Varsovie, Kief, etc., and infinitum, to all appearance. When he returns the same minute notification performance is gone through. So each Ministerial departure from and return to St. Petersburg involves an issue of some 200 notices. There are eighteen Ministers, and taking three journeys as the average for each, we have at the end of the year a grand total of some 10,800 official papers.

The Trimmed Skirt.

The trimmed skirt appears to advance more rapidly and more generally in favor than the draped or overskirted styles. There are more overskirt effects, simulated by various modes of adjusting frills, pipings, flounces, ruches, and other fashionable garnitures, than there are genuine double skirts. Panels of silk or of another fabric introduced on either side of the front of a skirt or princesse dress make a very effective and becoming trimming for short waists, a far better arrangement than any frill or flounce going round and round the skirt, as the panels at each side add not a little to the appearance of height.

In Dotted Swiss.

Dotted swissses and sprigged muslins are extremely popular this summer. In the latter material a charming gown had a white ground, on which were scattered tiny pink rose buds with here and there a knot of pale blue ribbon tying them.

A dainty dotted swiss has the corsage arranged to wear with a jabot or front of different material. The material is laid in tiny tucks from the shoulder down to about five inches, and is gathered snugly at the waist line. The jabot, of fine white muslin, is bordered with ruches of dainty lace. A crush collar of white taffeta encircles the neck.

New Cloths for Outdoor Costumes.

The newest vicuna cloths for travelling, yachting, and cycling are wide Hagonals of very fine, soft wool, roughly woven, in a single color such as gray, blue, or fawn, and notably in navy blue, one of the two shades of a color. More novel than these are the pretty diagonals in contrasting colors, green with brown or violet, gray with rose or silver, blue with white or almond. Raised silk cords form stripes in black or dark brown on sheer lightweight wools of delicate summer coloring.

Lovely Summer Gowns.

Laces and embroideries, in white and colors, are prodigially used in the making up of "wash" gowns for next season, the majority of which, however, are not intended to ever pass through the crucible of the laundry. They are many new and very attractive styles in batiste, India mull, nainsook, and bishop's lawn embroideries, while the Irish point and guipure patterns have lost none of their popularity.

Blue Peppermints.

To the pink, green, chocolate, and white cream peppermints is now added a bright-blue variety. The shade is as striking as the fashionable blue of ribbons and silk, and is obtained by the use of a harmless vegetable coloring. The fashionable cream peppermint lozenge is very large, at present being about the size of a silver dollar.

A Lemon Bath.

In the West Indies a lemon bath is almost a daily luxury. Three or four limes or lemons are sliced into the water and allowed to lie for half an hour, in order that the juice may be extracted. A remarkable sense of freshness and cleanliness is given to the skin.

A New Silk Waist.

A silk waist that can be compressed into very small compass, taking up about the space of a baseball, and which emerges unrumpled and in excellent condition, is one of the novelties of the season that is specially useful to travellers.

Banana sandwiches.

Banana sandwiches are sometimes served as a simple luncheon dessert, or for the children's table. The fruit is sliced and placed between brown slices of buttered bread. These are laid in a shallow glass or china dish, and just before serving a pint of boiled custard is poured over and around them. Another variation for the children's dessert is a wholesome substitute for the eclairs of which they are so fond. Buy at the baker's the long pointed finger rolls, and after one side has been cut down with a fork, dig out as much of the inside as possible. Have ready a little boiled custard made in the ordinary way, except with slight additional thickness gained either with a little gelatine or by stirring in a tablespoonful of flour wet in a little cold milk. This is the proper proportion of a pint of custard. The custard serves as a filling for the rolls. At this season it is a pleasant variation to add a little of the strawberry juice pressed from fresh strawberries, or a very little pineapple or banana pulp may also be used to flavor the filling. Plain whipped cream or that over which a little sweet chocolate has been grated is another welcome variety. It is the pastry of the eclair which is especially unwholesome for youthful stomachs.

Blouse Waists for Girls.

Although girls of twelve and fourteen wear the regulation shirt waist with standing collar and jaunty tie now, the stores devoted to garments for children's wear make a specialty of fancy waists and blouses, which are much more becoming and youthful looking.

A pretty model is the full blouse of lawn or dimity, gathered in at the waist, and trimmed with ruffles of the material. These blouses are either made with the large sailor collar or small turned-down affair, with cuffs to match. A narrow ruffle also adorns the band down the centre of the front.

Dainty Accessories.

Fancy yokes, guimpes, or collarettes are every where en evidence on new summer gowns. Some of the most dainty are formed of sheer nainsook or mull, in clusters of fine lingerie tucks, with insertion and projecting edges of Valenciennes lace. The tucked guimpe extending into a narrow vest, and showing inside the fronts of the silk or satin waist, is a very popular bodice arrangement. To this guimpe is added a collar band of nainsook 2 minute tucks laid over white silk or velvet ribbon, and trimmed all around the top with a standing frill of Valenciennes lace an inch or more in width. There are also sleeve cuffs or inside frills of the lace-edged and tucked nainsook.

Valances for Beds.

Valances for metal bedsteads are made with a heading and usually stretched by running a tape through the double hem. The spread that accompanies the valance is of the same material—cretonne, or for summer use, organdie—and should be just long enough to fall a little below the heading. These bedspreads not only contribute to the decorative effect of a room, but are a thoroughly useful protection. The valance keeps the dust from the under side of the mattress, and the light spread, covering bed and pillow, insures neatness to the bed linen underneath.

Tapioca Ice.

A cold tapioca pudding is called tapioca ice. It is useful for the simple summer dessert. Four heaping tablespoonfuls of tapioca should be soaked overnight in cold water. In the morning spread a layer of some fruit—cherries stoned, bananas, or peaches, using the good canned sort when fresh is not to be had—in the bottom of the pudding dish. Sweeten this to taste and cover with the tapioca, adding a quart of water, and bake slowly for an hour. When done set on ice until needed.

Holland Costumes.

Holland costumes will be very much worn for travelling, tennis and morning gowns generally. Many different grades of the linen are used, and the most dressy models have flounced skirts bordered with linen insertion, with tucked yokes, finished with alternating rows of the insertion, instead of the linen lace. Some of the gowns are trimmed with black cluny lace or colored linen embroidery.

CALENDAR OF GOOD INTENTIONS.

Said Father Tempus, I have a plan,
I'm going to swear off on the first of JAN.

But his resolution began to ebb,
Before the month was by the end of FEB.

Then he lost his temper and went so far
As to bawl and blusterall through MAR.

He puffed and blew till he spoiled his shape,
So he took the water cure in APR.

He took a shower bath every day,
And was most disagreeable all through MAY

Then summer came and he changed his tune—
Any fool can be good in JUNE.

But the strain was so great that by and by
He was taken with fever in JULY.

He only just escaped the sparrow,
His temperature was so high in AUG.

Never were resolutions kept
So well as in convalescent SEPT.

When he recovered the world was shocked
For he painted the country red in OCT.

Then he bowed and raged like a fiend in love,
He was full as could be of remorse in NOV.

It's plain, said he, this thing must cease,
I'll swear off again—at the end of DEC.

THE ASYLUM GIRL.

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

"This is Peggy, is it?" said Elder Doubleday, beaming benignantly through his huge silver spectacles.

"This is PEGGY," said Mrs. Montacute.

And "Peggy" herself, a tall, slight girl, of sixteen or seventeen, in a maiden-red calico dress, and a drooping head all covered with jet-black rings of curling hair, stood before the pompous elder, as a Circassian slave might have stood before her possible purchaser, in olden time.

"Seems like a nice girl enough," said the elder.

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Montacute, a little gray-haired lady, with a black silk dress and old-fashioned garnet earrings. "Peggy's a good girl. She's been a help and comfort to me ever since I took her out of the orphan asylum three years ago come Thanksgiving Day."

"Mrs. Doubleday wants a girl, to make herself useful about the house," said the elder, dubiously. "Young woman, can you wash?"

"Oh, yes, sir," said Peggy, in a low, soft voice, that made the elder think of the striking of the little French clock on the squire's mantel.

"And iron, and bake, and make soft soap, and clean house ,and mind little children?"

To all of these queries, Peggy inclined her head assentingly, while Mrs. Montacute made haste to declare that "Pebby was a masterhand to turn off work, for all she looks so slim.'

"I like slim gals," said the elder. "They aren't apt to be such heavy eaters, and they don't wear so hard on a stair carpet. I've a notion to take her."

"You won't regret it," said Mrs. Montacute. "I should never think of parting with her if it wasn't for my son—Clement, you know, the college graduate," with a little flush of maternal pride at the name. "Clement can't bear the idea of an asylum girl about the house—he is so refined in his tastes and ideas; so we're to have a regular cook and chambermaid from the city—an establishment. Clement calls it—and I must find a good home for Peggy."

"Well," said the elder, rising up like a mountain of black broadcloth and smooth shaven chin in motion. "I'll try her, anyhow. And I've a notion she'll suit Mrs. Doubleday, though Mrs. Doubleday ain't easy suited, neither."

So the elder trundled himself ponderously away, and Peggy turned her dark eyes on those of a startled fawn, on her mistress' face.

"Must I go there?" she faltered.

"Now, Peggy, don't be unreasonable,' said Mrs. Montacute, briskly. "It'll be a good home for you."

"I'd rather stay here," faltered Peggy, with a quiver of the full red lower lip.

"But you know that you can't, dear, on account of Clement,' said Mrs. Montacute, patting the girl's shoulders, as one might soothe a fretful child.

"I would be very quiet," said Peggy. "And I would never come in his way."

"It's quite out of the question, my dear," said the little widow, nodding her head. "College young men have their fancies, you know, and they've got to be humored."

"But it isn't my fault that I'm an asylum girl," argued Peggy, with a strong sense of injustice swelling at her heart.

"I know that, Peggy," soothed the old lady; "but folks often have to suffer for what is'nt any fault of theirs, in this world, as you'll find out by the time you've lived to be as old as I am. Now go up and cut out that new calico dress of yours, for the elder will want you at the end of the month, and you must get your wardrobe in as good order as you can."

And Peggy went slowly upstairs to her own room, a little sloping-roofed den, under the very eaves of the house, with a window that looked down into the emerald billows of the apple orchard and of a tall, dark, unpainted wood, upon which Peggy kept her small store of books and the worn portfolio of papers where she had hidden away her own ambitious little efforts to imitate her standards of perfection. For Peggy, the asylum girl, had had her dreams of future rank and greatness and sometimes, as she looked into the little square of warped looking-glass that hung close to the window, a face looked back at her that startled her—her own, and yet not her own. And still Peggy never realised the fact that she was growing to be a beauty.

But that afternoon she dressed herself in the faded pink muslin which Mrs. Montacute had worn when a girl, and had bestowed on Peggy as a queenly knight bestow a coronation robe on some favored subject, and took "Monroe's Melodies" down to her favorite seat on the door step to read, while Mrs. Montacute was spending the afternoon at some neighbor's house.

"I shall not have many more reads on this nice old door step," thought Peggy, with tears in her eyes.

But as she sat there, looking exquisitely lovely in the level afternoon sunlight, with her pink dress outlining her tropical beauty in true artist fashion and the faintest possible shade of rose glowing in her cheek, a shadow fell across her book.

She started up to behold a tall, linen-suited young man, with a traveling knapsack strapped on his shoulder, and a golden beard and mustache covering the lower part of his countenance.

"I beg your pardon," he said, lifting his cap. "I fear that I have disturbed your studies. Is Mrs. Montacute at home?"

Peggy had started up with dark eyes glittering beneath their pet black lashes and cheeks burning with embarrassment.

"She is not at home. She has gone to Miss Deborah Deal's," she said, dropping "Moore's Melodies" in her consternation. "I will go for her at once."

"I cannot allow such a thing!" said the college graduate courteously. "I know where the place is—I will go myself."

But Peggy had flown like a startled bird across the elm-shaded yard and had vanished before he could recall her.

"By Jove!" said Clement Montacute, "what a beauty!"

He sat down on the seat she had just vacated ,and took up the volume of poems.

"And she has brains, too, and a cultivated sense of the beautiful," he added, as he observed the pencilled marks along the margins of the sweetest verses. "Visiting my mother, I suppose, I wonder where she picked up such a little gem?"

Presently Mrs. Montacute made her appearance, rosy with the combined influences of maternal gratification and her hurried walk.

Clement welcomed her with true filial warmth, and, at the same time, he looked over her shoulder, as if he expected to see some one else.

"Where is she?" he asked.

"Where is who?" demanded Mrs. Monacute, fanning herself with a turkey-feather fan and panting for breath.

"The young lady."

"What young lady."

"Why, your visitor, I suppose."

Mrs. Montacute stared.

"My dear boy," she said, "I have no visitor."

"The young lady with the dark eyes and curls," said Clement, impatiently. "The young lady that was reading this," holding up the volume of "Moore's Melodies."

"Why," cried Mrs. Montacute, "it's Peggy."

"It's who?"

"Peggy—the asylum girl."

"Nonsence!" cried Clement very red. "Don't I know a lady when I see her?"

"But it's our Peggy all the same," stoutly insisted Mrs. Montacute.

* * * *

The moon, which had been only a slender silver thread when Elder Doubleday made his first visit to the Montacute farmhouse, was a globe of shining silver when his cumbrous one-horse chaise rumbled up a second time to the door stone.

"Well," said the elder, "where's the young woman? I've come to fetch her to qur place."

Mrs. Montacute hurried to the door.

"Indeed, elder," faltered she, "I'm very sorry—that is, I'm very glad—or rather I really don't know whether to be glad or sorry on your account, though on my own I'm perfectly delighted. But my son Clement is engaged."

"Engaged, is he?" said the elder. "But I don't see as that need alter my plans."

"But it does," cried Mrs. Montacute, more confused than ever, "because he is engaged to our Peggy!"

"Eh?" said the elder.

"And they're to be married in six weeks," said Mrs. Montacute, radiantly; "and Clement is to settle down here on the old farm, and we're all to be happy as the day is long."

"Humph!" grunted the elder. "I thought he didn't like asylum girls."

"You never saw a man so much in love in your life," said Mrs. Montacute; "and he's teaching Peggy Latin, and he says she is a genius, and he's going to have some of her poetry published."

"Then on the whole," said the elder, "I may as well get home again as fast as I can, and tell Mrs. Doubleday to look out for another girl."

"Well," perhaps on the whole you had better," said Mrs. Doubleday.

So the beautiful girl was a slave no longer, but matters were reversed. Mr. Clement Montacute had gone into life-long bondage!

Sizing Up a Baby.

"That's a fine, solid baby of yours, Middleton," said a friend who was admiring the first baby.

"Do you think he's solid?" asked Middleton, rather disconsolately. "It seems to me as if he was all baller."

Scientific Tid Bits.

A person walking at the rate of four miles an hour consumes 2,300 cubic inches of air per minute.

A process has been recently perfected by which thin sheets of absolutely transparent celluloid are silvered by a similar process to that formerly used on glass.

The beautiful colors seen in the soap bubble arise from the fact that the bubble, being very thin, reflects light from both the outer and inner surfaces of the film.

A burglar-proof glass has been invented by a smart manufacturer. It is made by pouring molten glass over a network of steel wire. It is specially adapted for skylights and jewellers' windows.

General Vennkoff, a Russian, has discovered a magnetic pole of the earth, or something like it, at Kotchetowka, in the government of Kourak. The magnetic needle freely suspended becomes vertical there; but at 60ft. from the centre it inclines 1 deg. from the vertical. Perhaps the phenomenon is due to magnetic ore beneath the surface of the ground.

The Persians in 516 B. C. invented a transparent glass varnish, which they laid over sculptured rocks to prevent them from weathering. This coating has lasted to our day, while the rocks beneath are honey-combed.

"Hunger-stones" have been seen in the Rhine this winter. They appear only when the water is very low, and the date of their appearance is then cut into them. They are believed to forbode a year of bad crops.

In Summer Array.

Dame Fashion has sunk into her usual midsummer lethargy. Stagnapresses this condition of affairs and the causes are manifold. In the first place the fashionable woman has laid in a store of gowns of every description necessary for a summer campaign at mountain or seaside, and in the second place the swell courturieres are busily planning and concocting novel and original designs to startle the eyes of the fall shoppers.

Still the large establishments show many toilets and dainty accessories to the toilet, which, if not new, are certainly worthy of mention. The summer months have brought forth a bewildering array of gowns, hats and parasols, which are glorious in their rich colorings and convey the impression when a bevy of summer girls are gathered together of a large garden of gayly colored flowers. Very few severe gowns are seen, and when they are they are made conspicuous by their very simplicity.

Flounces for Skirts.

Flounces put on straight all around are equally as fashionable as those arranged to curve upwards as they are carried towards the back of the skirt. The latter style is less familiar and on many forms more graceful. On a great number of the gowns for general wear this season the gored skirt with one deep flounce is extremely popular. The gored breadths may reach under the flounce, or may end where the top of the flounce begins. This style is much used for light silks, for sheer wools, and every sort of wash material, and trimmings effects are employed which best harmonize with the sort of fabric selected. Ruches, folds and rows of narrow velvet ribbon are used for silk, and shirring and tucking in various widths for light wools.

A Good Idea.

A woman who is the owner of a rarely handsome mahogany table finds it at once her pride and her despair to keep it up to the high standard of condition which she insists upon achieving. It was her suggestion recently that she intended to make inquiries of her cabinet maker to see if it were not possible to have a glass top fitted over it as is done on trays. It would be easy, as she explains, to keep the glass polished and flawless, and through its transparency the beauty of the table would be apparent, while perfectly protected. Some other housekeeper may like to similarly pursue the suggestion, although its possibility is uncertain.

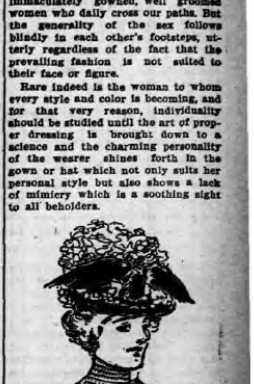
When Planting a Fernery.

Some one suggests that to watch attention sales for a store show case is a good idea when planting a fernery. A wooden frame may be painted a dark green, and the glass box is just what is needed for the warm, moist air on which ferns, mosses and certain other plants of this nature thrive.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

What a blessing it would be to mankind in general if a greater proportion of the gentler sex understood the art of artistic dressing or had the gift of making themselves as others see them. That all femininity is not lacking in this respect is proved by the number of immaculately gowned, well groomed women who daily cross our paths. But the generality of the sex follows blindly in each other's footsteps, utterly regardless of the fact that the prevailing fashion is not suited to their face or figure.

Rare indeed is the woman to whom every style and color is becoming, and for that very reason, individuality should be studied until the art of proper dressing is brought down to a science and the charming personality of the wearer shines forth in the gown or hat which not only suits her personal style but also shows a lack of mimicry which is a soothing sight to all beholders.



The transgressions in this respect are especially noticeable this summer when skirts ruched, flounced, tabbed, ruffled and with overskirt effects, are worn by everybody, the tall, the short, the thin and the stout.

Gowns designed solely for the tall, slim maiden, which tend to add plumpness to her figure and reduce her height, are adopted by her short dumpy sister, with, as one may suppose decidedly ludicrous results. Bayadere striped effects should be avoided by short women together with overskirts, flounces and ruffles. Panels introduced on either side of the front of a skirt is a becoming trimming and also adds a little to the appearance of height.

But the short woman is not by any means the only offender, for many tall, angular females cling with stubborn tenacity to perpendicular stripes of every description, to bolero made on long lines and stiff plastron effects. There is less excuse for this latter type for she has many becoming styles to select from this summer.

In hats and bonnets this mad rush after extraordinary combinations of colors and startling effects is everywhere apparent. The French have a knack for making these daring creations which if attempted by the amateur or ordinary milliner will undoubtedly result in a dowdy or vulgarly flashy head covering. For the woman with a slender purse who may only possess one or two new hats every five or six months, black is the most reliable and the only color which should be purchased. With a hat of this color in a becoming, not too conspicuous shape, one is prepared for any emergency, and appears well dressed at all times. A novel idea this summer and one which appears quite practical is to have the hat trimmed entirely in black, and to have on hand a number of combs adorned with different flowers to place beneath the hat in the back. These combs are now sold in some millinery shops all ready for use and bid fair to prove decidedly popular, inasmuch as one may have three or four changes with one hat.

There are certainly some delightful toilets seen this season at the swell summer resorts. For instance, a decidedly French and exceedingly pretty costume donned by a fair maid for an afternoon stroll at one of the fashionable watering places was made in the following manner: The material is cream colored pineapple fibre, mounted over rose colored taffeta. The skirt is cut with a deep fitted flounce, trimmed with fine lace appliqued on in a bow knot pattern, which, by the way is one of the daintiest and most novel modes of ornamentation this summer, and certainly a very attractive one.

The waist is a simple blouse, fastening under the arm and cut square in the neck, forming a point directly in the centre of the front. Between three tiny ruches of white mousseline de soie, while the finely tucked yoke and collar are of rose colored taffeta. The bow knot pattern in lace is also carried out on the bodice. The sleeves are long with the pineapple fibre slightly shirred over the taffeta undersleeves.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

In this season of startling combinations, black and white stands out conspicuously as always chaste and very rarely unbecoming.

The waist here shown is of black peau-de-soie that matches the skirt, its soft glimmer showing well against the yoke, collar and epaulettes of white satin veiled with embroidered chiffon applique. Narrow ruching of black chiffon edges the waist, epaulettes, collar and wrists.

The arrangement is simply made over glove fitted linings that close in center front.

The yoke plastron is laid on and permanently secured under the edges of the blouse fronts on the right, the left edges being finished separately and provided with hooks to close on the shoulder, arm's-eye, and under the edges of the left front.

The seamless back has the yoke applied in pointed outline, gathers at the waist giving a becoming fulness in the center. The standing collar that finishes the neck is joined to the plastron in front and closes at the left side. The two seamed sleeves are provided with fitted linings, the greatly modified fulness being arranged in gathers at the top, while the wrists are shaped in pointed outline.

The epaulettes are shaped in points at front and back, the notch at the top giving a double pointed effect that is very graceful.

Waists in this style may be of silk, wool or cotton fabrics, all in one material or contrasting, or a combination of two or more as may be desired.

A fancy belt can be worn at the waist in place of the knotted sash ribbon here illustrated.

To make this waist for a lady of medium size, 3 1-4 yards of material 44 inches wide will be required.

Interesting Paragraphs.

Now that low shoes are the order of the day, the summer girl wages her old battle of trying to keep them tied. The patent fasteners that she used to clamp on her shoes played havoc with her laced-trimmed skirts and the ruffles inside her gown and never did their duty at that. They were always coming off, as the many odd clasps in her possession testify. If the bow is tied properly, there is no need of clasps. Tie once, and proceed as if to make an ordinary double bow knot. Just before the loops are pulled tight, wrap the left-hand loop under the knot and then pull the loops. This is an improvement on the old way of tying the loops, which, if done effectively, often caused the nails to become broken in the effort to undo the work. This bow can be undone by pulling the string, just as if it were tied ordinarily.

For an elderly lady an excellent traveling mantle is princess shaped, tight at the waist, the back forming puckered plaits below the waist. Heart-shaped shoulder slope, with velvet facings, joined to a round turndown collar, the whole edged with a stitched slope; sleeves open and turned down, mounted in hollow plaits, the open part of the front is trimmed with velvet facings, edged by a stitched slope.

For the present sunbonnets in all their quaintness, made from organdie or fine lawn, are the novelties most sought after and make the head covering most prized by the girls and women whose enthusiasm falls short of reckless exposure and defiance to the sun.

The new shirt waists are of butcher's blue. This shade is very bright, and does not fade easily. As the heavy, duck-like material in which the shade comes is apt to draw up very much when laundered, it should be shrunk before it is made.

When buying hosiery to match tan shoes, do not be too particular about the match. If the hose are darker it is better, since the shoes wear dark very quickly, and stockings lighter than the shoes are very undesirable.

What is called the "summer glove" is of the thinnest possible kid. These are not to be recommended to women whose hands perspire. Such a woman wants her gloves thicker than ever in the summer.

There seems to be a wild desire to reduce the seams of skirts. Now the new skirts have only one seam. These are difficult to hang, and should not be attempted except by an experienced dressmaker.

ST. CLAIR SHIP CANAL

IMPORTANT INFLUENCE IT WOULD HAVE ON LAKE TRAFFIC.

A Cut of Fourteen Miles at an Expense of $5,000,000 Which Would Save Seventy-nine Miles—Recent Development of Commerce Throughout Lake System.

The prospects for the construction of the St. Clair and Erie ship canal in the near future have recently attracted a good deal of attention among business and shipping men. It is stated, upon what is believed to be good authority, that within a year operations will be begun. Two years' work would be required in any case before the canal could be completed and opened for traffic. The purpose of this canal is to shorten materially the sailing distance between Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie and to afford a deep, safe and direct channel in place of the present unsatisfactory, tortuous and dangerous one through the Detroit River.

Leaving the old course in Lake St. Clair at a point about five miles from the foot of the St. Mary's River, the proposed course strikes southeast directly across Lake St. Clair in a bee line for Cleveland. It cuts through the low-lying neck of land which separates Lake St. Clair from Lake Erie and debouches into the latter at a point about sixty miles easterly of the usual route through the Detroit River. This low-lying land forms the southwestern extremity of Ontario. In general conformation it resembles somewhat the Iberian peninsula, Lake St. Clair taking the place of the Bay of Biscay and Lake Erie of the Mediterranean. In this view the St. Clair Canal would be a counterpart of the long-projected Bordeaux-Mediterranean Canal.

The direct saving in distance would be seventy-nine miles. The actual cutting necessary is about fourteen miles, and the expense of constructing the canal is estimated by the engineers at about $5,500,000. The management believes that a toll of three cents a ton on the freight, which may reasonably be expected to pass through this channel upon its completion, would justify the outlay for construction and repay all expenses of interest and management. If two-thirds of the tonnage now passing Detroit should avail itself of the advantages of the canal the tolls would meet these anticipations. At the rate mentioned it is not apparent why all the through traffic now passing Detroit would not take the new route. For a portion of the thousand-mile journey to the seaboard to be rendered more safe by the proposed canal is passed over by all through or long distance traffic, for the tonnage passing through the Detroit River has always served with approximate accuracy to gauge the development of commerce throughout the whole system. Thus, for example, in 1889 the cargo tonnage carried through the Detroit River in American vessels (and exclusive of that carried in Canadian vessels) was 19,217,980 tons, while the shipments from all American lake ports aggregated but 25,027,308 tons.

The proposed construction in this new link in the chain of magnificent waterways which connect Duluth, Chicago, and other western lake ports with the tide water again calls attention to the enormous growth of the lake marine in recent years, its steady and continuous advance, and the recent improvements both in the vessels themselves and in the facilities of docking, loading and unloading. The magnitude of this commerce, as demonstrated by the accurate official reports now kept for a considerable series of years, while well known to shipping men and to most residents of the lake-side cities, is a well recognized cause of surprise and astonishment to the great bulk of otherwise well informed Americans, to say nothing of foreigners whose ignorance of the trade demands of our country might more readily admit of excuse. To take the figures of this commerce for the last ten years, and which, while amounts smaller than one million tons, we find that in 1887 the registered tonnage passing through the Detroit River amounted to about 18,000,000 tons. Advancing each year in a steady growth by one or two million tons, this tonnage amounted in the year 1892 to 26,000,000, at which it now stands. The enormous extent of this business is more readily appreciated when one is reminded that these figures indicate a tonnage four times as great as that which passes through the Suez Canal, twice as great as the combined tonnage of the ports of London and Liverpool, and double the entrances and clearances at the port of New York. This, too, is for the annual shipping season of eight or nine months at most, while the Suez canal and the English ports are open all the year around.

Not alone in regard to the amount of tonnage now employed is the record a marvellous one. The character of the tonnage has undergone within a decade a most wonderful change for the better. Steel has been substituted for canvas altogether and steel ships for wooden. It is believed that nowhere in the world can steel ships now be built more cheaply than in the lake-side shipyards. The only reasonable limit placed upon length is that established by the necessity of steering the vessel through crooked channels, and the principal existing limitation of loading depth is fixed by the shoals met with in the Detroit River and in the western end of Lake Erie. Were all obstacles to free navigation removed the vessels now building would adopt the dimensions of ocean vessels. In 1868 the average size of sailing vessels on the lakes was 168 gross tons, ten years later it had increased to 209 tons, and twenty years later to 268 tons.

DO YOU SPEAK SOFTLY?

You Can Be Taught to Control Your Voice and Adapt It to the Room You Enter.

Do you speak softly? Has your voice precisely the proper pitch, and can it adapt itself on the instant to the room you suddenly enter? Have you learned that you must never whisper in a church—for whispering is always very audible there—but speak in a low, firm tone? Can you laugh properly and daintily, as an ideal girl should? Can you control your voice, using one tone for one occasion and another for another, at will? Can you talk animatedly and with enthusiasm, without throwing your arms about, your head too far back and without moving your body?

For if you cannot say yes to all these questions you are not a perfect and properly modern girl. There have been many criticisms, as well as praises, levelled at the American girl, and one of the chief of these has been for years that she talked too loud and too often did not modify her voice when occasion called. Now, American fads and fancies say the time has come for reform, and the new cult of speaking softly has been started.

A foreign woman, continental to her finger tips, who has the softest, prettiest voice herself—Mme. Mendoses—in the parlance of this new cult, and to her "studio," on Fifth avenue, come each day troops of girls, singly or in classes of six and eight, that they may be in the fashion. It is, in fact, a rage in a mild way. Only those girls blessed by nature or by very early training with voices that are properly fashionable can afford to keep out of the procession, and all the others of the sets wend their way daily to the "studio."

It is not alone by example—though example has a great deal to do with it —that the cult of speaking softly is taught. The girls ranged about her, Mme. Mendosez asks each of them to speak in her ordinary conversational tone. Then, stepping to the piano near by, she strikes a note. If high in the treble it is meant for a girl whose tones are naturally harsh and guttural; if down in the bass, for a girl who speaks shrilly and in a half scream.

"That for you," she says, singling out a girl. "Now try and see how close you can pitch your voice to that."

No exact point of meeting is there and no similarity of tones sought after, but the deep voice and the shrill one, the nasal voice and the voice that seems to come from the bottom of the throat, are cajoled and pulled along until they completely lose their very agreeable peculiarities and are on somewhat common ground.

Now, this is but the preface. It is not so much the object of the cult to change voices as it is to control them. And yet the two go together in a measure, by this plan of vocal gymnastics, a girl can alter her tones at will, it is a simple thing for her to learn to speak softly. She comes to learn that by raising her voice hardly at all she can make her tones "carry" to a marvellous degree. She is taught the difference between rooms, how there is one tone for public assemblages, another for parlors, a third for still smaller rooms and yet another for the street.

So completely as if she were taking singing lessons does this system of the new cult of speaking softly range her voice up and down, keeping it meanwhile (if there is a tendency either way), out of her throat and her nose, until she is complete mistress of her tones, all the while holding forward as the main object soft speaking.

Women Economizing.

Chief among the tendencies of the moment as regards representative New York women is a most marked idea of economy. Economy in every way, even to the saving of the pennies, let alone the dollars, has come to be a growing enthusiasm. That this is not a theory but a genuine condition, and that women, even the biggest sets of incomes are actually practicing what they preach, can be learned from all the prominent tradesmen, as war is making many of them genuinely blue for the accounts of many of their best customers are falling decidedly off.

The idea of the day is that the country may sooner or later need money; that at all events scores of new charities and aid societies will probably spring up, and that they themselves should begin to save now in order that they may be prepared when the call for funds comes. That is the feeling among the women of the "sets," and they are showing their willingness to be ready to make all sorts of little sacrifices.

This has not been told in print for the reason that these women have, naturally, been talked about it, but is nevertheless, a fact. The average woman of fashion is having about a third as many new gowns as usual, and she is buying far less in the way of fripperies and novelties. A much smaller quantity of goods is being ordered daily from the butcher, the baker and the grocer, and there are some women who are actualy keeping a close watch on the sugar and butter in their pantries, to see that neither of these articles is wasted. This, on the part of women who have never done such a thing in all their lives before. Servants are being discharged and establishments quietly reduced.

Miss Louise Hortense Snowden of Philadelphia, who received the degree of Bachelor of Science in June, was the first woman to receive honors at the University of Pennsylvania for a full four years' college course. She also received the first prize for the best preparations illustrating the anatomy or embryology of any animal.

SPAIN IS EVER CRUEL

HER PLEASURE IN INFLICTING TORTURE ON THE HELPLESS.

Atrocious Treatment of War Prisoners Has Alway Been a Natural Characteristic—Deeds as Horrible as Any Savages Ever Thought Of.

"Aside from anything that a wilful partisan or a romantically inclined historian may have written, one can say, without fear of contradiction, that of all the civilized nations on earth, none ever has waged war in a more cruel and fraudulent manner than the Spanish," says a recent writer. "It is with horror only that the Germans think of the times of Alva, who devastated their fatherland by his atrocious actions, and transformed the industrial cities and provinces of the Netherlands into a desert.

"No better than this bloody executioner of King Philip were other Spanish leaders in the war waged for the independence of the Netherlands. The city of Maastricht, for instance, was plundered for three days, after having been besieged for four months by the Spanish General, Alexander Farnese, Duke of Parma. Eight thousand inhabitants were murdered, among them 1,200 women, who, after having been subjected to unspeakable outrages and tortures, were positively butchered.

"The cruelties of the civil war between the follows of Philip V and of Carlos III can hardly be described, and they are only surpassed by the brutalities committed during the long war of the Spaniards against the French (1808-1814). When Napoleon had put his brother Joseph on the Spanish throne, and had taken possession of the country with his army the people became furious, and the fanaticism of the bigoted masses showed up in a revolting manner, as they feared for their religion from the enlightened French; the clergy, and especially the monks, preached that the French were inimical to the Catholic faith, and that Napoleon was 'anti-Christ in person.' They armed the peasants and started a bloody guerrilla war, and in this sort of warfare the diabolic character of these much-praised chivalrous Castillians revealed itself with full force. The Spaniards murdered their enemies whenever and wherever they could lay their hands on them and invariably committed horrible atrocities against the corpses of their enemies, cutting off their noses and ears, or they sawed them in pieces, or crucified or slowly burned them. The Spanish women, those noble souls, whose virtues have been sung by exalted romances, committed acts of brutality heretofore almost unknown to man. In the Sierra Morrena, for instance, the transports of prisoners were attacked by them and they dug out the eyes of these unfortunate people with pins and scissors, and to enhance the misery of the wounded they cut open the soles of their feet and then compelled them to march. In 1808, when the French general, Dupont, and his 25,000 men surrendered at Bayleu, a great many of the prisoners were tortured and killed in the above described manner.

"In the island of Malorca, where thousands of prisoners had been forwarded, the mob stormed the barracks and killed most of them on the spot.

"An English reporter, who was with Wellington's army, tells of a peasant who followed a transport of wounded Frenchmen for hours, and begged the English escort most imploringly to give him one of the wounded enemies. When the English soldier asked him what he intended to do with the wounded man, the brute coolly replied, 'Why, torture him.' In the second volume of his memoirs, the famous French General, Marbot, tells of a dreadful ride performed by him while captain of the Chasseurs a Cheval in 1808. He started from Indela, in the Ebro Valley, with dispatches from Marshal Lannes for Emperor Napoleon, who was stationed at Aranda, a village on the road leading from Burgos to Madrid. Marbot had to ride through a lonesome and mountainous region, where many bands of guerillas roamed, and two hussars with him as escort as soon as he reached Tazra, as he was told from there on his ride would be a most perilous one. It was moonlight when the three Frenchmen reached the mountains. Suddenly they heard the well known whistling of bullets, but were unable to discover the enemy. As they had not been hurt they moved on and soon found scores of dead soldiers belonging to Ney's corps. They had been plundered, robbed of their clothing, and left naked by the guerillas. Shortly after this they came to a lonely barn, where they met with a horrible sight. A young officer belonging to the chasseurs was nailed hands and feet to the barn door with his head downward, and, to increase the tortures of the miserable man, the guerillas had kindled a fire under his head. The poor fellow was beyond suffering, but it could not have been a long while, for the blood was still trickling from his wounds. The three riders were shocked, and when again bullets began to whistle from ambush the hussars answered with their rifles. They promptly killed two of their aggressors and then rushed at the others with sabres in hand. In an instant they jerked two of the offenders from their horses, and from one proved to be a Capuchin monk, who had mounted the horse of the crucified officer, while the other was a peasant who carried two uniforms of murdered French musketeers. The hussars, driven to madness by the horrible sight of their tortured comrades, gave no quarter, but promptly despatched the two brutes.

It is estimated that there are 400,000 mummies in Egypt.

QUEEN'S STOCKINGS.

Long and Faithful Work Duly Recognized By Her Majesty.

"Who makes the Queen's stockings?" "We," say Messrs. Morley of Gisborne street, Derby, "we make her stockings." They are purchased by the Queen from Messrs. Shears & Wells, for whom they are manufactured by Messrs. Morley. The latter firm commit the work to an old weaver, Mr. John Meakin, who has been employed by them for upward of seventy years. An old man who recently been brought to the notice of her majesty, who has caused to be forwarded to him an autograph portrait as a token of her appreciation of the long and faithful handiwork he has done for her. A representative of the Press, who called on Mr. Meakin soon after he received the portrait, found him engaged on a pair of hose for the Queen's summer wear. They were of the finest white lace silk, though, as a rule, they are said to be black with white tops and feet. A coronet with the letters "V. R.," and the initials of the sellers and the weaver in smaller letters, are worked into the hose. Mr. Meakin, who is hale and hearty, in spite of his 84 years, has been photographed, with a view of returning in his own way the kindly compliment which her majesty has paid him.

A Perfect Trunk.

With delight will the woman who is far seeing and up to the times go about her task of trunk packing. No longer is she to have visions of possibly crushed gowns at the end of her journey, and of hats "squashed" out of all semblance to the original styles. For there has come a fresh era in trunks and "boxes," and packing will have no more terrors.

The trunk that has been popular for so many years—the "trunk" that was simply a receptacle various in size and shape, with one deep tray divided up into boxes of odd sizes—has this year passed into the realm of departed fashions. In its place there is a new trunk of very different pattern. It is a trunk of trays—four or five trays, and in the case of the largest even a small fitting snugly into the trunk's framework.

Each of these trays is intended to hold one gown and three small pieces. They are quite as convenient for men's clothes—boxes and coats not unfolding in them without rumpling or creasing. In the trunk's very bottom, under the lowest tray, boots, slippers and heavy articles generally may be stowed, held in place by the tray directly over them, the necessity of tightly wedging thus being avoided.

It is not that the average clever woman cannot pack everything and in a space that mathematicians would at once declare entirely too small. The trunks of the past have presented no insolvable problem when it came to filling them up. But with these new trunks the wear and tear and the worry of packing is all past and gone, and the daintiest dresses can with the greatest expedition be laid in the trays and the cover closed.

To put hats in trunks this year will be no part of the feminine philosophy. The woman who has pretty hats will be foolish to trust them in the recesses of a trunk amid linen, gowns and the odds and ends. Two hatboxes, Mother Eve mechanical science has devised a very simple answer to the question, "How can we most safely carry our elaborate hats?"

A hat box has been invented that, though small in compass itself, can hold six hats of the greatest amount of "toss and feathers." In this, on sides, bottom and top, there are small metallic arms that turn and can be slipped over the brim. The sides carry four hats, the bottom, the fifth, the cover the sixth. Firmly held in place in this manner none of these can interfere with each other. This hat box locks in precisely the same manner as does a trunk. Not only does its cover lift up, but on opening one of the sides falls. Thus any hat can be taken out or put back without disturbing the others.

Indian Princess Graduates.

Miss Lola Minnie Cornelius, an Oneida Indian girl of royal parentage, was graduated with high honors from Grafton hall, an Episcopalian girls' school of Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin. Miss Cornelius is a direct descendant of a long line of chiefs. Her grandfather was the famous old chief Skenandore, well known even now throughout Wisconsin, and her father would now have been chief of his tribe but for the protective government of the United States over the Oneida reservation.

Last year Miss Cornelius won first prize in crayon sketching out of a large class in art. Some of her sketches are remarkably fine. She does not intend to devote herself to art, however. She will take up a course of study in some medical college.

AFTER FIGHT, MERCY

RESCUE OF THE CREW OF THE VIZCAYA AFTER HER DESTRUCTION.

"Fighting Bob" Evans, Tells of the Scene Of Santiago After His Iowa Defeated the Spanish Ship—Decks of the Iowa Ran With Blood of Rescued.

After "Fighting Bob" Evans, Captain of the Iowa, had described to a reporter the opening of the great naval battle off Santiago and the manner in which his ship drove the Spanish Vizcaya ashore, a wreck, he spoke as follows:

"As it was apparent that the Iowa could not possibly catch the Cristobal Colon, and that the Oregon and Brooklyn undoubtedly would, and as the fast New York was also on her trail, I decided that the calls of humanity should be answered and attention given to the twelve or fifteen hundred Spanish officers and men who had struck their colors to the American squadron commanded by Admiral Sampson. I therefore headed for the wreck of the Vizcaya, now burning furiously fore and aft. When I was in as far as the depth of water would admit, I lowered all my boats and sent them at once to the assistance of the unfortunate men, who were being drowned by dozens or roasted on the decks. I soon discovered that the insurgent Cubans from the shore were shooting on men who were struggling in the water after having surrendered to us. I immediately put a stop to this; but I could not put a stop to the mutilation of many bodies by the sharks inside the reef. These creatures had become excited by the blood from the wounded mixing in the water. My boats' crews worked manfully and succeeded in saving many of the wounded from the burning ship. One man who will be recommended for promotion clambered up the side of the Vizcaya and saved three men from burning to death. The smaller magazines of the Vizcaya were exploding with magnificent cloud effects. The boats were coming alongside in a steady string, and willing hands were helping the lacerated Spanish officers and sailors onto the Iowa's quarter-deck. All the wounded were taken absolute without clothes. Some had their legs torn off by fragments of shells. Others were mutilated in every conceivable way.

"The bottoms of the boats held two or three inches of blood. In many cases dead men were lying in the blood. Five poor chaps died on the way to the ship. They were afterward buried with military honors from the Iowa. Some examples of heroism, or more properly devotion to discipline and duty, could never be surpassed. One man on the lost Vizcaya had his left arm almost shot off just below the shoulder. The fragments were hanging by a small piece of skin. But he climbed unassisted over the side and saluted as if on a visit of ceremony. Immediately after him came a strong, hearty sailor, whose left leg had been shot off above the knee. He was hoisted on board the Iowa with a tackle, but never a whimper came from him. Gradually the mangled bodies and naked well men accumulated, until it would have been almost difficult to recognize the Iowa as a United States battleship. Blood was all over her upper, usually white quarterdeck, and 272 naked men were being supplied with food by those who a few minutes before had been using a rapid-fire battery on them. Finally came the boats with Capt. Eulate, commander of the Vizcaya, for whom a chair was lowered over the side, as he was evidently wounded. The captain's guard of marines was drawn up on the quarterdeck to salute him, and I stood waiting to welcome him. As the chair was placed on the deck the marines presented arms. Capt. Eulate slowly raised himself in the chair, saluted me with grave dignity, unbuckled his sword belt, and holding the hilt of the sword before him, kissed it reverently, with tears in his eyes, and then surrendered it to me.

"Of course, I declined to receive his sword, and, as the crew of the Iowa saw this, they cheered like wild men. As I started to take Capt. Eulate into the cabin to let the doctors examine his wounds, the magazines on board the Vizcaya exploded with a tremendous burst of flame. Capt. Eulate, extending his hands, said 'Adios, Vizcaya! There goes my beautiful ship, Captain;' and so we passed on to the cabin, where the doctors dressed his three wounds. In the meantime thirty officers of the Vizcaya had been picked up, besides 272 of her crew. Our wardroom and steerage officers gave up their state-rooms and furnished food, clothing and tobacco to those naked officers from the Vizcaya.

HOUSE HOLD TALKS

The Value of the Lemon.

No woman should be without lemons on her toilet table. They are about as necessary nowadays as soap, so those who believe in them say.

"Lemons!" exclaimed one who believes in them religiously. "Why I wouldn't be without lemons a whole day for anything. I once heard of a Frenchwoman who was considered the most beautiful woman of her time, and she attributed her good looks to eating eight oranges a day for 365 days in the year.

"I'd be willing to declare solemnly that lemons will do far more towards beautifying a woman than oranges. Nothing in the world bleaches the skin, hands, and face like a little diluted lemon juice applied at night, and, strange to say, unlike most bleaches, it softens the complexion. Then the finest of manicure acids is made by dropping a teaspoonful of lemon juice in a cup of tepid water. This removes all stains from nails and skin and loosens the cuticle naturally and much better than any sharp instrument. A dash of lemon juice (only a dash) in plain water is an excellent tooth wash, removing tartar and a teaspoonful of the juice in a small cup of black coffee will drive off a bad headache. Best of all, the juice of lemon taken with a teaspoonful of soda, cooking soda, after each meal, will reduce the fat of any flesh-ridden woman."

Patriotic Cozy Corner.

One might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion. A cozy corner is a fashionable, as well as a comfortable adjunct to every complete household. Why not combine fashion, comfort and the patriotism everybody is bubbling over with just now and have an American corner instead of a Turkish one? It certainly would be original, unique, different from any one else and a change, which is often a relief. The home maker can easily carry out in red, white and blue the cozy corner our picture represents. Bunting answers nicely for back, sides and canopy, the sides to be finished with a band of stars. The seat may be covered in red, rep, denim or burlap, but preferably the latter. Small brass buttons should be used for tufting instead of the regulation upholstery button. A shield, banyonet, sword, badges of the Grand Army and relief corps, or anything suggestive of the army or navy may be used to advantage. Framed copies of the Declaration of Independence, the Emancipation Proclamation, or photographs of our war heroes would add to the general effect.

THE COZY CORNER.

A great deal of ingenuity can be employed in the decoration of the cushions. Any material will do; blue and red denim are favorites and the different flags of the navy, the shield, the Union Jack, or the Standard will do to embroider on them.

If this is too much trouble the shops are full of cushions and cushions that can be bought ready made just now.

A down cushion covered with a flag would be effective and characteristic.

Brown Bread Souffle.

Beat up the yolks of five eggs and gradually add them to an ounce of butter previously rubbed to a cream. When the butter and eggs are thoroughly mixed add to them three-quarters of an ounce of sugar, two ounces of grated brown bread crumbs, a few powdered cloves, half an ounce of picked currants, a spoon of grated lemon peel and the stiffly whipped whites of the eggs already broken, the latter ingredient to be added after the others, and to be stirred in lightly. Turn the mixture into a buttered pie dish and bake about one-half or three-quarters of an hour.

Sponge Cake.

One tumbler powdered sugar, heaped; one tumbler flour, level; four eggs, five teaspoonfuls of cold water, one teaspoonful baking powder, heaped. Take yolks of eggs, sugar, a pinch of salt and the baking powder and water and beat all together until very light and creamy. Then beat the whites stiff and put in alternately with the flour.

Scotch Woodcock.

First toast and butter some bread on both sides and spread on this some chopped anchovies. Beat up the yolks of four eggs with half a pint of cream, and thicken this for a few moments in your chafing dish without letting it come to a boil. Arrange the small pieces of toast into a little pyramid and pour the egg over it.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

A SEVENTY-FIRST HERO.

ABRAM ALBERTSON RETURNS ONCE MORE TO DOMESTIC LIFE.

Non-Commissioned Officer in Company F, Was in the Terrific Onslaught at San Juan Hill—Bullets Whizzed Close by.

A hero from the Seventy-first Regt., New York Volunteers, made his appearance in this city Monday in the person of Abram Albertson, a nephew of C. C. Cokefair, of Crescent avenue. Mr. Albertson is non-commissioned officer in Captain Rafferty's famous Company F, the members of which will always be remembered in connection with the battle of San Juan Hill.

Young Albertson is an athletic young college man and is one of the sons of Mrs. Cokefair's brother, whose home is in Bangor, Pa. He has a sixty-days' furlough, and after a brief visit with Mr. and Mrs. Cokefair will go to his home and spend the remainder in rest and quiet.

He had two narrow escapes in the charge up the hill. A bullet went through the leg of his trousers, just missing the flesh, and while lying down behind a barbed wire fence in front of a post a Mauser bullet nipped off a twig just in front of his face, glanced and shot off in another direction, missing Mr. Albertson entirely.

Mr. Albertson has made his home with his uncle and aunt for some years, and is looked upon as a member of the family. When he arrived he wore his full regimentals and attracted quite a little attention.

SOMERSET COUNTY FAIR.

Attractions That Have Been Arranged—A Politicians' Day.

It will be one of the old-fashioned kind, and that is the kind that takes in this community. The time is September 13th, 14th and 15th—just two weeks off.

The first day will be devoted solely to entering and arranging the exhibits. The second day the school children of the county will all be admitted free, and the third day is designated as politicians' day. It must not be taken for granted that these human exhibits will be the only attractions, as they will cut a very little figure in the programme. Assurances are already received that the exhibits in the ladies' and farmers' departments will outstrip anything seen on the grounds in years.

The races are filling beyond the fondest expectations of the management, and who doesn't like to see a good horse race?

The admission prices are graded to meet the present state of prosperity—25 cents each for adults and carriages, and 15 cents for children.

If you can't come all three days, come one or two and bring all the family with you. You are the only ones who will make anything out of the exhibition, as the stockholders never expect to do better than break even. But you and others will get those $5,000 offered in premiums.

A GIRL'S THRILLING TALE.

Bella VanNess Says a Bad Man Accosted Her on a Dark Street.

Miss Bella VanNess, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George VanNess, of Monroe avenue, tells of an attempt to hold her up on Elmwood place Monday. The girl had been down town, and was returning home just after dark. She noticed a strange man, whom she describes as being tall and with a black moustache, following her, but just before she reached Elmwood place he passed her.

When in a dark part of the street, she says the man jumped out from behind a tree at her and with the words, "Now I've got you," tried to seize her. The girl turned and ran back towards town, and fortunately the first person she met was her uncle, David VanBuskirk, of Evona, who took her home.

BOARDED THE COLON.

Boatswain of Oregon Visited His Uncle in Plainfield Monday.

Fresh from the scenes of conflict, John F. Costello, boatswain of the famous battleship "Oregon," was the guest of his uncle, Patrick Casey, of West Front street, Monday. While his ship was in dry dock, Boatswain Costello obtained a short leave of absence and ran over to Plainfield Monday where he was made the honored guests.

Of course, he had innumerable yarns to spin about his experience on the great war-ship. He was a member of the crew that boarded the Spanish cruiser "Christopher Colon" after her partial destruction by the battleship from the American ships. He had many souvenirs of the battles with Cervera's fleet.

A Successful Evangelist.

A paper in Walhalla, S.C., where Rev. Arthur Crane has been conducting a series of revival meetings, has the following to say of his methods:

Mr. Crane has gained the confidence and esteem of all Christian people during his stay. He is a cultivated Christian gentleman, with none of the mannerisms of many professional evangelists. Not a word of slang or vulgarity that might offend the most delicate does he use. Everything has been done in a calm and dignified way and there could be no reaction, for there was no high-pressure methods.

PLAYING ON THE CARS HE WAS GULLIOTINED.

A Terrible Fate of a Seven-Year-Old Boy Nonday Night.

HIS HEAD WAS CUT OFF.

TRIED TO JUMP FROM ONE TRAIN TO ANOTHER.

Joseph Greer, Motherless, Met His Death While Enjoying His Favorite Pastime—Freight Car Gave a Lurch and He Was Thrown to the Ground and His Body Horribly Mangled by the Cars.

A terrible accident happened to Joseph Greer, the eleven-year-old son of Alexander Greer, of 599 South Second street, Monday afternoon about 5 o'clock, by which he lost his life. In jumping from the top of a box car into a moving coal car he was thrown to the track and ground beneath the wheels, being killed instantly. The remains were taken to the freight-house and left there until viewed by County Physician F. W. Westcott, of Fanwood, who gave a permit for removal.

Young Greer is a motherless boy, and lives with his father and several brothers in that portion of the city in which he met death. The father is a shoemaker by trade, but lately has had nothing to do. Last week he secured a position as laborer in the Central Railroad yards at Jersey City and went to work yesterday for the first time, leaving his children to take care of themselves.

Young Joseph, together with other boys of his own age, has been in the habit of playing around the cars on the railroad. Monday afternoon a freight train was pulling slowly along back of Potter's Press Works to take a siding. Young Joseph climbed up on one of the freight cars and took a position on the roof. It was great fun, was this free ride, and the lad walked back and forth on the roof of the car in great glee.

In a few moments another engine came puffing up alongside of the freight train, and behind the engine was a long train of coal cars. Both trains were going slowly, and suddenly Joseph conceived the idea of jumping from his elevated perch on top of the box car into one of the gondolas below.

He walked as near to the edge of the car as possible. Both trains were moving in the same direction, and still going slowly. While Joseph was poising for the leap, the car on which he was standing entered the siding. The lurch occasioned by its turning into the switch jostled Joseph, and he pitched headlong to the ground and rolled directly under the wheels of the car on which he had been standing.

No one saw the fall, and the entire train passed over the body. A trainman on one of the rear cars noticed the corpse as he came up to it, and began frantically to wave his hands and arms as a signal to the engineer to stop.

When the train had come to a standstill the remains were lifted up. A stretcher was secured and on that the remains were conveyed to the freighthouse at the other end of the city. It was found that the head was completely severed from the body and that one arm was cut off. Death must have been instantaneous.

The news spread rapidly, and soon Joseph's older brother was on the scene. A telegram was sent to the father in Jersey City, and Chief of Police Grant notified.

Alexander Joseph's fifteen-year-old brother felt very bad over the accident. He thought a great deal of his brother, and the two were inseperable. When the news was spread, Alex was one of the first to hear it and ran up to the spot crying and sobbing as if his heart would break. A report was spread Monday morning that Alex had committed suicide by hanging himself with a rope, but a reporter saw the lad, who seemed to be very much alive. The neighbors also denied any knowledge of an attempt at suicide, but some of them say that the boy is of such a nervous disposition that an action like that on his part would not surprise them.

The Grocers' Excursion.

Boynton Beach is too well known to the public of Plainfield to need any introduction. Every summer sees many of them there for the day on various excursions. The trouble has always been how to reach there. Now the Grocers' Association will make it the easiest thing in the world Labor Day to enjoy the day at the beach. A special train will start from here that morning and convey at a very reasonable rate, fifty cents, all who care to go.

Building Miles of Roadway.

Several miles of macadamized road are being built through Somerset county. One stretch reaches from Somerville to Harlingen, about twelve miles. The contractors are putting in eight inches of large stone and covering it with eight inches of crushed stone. The width of the road is twelve feet.

ASSESSMENTS APPROVED

COMMON COUNCIL PASS ON THE WORK OF THE ASSESSORS.

After an Hour and a Half of Conference, During Which Several Changes Were Made, Voted to Endorse Valuations.

The adjourned meeting of the Council Monday was rather a long one, although the actual public session did not consume more than forty-five minutes, thirty of which were devoted to the reading of the minutes of three preceding meetings. The purpose of the meeting was to go over and pass upon the assessors' books, which was done after the Council had taken a recess in which to inspect them.

The meeting came to order at 8:10 o'clock, with President Baker in the chair. All answered to the roll-call except Councilman Andrews and Newman. Clerk MacMurray being absent, George B. Wean, the official stenographer, was made clerk pro tem.

Councilman Barrows moved that the order of business be suspended and that a recess of half an hour be taken in which to examine the books. The half hour lengthened into an hour and a half before the regular order was resumed, then Mr. Barrows moved that the books of the assessor be confirmed subject to such alterations as had been previously made. Mr. Hetfield objected to this motion, saying that the assessors had made the changes according to suggestions, so the wording was changed, and a motion that the books of the assessors be confirmed was passed, all voting aye.

The ordinance concerning dogs was moved to be adopted at its third reading, Mr. Hetfield alone voting no. Mr. Hetfield asked if this were not the proper time to bring up the trolley ordinance, but Mr. Barrows explained that they could not pass to its third reading an ordinance passed to its second at an adjourned meeting, so the matter was dropped. Council then adjourned.

All the assessors, H. C. Runyon, Charles H. Hand, J. A. Hubbard and H. C. VanEmburgh, were present, and all except Mr. Hand were closeted with the councilmen during the recess. It is said that several changes were made at the suggestion of different members. The books have been in the hands of the Council for the past two weeks, and are now open to the public.

FUNERAL OF MISS LOOMIS.

Services Were Held at the House and at the Grave.

The funeral of the late Miss Florence Loomis was held from her mother's present home on Craig place. The simple funeral service was conducted by Rev. William C. O'Donnell. The floral tributes were unusually beautiful and were numerous. The pall-bearers were Charles Dupee, Henry B. Wells, William Knight, Raymond A. McGee, Arthur Peck and Orville T. Waring.

The interment was in Hillside Cemetery where services were conducted by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell and Rev. H. K. Carroll.

Extending the Storm Sewer.

Street Commissioner Gavett has his men at work on the storm sewer leading from the corner of Front and Washington streets and is extending it to the brook. The sewer formerly terminated in a brick arch in the race under the Watchung avenue bridge, but the race has been filled up and the two sides of the arch form a cesspool. The new extension is being made of twelve-inch pipes.

Work at the Hospital.

There was little done Monday at the monthly meeting of the board of governors of Muhlenberg Hospital aside from receiving the report of Dr. M. B. Long, the medical director for the month. The report showed the total number of patients admitted to be 23; discharged, cured, 19; discharged, improved, 5; died, 3; total treated, 42. In the dispensary there were 52 cases and 134 visits reported.

At the Old Sellable.

Newburgh, N. Y., has loaned Plainfield one of her rising young men in the person of William J. Barrett, who has accepted a position with T. B. Armstrong, the druggist, as one of his prescription clerks. He graduated from the New York College of Pharmacy last winter, and is licensed as a pharmacist in both the States of New York and New Jersey.
